The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If I could flatter myself that I could get the attention of the Senate, I should say a few words in the way of general statement as to what the bill contains before it is read. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill. That will facilitate matters.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be done if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will state, in a general way, what the bill is in its amount. This bill, as reported to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Appropriations of that branch, appropriated $20,031,712.99. As it passed the House of Representatives, it appropriated $18,422,442.99. As recommended by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, the amount is $18,791,954.99; which is a net increase of $369,512 over the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. This increase is attributable chiefly to the wants of the service in the assay offices and in the Departments of the Government here at Washington.

I will state further that the bill, as compared with the same bill last year, is a reduction from last year of $1,966,300.

To these general statements I will add simply that the bill is brief, and free in all respects from any matter of legislation not precisely germane to the bill. With these general statements, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill, and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on in their order as the reading of the bill proceeds.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in section 1, lines 22 and 23, in the appropriation for the salary of the "principal clerk, principal executive clerk, minute and journal clerk, and financial clerk, in the office of the Secretary of the Senate," to strike out "$2,592 each" and insert "$3,000 each."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman whether that is an increase of salary or only a rectification of amounts?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is an increase of salary, and there is a similar increase on the third page, in line 41, and there is a decrease of the corresponding officers of the House of Representatives on the eighth page. These clerkships in the two branches correspond to each other in their duties. The clerks in the House of Representatives, it will be seen, stand some five or six hundred dollars a year higher than those of the Senate. That was an increase made last year against the vote of the Senate and against the recommendation of its committee. The increase in these salaries on our side is in order to adjust that inequality between these offices. That is the purpose of it, and to get the control of the question and have some consideration of that subject of the equalization of the salaries of the clerks of the two branches.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question, whether the action of the committee does not reduce the pay of the clerks of the House and raise the clerks of the Senate?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have just stated that. My honorable friend was not giving attention, I think.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I was giving attention, but could not hear the Senator.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I stated that fact, and that the object of this was to correct that inequality between the officers in the two branches whose duties are corresponding. The House increased their's last year, I may say against the protest of this side, but it having been increased, it is not fair that the inequality should exist. In one way or the other it should be corrected, either by the reduction of the salaries on the other side or an increase of the salaries on our own. The only way that occurred to the committee to get at that question was in this mode.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 40 and 41, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the assistant postmaster and mail-carrier of the Senate from $1,728 to $2,088 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 60 to insert "clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, $2,220," among the officers, &c., receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 71, to strike out "one" and insert "to pay Kate Dodson," so as to make the clause read:

> And to pay Kate Dodson, female attendant in charge of ladies' retiring-room, $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after the word "month," in line 74, the words "during the session of Congress," so as to read:

> Telegraph operator, at the rate of $100 per month, during the session of Congress, $700.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to present to the Senate the question raised by this amendment. It is in harmony with the law as it now stands, by which the so-called "departmental telegraph" was established, and therefore the committee felt constrained to make the appropriation accordingly. The statement about it is that it is not quite fair to the young gentlemen who are employed here during the session, the business necessarily involving more or less skill, to put them on a salary of $100 a month, and at the end of the session make them look for such other employment as they can get. I submit the question to the Senate whether they will insert these words. If it be not done, they will be paid $1,200 salary for the year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish now to ask the Senator from Maine, that amendment being rejected, if it effects the purpose of giving the young gentleman who is the operator here $100 a month?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is my understanding that it will be so.

Mr. CONKLING. Without any further amendment?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 76 and 77, to increase the total appropriation for the compensation, &c., of officers and others receiving annual pay in the service of the Senate from $139,836.80 to $144,048.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 82, to increase the appropriation "for stationery and newspapers, (including $5,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, and $100 for postage-stamps for the Secretary of the Senate,") from $14,250 to $14,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out after the word "dollars," in line 84, the words—

And hereafter clerks of committees of either branch of Congress (except those whose salaries are fixed by specific appropriations) shall be paid not more than five dollars per day, and during the session only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 117, to insert after the word "that" the word hereafter; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That hereafter, whenever a member of the Capitol police or watch force is suspended from duty for cause, said policeman or watchman shall receive no compensation for the time of such suspension if he shall not be reinstated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 135 and 136, to strike out the words, "while such positions are held by the present incumbents, and no longer;" in line 36 to strike out the words "six hundred;" in line 138 to strike out the words "three thousand" and to insert the words "two thousand five hundred and ninety-two;" so as to make the clause read:

Chief clerk and journal clerk of the House, $3,000 each; two reading clerks, assistant journal clerk, and tally clerk, $2,592 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 178 and 180, to reduce the appropriation for salary of the first assistant postmaster of the House from $2,088 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 186, to reduce the appropriation for the salary of two stenographers for committees of the House from $5,000 to $4,200 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the phraseology in line 196, "One telegraph operator, at $100 per month during the sessions of Congress."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to strike out the words "during the sessions of Congress." That refers to the telegraph operator on the House side.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 205 and 206, to reduce the total appropriation for the compensation of officers and others receiving annual compensation in the service of the House of Representatives from $229,190.70 to $224,470.70.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 302, to strike out the word "five" and to insert "four," and in line 303 to strike out the words "three thousand six hundred" and insert "two thousand eight hundred and eighty," so as to make the item read:

For four watchmen in reservation numbered two, (being the Smithsonian grounds,) $2,880.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is known to all Senators that the grounds around the Smithsonian Institution are spacious, very large. It is known also that those grounds are visited at all hours of the day and at all hours of the night by a great many persons; and it is within my own knowledge in the past few years that watchmen have had severe duties to perform within those grounds. I inquire of my colleague what is the information upon which the committee have reduced the number of watchmen there? My judgment is that the reduction had better be made somewhere else than there where they are really and absolutely needed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That all may be, but the committee contemplate an amendment in regard to the police force of the District, which we think will relieve a great deal of this kind of duty Congress pays two-thirds of the expenses of the Metropolitan police of this District, and in addition to that we police our own grounds. There is no reason in the world why the duty of policing these public grounds should not be devolved upon the Metropolitan police. We propose to devolve upon the Metropolitan police the whole police duties in regard to the public grounds. We think that will relieve the matter very much.

Mr. HAMLIN. Let me ask my colleague if the additional duties to be done by that police in the public grounds will be fully equivalent to the one watchman here dismissed?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very much more.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I am satisfied.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We hope in the end to relieve ourselves of all this special service. There is no reason why there should be any special policemen anywhere on the public grounds.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am satisfied.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 368, to strike out for "repairs, $4,000" in the item for "contingent expenses of the Department of State;" and in line 372 to reduce the total appropriation for that item from $21,570 to $17,570.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in line 543, to reduce the appropriation for the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from $6,000 to $5,000.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to ask of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what reason there is for reducing this salary, which has stood at these figures since the creation of the office in 1866, I believe; and especially what reason there is for the concluding clause, which I will mention as connected with this, which not only reduces the salary for the next fiscal year, but also for the remainder of the present fiscal year, for which appropriation has already been made?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It does not affect that.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes—"that hereafter the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be $5,000, and no more." I should be glad to hear any explanation there may be on the subject, and whether this reduction has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SARGENT. The chairman of the committee has handed to me a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to this matter; and I will state to the Senate that the committee, in passing over this bill, without any idea of being personal to any particular officer or hurting anybody's feelings, ascertained from this and the statute-books that the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is $6,000—$1,000 more than that of the First and Second Comptrollers, whose duties are enormous in their responsibility and magnitude; and they thought, on general public considerations, that this salary might be reduced to $5,000 and he be put on a level with these officers, who are the highest in pay in the Treasury Department, except the Treasurer of the United States, who has the responsibility of so many millions in coin and paper, and that no injustice would be done to any one by it. The committee were aware that during the early years of the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, when the amount of our collections ran to half of a thousand million dollars per annum, when the system was new, when the objects of taxation were very various, when but a very small proportion of the whole amount was collected by stamps, when decisions were required to be hourly made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which required careful study, a sense of great responsibility, and the most thorough impartiality, to save the Treasury, and not to infringe the rights of individual tax-payers, a salary of $6,000, or even $8,000, could have been afforded by the Government to secure the very highest talent. But that time has passed by in the opinion of the committee. Now the duties of this office are more in the way of routine. We have taken off large branches of internal revenue; we have simplified others; we collect nearly everything by stamps. I might say practically everything is now collected by stamps. The principles of the application of the revenue law are understood. There are no longer those immense throngs in the ante-chamber of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue anxious for the decision of their tax appeals or for information in the law. Where we ourselves were formerly in the habit of receiving ten or a dozen letters a day directing our attention to the construction of the internal-revenue laws and were compelled to consult the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, we now do not receive that number in three months. In fact, the office, on account of the simplification of it and the removal of duties, has come down so that it would be doing it more than justice to say that it is equal in its responsibilities to that of the First or Second Comptroller. The committee so thinking, not having any idea of exciting anybody's wrath or of provoking personal letters to members of the Senate, complaining that this was intended as a strike at a single official, without perhaps estimating sufficiently the great difficulty of getting anything like economy where a salary is concerned, where a salary has been fixed heretofore by any statute, without weighing these difficulties, did suggest in the modest form in which it appears in this bill that the salary be fixed hereafter at $5,000. I do not think the criticism of the proviso applies because an appropriation bill takes effect from the beginning of the fiscal year, and legislative provisions follow the same rule unless there is an express direction that it shall be otherwise. But in order that there might be no question in reference to that, when the attention of the committee was called to the subject this morning, I was authorized to modify the succeeding amendment, in case this was adopted, by providing that from and after the 1st day of July, 1875, the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be $5,000. I make that statement in order to relieve the present amendment of the difficulty which might be supposed to arise from that view.

I have said that it is very difficult to reduce a salary when it has once been put at a high figure, no matter though the duties of the office may become merely nominal; but I do not mean to assume that the duties of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue are merely nominal. I know that they are very important and very well discharged indeed by the present officer, but we cannot get much support outside of this Chamber, and perhaps we shall soon ascertain whether we get any in this Chamber, to a proposition to cut down salaries. I desire that the Clerk may read the letter which has been sent by the Secretary of the Treasury referring to this $6,000 salary and objecting to its being reduced further. The Secretary of the Treasury undoubtedly conscientiously thinks this salary is not too large, and I do not know that it is except in comparison with others.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
January 16, 1875.

SIR: On page 23 of House bill 3818 I observe an amendment introduced by your committee, reducing the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue from $6,000 to $5,000.

While I am disposed to favor every measure of economy practicable and consistent with the public interest, I do not perceive that there is any reason why the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should be now reduced. The duties and responsibilities of that office are very great, and I am unable to see that they are likely to be less so. It may be that the salaries of other officers of this Department by comparison with this appear to be too low; but it seems to me that this is no reason for reduction of the Commissioner's salary.

I have the honor to be,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. LOT M. MORRILL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, if I understand correctly the nature of the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue, it is one of great responsibility and requires for its successful discharge great industry and sound judgment. This officer has charge of the collection of something over one hundred millions of our revenue, and difficult questions are constantly arising before him. It seems to me that for the discharge of this responsible duty, so intimately connected with the successful management of the Government and the supply of revenue for carrying it on, the salary now fixed by law, $6,000, is not too large; and while I shall generally concur with the committee in their amendments, I must beg leave to dissent from this. I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BAYARD. I am surprised that the amendment should be proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, although the only reasons that can be alleged for it have been, I think, urged by the Senator from California. The comparative business of this office with the amount of ability required and the responsibility devolved on the proper administration of this office, requires, in my opinion, that it should be coupled with a fair compensation. The present compensation of this officer I consider too low. If my views were to be considered in this matter, it would be increased instead of being diminished. I am glad to bear my testimony to that which it probably is not necessary that I should speak of, the ability and the high character which have been brought to the performance of the duties of this most responsible office by the present incumbent. This is the very pivot upon which our whole excise depends. The success of the excise system of the United States depends almost entirely upon the capacity for administration of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. If an incompetent or an unfaithful or any indiscreet officer were at the head of that Bureau, the loss to the Treasury would be incalculable.

It is perfectly true that there was a period in the history of the laws of this country when there were more multifarious and more complicated duties devolved upon the officer than now. It is also true that the place was very ably filled; but we all know of one very distinguished incumbent, Mr. William Orton, that he was absolutely unable to apply such abilities as his to the public service, receiving such pay as the office then gave, although it was a sum higher than it is at present. That we lost such services as Mr. Orton's, for which the Government of the United States paid him perhaps five or six thousand dollars and for which a private corporation is very glad to pay him six times six thousand dollars, is an illustration merely that the Government cannot expect to have the highest grade of individual services for less money than can be obtained for them in private life.

I merely make this contribution of information from my side of the Chamber, from my point of view, in speaking of this question, to the hope that the amendment of the committee may not be concurred in, but that if any change is to be made there will be an addition to the salary of this officer, and not a diminution.

Mr. SCOTT. While we all desire cordially to co-operate with the Committee on Appropriations in making all proper reductions in the public expenditures, I think we can hardly concur in the propriety of making the reduction in this particular instance. It is to be borne in mind that while the character of the business in the Internal Revenue Office is very much changed, as stated by the Senator from California, there has also been another change in the character of the business of that office. It is not very long since the office of assessor was abolished, and the duties of the former assessors devolved entirely upon the collectors. The consequence of that change has been that nearly all the appeals, indeed I think all the appeals which were formerly made by persons assessed to the assessors, come directly to the Department and have to be acted upon by the head of the Bureau; so that in that respect the change of the law made a year or two ago has very much increased his duties.

There is one other thing to which I wish to call attention. The Senator from California states what I have no doubt will be borne out by all who are familiar with this office, that its duties are well discharged. The present officer entered the revenue service originally as a collector and came from that service to the office of deputy commissioner of internal revenue, and has for some years discharged the duties of head of the Bureau; and if there were no other feature about his service, his experience and his knowledge both of the laws involved and of the duties of subordinate officers would of itself justify us in continuing the salary at the amount originally fixed by the law, for we have all recognized the propriety of giving to officers of long experience, of fidelity, and of success in the discharge of their duties, a larger salary than would be given to those who are unfamiliar with those duties.

I made the inquiry, not supposing that there had been any feeling elicited in any place. I was not aware until the Senator from California spoke of somebody's wrath being excited that there was anything else in this matter than an inquiry as to what was true public policy. I was not aware that any letters had been written to anybody, but was informed of the letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know whether the Senator from California intended to convey the idea that anybody was angry. Certainly I was not. In making the inquiry, I wished to get at the facts, and made a proper appeal to the chairman as to what induced the committee to reduce the salary. I think the considerations already stated are such as to render this at least bad economy, and I hope the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. HAMLIN. I concur in the closing remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I think there has already been enough said on this matter to justify us in coming to the conclusion which he indicated; but yet I want to trouble the Senate a moment. So far as my knowledge of the present incumbent is concerned, I think him an able and efficient officer; but irrespective of that entirely, with no regard whatever to the incumbent, I hold that the ability requisite for the place, the responsibilities and the duties imposed, demand a man in that position whose services are worth to the country all the compensation the law now gives. That is my judgment, and I think if you will measure that compensation by that of all the other Departments you will find that he is now in the receipt of a less sum than any other one. True, the Comptrollers, who are very responsible officers, who have very responsible duties to perform, and who I believe give very great satisfaction to the country by the manner in which those duties are discharged, are yet in positions vastly less responsible than those of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. So important is this office, that it is familiar to us all that on several occasions the matter has been agitated, if not seriously considered, whether its importance did not demand that it should be created into a separate Department and made one of the Departments of Government, with a Cabinet minister attached to it. I confess, when I look at the other Departments and the responsibility which attaches to them and look at this, I think I can see as great a propriety in making it a separate Department, with a Secretary as its head, as there is for some of the Departments which now exist, and I am quite sure that we have in existence to-day no Department that any Senator would say could be dispensed with. Although the number of millions of dollars that go through the Treasury is very large, I think the responsibility and the duties incumbent upon that officer are of that complex character which require as much integrity, as much experience, as the Treasurer, and, tried by any rule, while I say the millions that go through the Treasury are large, taking all the responsibility of the two cases, I can see no reason in the world why the compensation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should not to-day be equal to that of the Treasurer. Still I think the Treasurer is entitled to what he receives. Looking at it candidly I think this amendment ought not, and as I trust will not, prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. I only want to say one word in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania. I believe I did say that the committee did not intend to excite anybody's wrath. Quite a number of letters had been called to the attention of the committee, written by the Commissioner, wherein it was charged that the reduction was intended as a personal affront to him, or that it had that effect. I was merely repelling that idea, and saying that we had no such intention. It might be a personal inconvenience to him, as to any other man, to get a less salary, but it was not intended as a personal affront. I presume the Committee on Appropriations need not say even this of its motives. Perhaps the word "wrath" might better have been "indignation." So far as the committee are concerned about this,

I think we pretty much gave up the proposition when we received the adverse letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on the matter. I do not care to prolong the debate at all. The question is with the Senate; and if it is not thought desirable to economize in this direction, we must try and see if we cannot economize in some other, and I hope we shall have better luck.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is very rarely that I oppose any proposition for the reduction of expenditures on the part of this body, but this seems to me a case of a very small reduction in the bill of $1,000. It strikes me as being aimed at an individual alone. No one has said that this gentleman who is performing the duties of his office is not competent; is not a man of integrity; that he does not understand the duties of his office. I believe if he were to be taken away from the office to-morrow, it would be almost impossible to supply a man of equal ability at the salary that we now pay. As was said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the duties of the office have increased within the last year or two, in consequence of the abolition of the office of assessor throughout the country. It does appear to me that we can hardly afford to put the salary of a man who receives at least one-third of all the revenues of the country at a less rate than he has heretofore had. If the proposition was to reduce all salaries, then it might have my support; but I do not conceive that in this particular the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue stands above other salaries. I therefore shall be compelled to vote against this amendment.

Mr. FLANAGAN. It seems to me that the Commissioner ought to be very much gratified that this amendment was proposed, for it has simply caused a high compliment to be paid him by the Senate. Every Senator who has testified in the case speaks in the very highest terms as to his qualifications and everything of the kind. There could be only one idea advanced beyond, which my distinguished friend from California omitted in the first instance, and it is rarely that anything escapes him. He might have said, I suppose, that at the time this $6,000 salary was recommended and enacted the nation was rich, and it being now poor, it ought to be reduced. That idea would not do very well for me. I hope we are progressing and that we are becoming better able to pay the $6,000 now than we were when we originally agreed to pay it. I think from all the evidence and everything I have seen in my interviews and business with this gentleman that he ought to be continued at this salary beyond a question.

Mr. BOGY. I hope to see the day when this Bureau will be abolished entirely, and if not, that it will be made into a Department, with a Cabinet officer at its head. The internal revenue now amounts to upward of $100,000,000 a year. Nine-tenths of that revenue is derived from taxes imposed upon western and southern products. About seven-tenths are derived from the West and I presume about two-tenths from the South. This revenue is obtained from three articles that are made; that is, from alcohol, malt liquors, and tobacco, and the three amount to about $100,000,000. I therefore hope that the day is not far distant when this Bureau will cease to exist, or if it shall continue to exist, that it shall be raised to the dignity of a Department, with one of the Cabinet officers at its head, when revenue which is now partial and collected in a manner which is very detrimental to the West and the South will become more general. I want one or the other. At this time our great States of the West are borne down by this enormous taxation, and we feel it very sensibly. However, this is not a proper occasion to discuss that subject. I would say, however, that under the present circumstances I am opposed to the reduction of the salary of the present officer. As the revenue is derived largely from products raised in the West, I have had occasion to transact much business with that Bureau, and I can say that the gentleman who occupies the office now is an efficient, attentive, and I think a remarkably competent man for the position. I would therefore oppose any reduction of his salary, and I hope at the same time that the day may come when the Bureau will be entirely abolished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was in line 552, to reduce the total appropriation for salaries in the Internal Revenue Bureau from $336,340 to $335,340.

Mr. SARGENT. On behalf of the committee I withdraw that amendment. It is superseded by the refusal of the Senate to adopt the amendment in line 543.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

The next amendment was in line 553, after the word "dollars" to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be $5,000 and no more.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let the Senate non-concur in that amendment. As the amendment in line 543 has been disagreed to, the proviso should be stricken out.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in lines 556 and 557, to increase the appropriation for dies, paper, and stamps for the internal-revenue service from $450,000 to $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 574—

That there shall be established in and attached to the Department of the Treasury a Bureau, to be denominated the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics; and the President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a chief of the said Bureau, who shall be styled Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics, and whose duty it shall be to gather, collate, and annually report to Congress statistics and facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the railroad systems of this and other countries, the construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads, and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States, the charges imposed for such transportation of freights and passengers, and the tonnage transported; and the Commissioner of said Bureau shall be paid for his services at the rate of $3,500 per annum; and the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department is hereby transferred to, and made a part of, the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics created by this act; and all the duties now by law performed in the said Bureau of Statistics are hereby transferred to the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics, and made a part of the duties of the said Commissioner; and the officer now in charge of the Bureau of Statistics, together with the several clerks, messengers, and laborers employed in the said Bureau of Statistics, are hereby placed under the direction and supervision of the Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics; and the reports now by law required to be prepared and published monthly in the said Bureau of Statistics shall hereafter be prepared and published quarterly under the direction of the said Commissioner; and the accounts and returns in relation to tonnage, and to the registration, enrollment, and licensing of vessels, now required by law to be made by collectors and other officers of the customs to the Register of the Treasury, shall hereafter be made to the Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics; and all the duties now by law devolving upon the Register of the Treasury in relation to attesting marine documents and issuing the same to collectors and other officers of the customs, and to preparing annual statements of the tonnage of the United States, are hereby transferred to the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics, and made a part of the duties of the said Commissioner; and the several clerks and messengers now employed in the office of the Register of the Treasury upon the duties herein mentioned are hereby placed under the direction and supervision of the said Commissioner; and for the purpose of carrying this provision into effect there is hereby appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the following sums, namely:

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask that the question be first taken on so much of this proposed amendment as has now been read. Let it be separated at this point.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Before the question is taken I desire to have some explanation of this amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts intends to make a motion to strike it out.

Mr. CONKLING. The question is on putting it in, which is a stronger motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It appears to me that this is a very extraordinary proposition to be brought in on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As the honorable Senator wants information he should wait until he has an opportunity to hear it. I think he would be more enlightened and probably would not then have so much to say.

Mr. CONKLING. He may not want to be embarrassed by the facts.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I did not rise until the President of the Senate proposed to put the question. I thought it ought not to pass until there had been some explanation, and I only stated that I desired information.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont is following the usage of the Senate; the Senator from Maine is not.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the chairman of the committee will explain the increased cost of this new bureau, if there is any.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator will try to do so. There is not any increase. I do not think there is the slightest occasion for taking any alarm about there being anything new or extraordinary about this amendment. We have had for many years, since 1853, I think, a Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department; and that is this Bureau. The new feature, which is an addition to the Bureau of Statistics, with which we are all familiar, I hope, is that the officer at the head of the Bureau of Statistics, who originally was denominated director of the Bureau, is now to be called "Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics," and to the duties which devolve upon the head of the Bureau of Statistics is now added the collection of statistics of internal commerce, and to it are transferred all the duties which devolve upon the head of the Bureau of Statistics.

There is a further provision in regard to the transaction of business. It will be seen that it is provided that a class of duties which devolve upon the Register of the Treasury, such as registering the tonnage of the country, is transferred to this bureau and taken from the Register's Office. That is true also of certain work which has been done in the office of the Commissioner of Customs. The object is that this bureau shall be made more efficient and at the same time that other Bureaus shall be relieved from certain duties where in the experience of the Department they were found to be doing the same work two or three times over. That, I believe, is substantially the statement.

It is therefore not new legislation, but it is legislation upon the old basis, adding an additional duty in the way of gathering statistics upon another subject which is not now provided for, that I am aware of, by any provision of law, and adding an officer distinctively at the head of the Bureau. I believe, as the law now stands, the Bureau, which was created by the act of 1853, if I am right about the date, had, as I have already remarked, at its head a director. Some two or three years ago that head was dropped out, and since that time an officer of the Treasury has been appointed at the head of the Bureau to perform the duties. I suppose he has been detailed, some one of the clerks; I am not aware how that is, but that is substantially the substance of this provision. Retaining all there was of the old Bureau of Statistics, it has been arranged so as to add a new duty, and at the same time to take from other Departments or Bureaus the duties which belonged to them and devolve them upon this. I will say to my honorable friend from Kentucky that it does not enlarge the service, so far as expenses are concerned, in any particular except as to the salary of the Commissioner.

Mr. BAYARD. Am I to understand from my friend from Maine that this amendment does, then, create a new office?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Substantially; that is, there is now at the head of this Bureau an officer provided by the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BAYARD. There is an officer termed the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, and in his place we put an officer at the head of this Bureau, and denominate him "Commissioner of Statistics and Commerce," with a salary of $3,500, being $1,000 more than is now paid to the officer who now does that duty.

Mr. BAYARD. What becomes of the officer who is now the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. He is probably an officer of the Treasury, detailed for that duty, and probably will retain his original place in the Treasury; but I cannot speak as to that. My honorable friend from Massachusetts will probably be able to explain the practical working of the Department in that respect.

Mr. BOUTWELL. When I made the motion to divide the amendment, I was about to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he has any communication from the Secretary of the Treasury advising this change.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say precisely upon that point this: As this bill came from the House there was no provision of any kind made for the Bureau of Statistics. The House had inadvertently or otherwise—I am not able to say—made no appropriation for the Bureau of Statistics. My attention being called to that fact, the question was, ought that service to be left out. Upon inquiry of the Secretary of the Treasury he was of opinion that it ought to be provided for. The Committee on Appropriations therefore had no option; it was their duty to provide for it. It is a service provided for by law and it was not for us to judge whether that service was proper or not. I may say that the Secretary of the Treasury was also of the opinion that this Bureau of Statistics was not precisely the thing it ought to be; that it was in the respects to which I have adverted inefficient. There was no authorized head, no legally established head, except what was given it by detail. But the difficulty was that a great variety of the duties being performed in this Bureau were absolutely being done in other Bureaus of the Treasury Department and therefore duplicated in this. For instance, there was in the office of the Register of the Treasury all the tonnage of the country registered and then re-reported and registered again in this Bureau, and, as anybody can see, at very great expense. The same thing is true of all that information which comes from the custom-houses, collected there by clerks and then redigested in this Bureau of Statistics. Our attention was called particularly by the Secretary of the Treasury to this fact, and it was upon information from the Secretary of the Treasury that this provision was constructed.

The only question that occurs to me which is at all interesting to the Senate is this: Do you want to retain the Bureau of Statistics? Are you willing to add to it the duty of collecting the statistics of the internal commerce of the country for which no provision is now made by law? If you are, then I think you will see that this amendment may very likely meet your views upon that subject. It does add, as I have already stated, $1,000 to the present expenses, and that is the increase in the salary of the Commissioner, who is paid as the head of this Bureau $1,000 over that salary which is paid to the clerk who has performed this duty heretofore.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hardly perceive whether this new amendment is for the purpose of getting rid of the present chief officer of statistics or not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say to my honorable friend, by no means at all. I do not know who the officer is. He is not in it, for my understanding of it is he is only a clerk detailed for that purpose. It will not interfere with him at all if this amendment passes.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then, if it is not for the purpose of getting rid of him, does the Senator suppose that he would discharge his duties any better by increasing his salary?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir, probably not; but my honorable friend will see that this amendment proposes additional duties.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I perceive that very plainly, and I am very certain that if this amendment shall pass, if the expenditures of the Government are not increased by it this year they will be increased next year. This Bureau, with all the duties devolved upon it by the present amendment, cannot be run for the amount that it is here proposed to appropriate; and within five years it will cost at least $260,000, if not $300,000, for the support of this Bureau of Commerce and Statistics.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say to my honorable friend on that point that I am inclined to think the tendency will be to increase the expenditures.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. All I can say about that is the present basis does not authorize any increased expenditures beyond what I have said.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The whole design of the amendment seems to me to be to snatch business from some of the other Bureaus of the Treasury Department in order to create a new one, and I think it would be very improperly snatched from the Register of the Treasury. There the records are and have been since the foundation of the Government. Why shall they not remain there? Why shall we have two offices to which to go and hunt up the records in relation to tonnage?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me on that very point to make one single suggestion. Take the question of statistics relating to the tonnage of the country, and it will be found that the returns made by the Register of the Treasury give you one amount; then take the estimate made by the present Bureau of Statistics, and the amounts differ between three and four hundred thousand tons. Now, certainly somebody is at fault.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator from Maine, who undoubtedly has given this subject more attention than I have, asserts that the officer at the head of the Statistical Bureau has to copy the returns from the officers of customs and from the Register. Can there be any returns in relation to statistics that will not have to be copied from some place or other? Of course it is a mere question of copying, and as to the correctness of one or the other, I do not understand that this Bureau of Statistics will have any more power to correct returns than the Register of the Treasury.

But this amendment goes very far into other subjects. We are to have statistics and facts in relation to foreign nations, in relation to the railroad systems of this and other countries; we are to have all the facts in relation to the actual cost, and construction, and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads, and on canals, and on rivers and other navigable waters. That is all very well; but how can it be done unless we have a sufficient force to perform the service? Clearly, if we pass this amendment, we may impose a necessity on the Government to establish a bureau with sufficient force to gather all these facts. Perhaps they will send one or two clerks abroad every year. I do not know how it is to be obtained otherwise, unless it is to be obtained from the returns and documents sent to the Secretary of State; and if so, those can be copied as well under the present system as under this new one proposed to be adopted. As a whole I am opposed to establishing the nuclei of new bureaus and departments, which are very sure to grow largely and rapidly, and increase the expenditures of the country without any apparent limit.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I have devoted some attention to this subject, and I believe, if Senators will give it their attention for a few moments, the objections which are imagined to exist to the amendment will vanish.

It is thought that it is the establishment of a new bureau. I want to say that there is no new bureau established. We have to-day a Bureau of Statistics. We propose that there shall simply be a reorganization of that Bureau, giving to it some additional duty—so that there is no new office established.

It is suggested that the expense is very largely increased by this amendment. I will say to the Senate that the appropriation proposed is only $1,000 larger than the sum we have appropriated for several years, and that appropriation is made to pay a respectable salary to the head of the Bureau.

It is suggested again that it is for the purpose of getting rid of one of our present officers. Probably I have had as much to do with this amendment as any member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I have no such intention or desire. I believe I can safely say that it did not enter into the view of the committee at all in making this recommendation.

I want to say, in addition, that this suggestion is not one introduced by the Committee on Appropriations without consideration, nor is it based upon their judgment alone. The select committee appointed by the Senate nearly two years ago, of which I had the honor to be chairman, in investigating the transportation question, felt at every point the great necessity of some means of obtaining information with reference to our internal commerce, to the great movements of commerce in this country; and that committee, after giving the subject full consideration—I cannot state whether the full committee was present, but I know more than a quorum was—unanimously recommended the adoption of a measure like this for the purpose of obtaining this additional information.

The House of Representatives in acting upon the bill, as the chairman of the committee has stated, dropped out of the appropriations entirely those relating to the Statistical Bureau. Without those appropriations, Congress and the Secretary and the country can know nothing whatever of our foreign commerce. Then if this amendment, or at least a portion of this amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, be not adopted, we shall place ourselves in the position of utterly ignoring, not only the internal commerce of the country but also the foreign commerce, of ignoring all those facts drawn from our commercial experience on which we base our legislation with reference to tariffs and very many other important questions, because if there be no Statistical Bureau to present them there is no way by which the facts relating to foreign commerce will be presented to the country or by which Congress can have their benefit in acting upon matters of legislation.

The Committee on Appropriations deemed it wise at least to have these facts and statistics relating to foreign commerce; but in addition to them, after a careful consideration of the subject they deemed it to be important also that in a country whose internal commerce is probably fifty times greater than its entire foreign commerce, some little attention at least should be given to preparing statistics upon it; and we have therefore imposed this additional duty and changed the name of the Bureau; and that is all there is in the amendment, with the exception of an additional $1,000 as compensation to the officer who has these additional and more important duties devolved upon him.

Now, Mr. President, a few words as to how we expect to be able to discharge these additional duties without a larger appropriation than we had last year. I want to call your attention to one peculiarity in our collection of statistics. We have now with reference to one branch of these statistics, the tonnage division, two distinct tonnage divisions in full operation in the Treasury Department, one in the office of the Register of the Treasury, and the other in the Statistical Bureau of the Treasury. Each of these divisions requires distinct and different reports from the custom-houses of the country, and each of them employs its own clerks and each makes its reports, and the Secretary of the Treasury in communicating to Congress and the country the tonnage of this country sends in both the reports from the Register's Office and from the Statistical Bureau; and, as was said by my honorable friend from Maine, they differ very widely. I will give you an example of this difference.

The Statistical Bureau reports the tonnage of the State of Maine at 565,842 tons. The Register's Office makes the same tonnage 438,616 tons, making a difference in the tonnage of the State of Maine alone of 127,226 tons, all reported from the Treasury Department, and it sending us distinct reports from two divisions of tonnage. In the State of Massachusetts the difference between the reports of these two tonnage divisions is 37,278 tons. In the State of New York they differ 685,478 tons, one of them, the Register of the Treasury, reporting the tonnage of the ports of New York at 1,711,501 tons, and the Bureau of Statistics reporting it at 1,026,023. In Pennsylvania the difference between these two divisions is 160,761 tons. Taking the aggregate difference between them in reporting the whole tonnage of the country, it is 204,769 tons.

Now, for the purpose of knowing absolutely nothing about the tonnage of the country, as these discrepancies show, we have two tonnage divisions in full operation in the Treasury Department, each of them requiring separate and distinct reports to be made to it. One thing that we propose to do by this reorganization is to place the tonnage division of the Register's Office where it belongs, in the Statistical Bureau, thereby avoiding the expense of eleven clerks who are now engaged on that duty there, and requiring of these clerks the additional duty which we have mentioned, to give us some information about the internal commerce of the country. The fact is that this tonnage division of the Register is, so to speak, a lost child in that Bureau. It does not belong there at all. That Bureau has now one hundred and eighty-seven clerks. Eleven of those clerks are employed in this tonnage division, and one hundred and seventy-six upon matters relating to finance. The duties of the Register of the Treasury are with reference to receipts and expenditures, bonds, coupons, and currency, including greenbacks and fractional currency. That is the peculiar duty of that Bureau; and the tonnage division, I think I can safely say, has no more real relation to the Register's Office of the Treasury than it has to the Indian Office in the Interior Department.

We ask to have these duplicate duties cease, and that the clerks who are now employed in duplicating this work shall be transferred to this Bureau, not to a new bureau, but to the reorganized Bureau, and perform the new and additional duties which we impose upon them. We propose also to save some expense by requiring only quarterly reports to be made instead of the monthly reports now required to be made by the Statistical Bureau. The whole proposition, so far as it is presented in this amendment, amounts simply to the reorganization of the duties of certain persons engaged now in preparing statistics relating to our foreign commerce, and adding to them such duties as will give us information in reference to our internal commerce.

I think I may safely say that there is not another great commercial nation on the earth that has always and persistently and utterly ignored all information with reference to its own internal trade. There is no other nation whose internal trade is so great as ours; but I think I may say to any gentleman who will attempt to investigate this subject and to ascertain, in response to the demands of the people of this country for some cheaper means of communication, what the facts are bearing on that question, that he will find himself utterly incapable of ascertaining anything about it, because nobody gives it any attention; there is no Bureau, no officer, no act of Congress, no anything anywhere in this country that gives us information upon that point.

The committee believe that it is important, in view of these great interests of our country; in view, as I have said, of the fact that the internal commerce of the country is at least fifty times greater than our foreign commerce, and bears directly on all the interests of our people; in view of the fact that millions of them are demanding legislation on this very subject of our foreign commerce, that we should be at least willing to spend an additional thousand dollars in order to procure by this reorganization facts to be laid before the people of the country which bear on the subject.

My honorable friend from Vermont has suggested that it will ultimately increase expenditures. Possibly it may do so somewhat in the future; but if it does, I ask you, sir, if it is not important enough to justify some additional expenditure. I think it will not do it for the present, and not materially do it for several years; but if it should increase them a few thousand dollars, is it not of sufficient importance that we know something of this internal commerce to justify that expenditure? Why, sir, if it cost $100,000 more per annum or $500,000 more, it would be, in my judgment, money well expended. I believe that if we had some means of presenting officially every year to foreign countries a knowledge of the gigantic internal trade of our country, it would add enough more to the credit of this nation abroad to infinitely more than pay the little expenditure that it would cost to gather these statistics. England has done it for years. She has studied by every means in her power to obtain information with reference not only to her foreign but to her internal trade. Boards of trade have been organized; special bureaus have been organized for each of the departments of her internal trade. There is for the railroad transportation alone a bureau which takes into consideration that subject only and presents its facts yearly. Instead of absolutely refusing to know anything about it or to do anything on the subject, she has organized a department that has charge especially of her commerce, and that is divided into various bureaus, and the statistics and facts are presented so that when her legislators legislate upon that subject they know upon what they are legislating.

We ask that this organization may be made, so that we may know something about the subject, and may be prepared to answer the demands of the people who ask of us cheaper means of transportation in this country, in addition to the duties already performed by the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, if the confusion and discrepancy existing in the Treasury Department are as stated by the Senator from Minnesota, then I think there is an additional reason why we should have more complete information upon the subject than we have at present before we proceed in the business of legislation. And if it be true that the returns of the tonnage of the country for the same period of time and upon the same facts differ so materially, as presented by the Register of the Treasury and by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, then I think the country has reason to be thankful that we have had two sources by which we are enabled to ascertain the facts which, if everything had been in one channel, probably we never should have ascertained, that there were great inaccuracies in this business that required a remedy. If that be true, then there should be the most searching inquiry into the Treasury Department, and especially in these two Bureaus, for the purpose of ascertaining where the difficulty is; and I submit that under these circumstances the Senate cannot proceed safely to legislate until the Secretary of the Treasury has been called upon for an explanation of these discrepancies and an opinion as to what ought to be done to prevent their recurrence in the future. I am not able to state precisely the process by which it will be explained; but I have not the least doubt that there is in the Treasury Department a perfect explanation of these differences, which probably are not discrepancies, but only different statements upon different facts, those facts being communicated to these different offices for different purposes.

The saving that is contemplated by this proposition is absolutely nothing. The information to be obtained additional to that for which the law now provides is absolutely nothing. This is but a process, of course without any intention upon the part of anybody. If I knew nothing except that which I knew before I came upon the floor of the Senate, I should believe that this was but an expression of that natural and common rivalry which exists in the Departments of the Government between subordinates who are struggling for preferment and desire to create offices occasionally in the Bureaus and to create Bureaus for the purpose of furnishing official employment; and it is well enough to remember—and here I think I can repeat what was said by a member of the French Assembly after the fall of the Third Napoleon, when discussing the condition of things: "We have sometimes a monarchy, sometimes an empire, sometimes a republic; the government changes, but the bureaus are immortal." That is true of this Government. Whatever changes of administration take place, the Bureaus are immortal and they are powerful. If there are evils existing and they are pointed out, it is the most difficult thing to remedy them. You may change administrations, but the existence and especially the power of the Bureaus continues. Therefore I am not for creating any more of them than are absolutely necessary for the performance of the proper functions of Government.

Now, if the Senate will look at the law creating the Bureau of Statistics, they will find the purpose stated to be this:

The collection, arrangement, and classification of such statistical information as may be procured, showing or tending to show, each year, the condition of the agriculture, manufactures, domestic trade, currency, and banks of the several States and Territories.

This language is not precisely that which has been employed by the Committee on Appropriations with the intent of giving authority to the Bureau to be created to procure statistical information concerning the internal trade of the country as carried on by river, lake, and canal and railway; but in that short section, which for its brevity at least is superior to that proposed by the committee, there is ample power given to the Secretary of the Treasury to require all the returns that are contemplated in the amendment proposed by the committee. The language is:

Showing or tending to show, each year, the condition of the agriculture, manufactures, domestic trade, &c.

Can anything be more ample? Can any power be more complete? Can any authority in its extent be more exhaustive? Does it not comprehend the entire territory of the country? Does it not embrace every form of domestic trade? And if you employ language which is more specific with reference to details, you only limit the power of the executive department of the Government to obtain the information you desire.

Now, sir, there is the office of the Register of the Treasury, a Bureau of the Government that is ingrained in the Government; the Government could hardly exist without such an office; and in that Bureau there is a division devoted to the registration of the tonnage of the country from information derived from the collectors of the several customs districts, whose duty it is to register the vessels and make returns to the Secretary of the Treasury. In this Bureau this information has been placed from the first. It is there a continuous record. You propose by sudden, and I say not only sudden legislation, but legislation without previous sufficient inquiry, to break off this business and transfer it to a Bureau which you are to create, which has no necessary existence in the necessary functions of the Government, and may be destroyed or changed at the option of the Legislature at any time.

A word now as to the saving of expense. The collectors of the several customs districts are required by law to make returns to the Secretary of the Treasury, for record in the office of the Register of the Treasury, of certain facts concerning the tonnage of the country. This provision is outside of the law establishing the Bureau of Statistics; but in the law creating the Bureau of Statistics the same information is to be furnished by the same officers, with certain other additional and valuable information, for statistical purposes to the chief of the Bureau of Statistics. The existing provisions of law merely impose slight additional duties upon the collectors of customs in the different districts, nothing whatever upon the Treasury Department here. The information comes to the chief of the Bureau of Statistics directly from the collectors of customs, and the information required by the Register of the Treasury comes also directly from the collectors of customs. Therefore there is no economy of time or of money in the Treasury Department at Washington by the creation of this new bureau.

We have now, Mr. President, all the legal means of obtaining all the information that is proposed by this amendment; there is no economy of money or of labor in the Department at Washington, in consequense of, or to proceed from, this amendment; and therefore, for one, I see no reason why this new bureau should be created. If the present Chief of the Bureau of Statistics is not a competent officer for the place in which he is, there is power in the executive department of the Government to remove him and put another man in his position; but for myself I am free to say that the present Chief of the Bureau of Statistics has reduced the expenses, I think at least 30 per cent., since he came to the head of the Bureau. The business has been in that period of time, as shown from an examination of the records of the office, materially increased, and my experience both as Secretary of the Treasury and in my present place has been that whenever I have applied to the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in writing for any information it has been promptly and accurately furnished. If the experience of others has been different, or if the experience of the Department at the present time is different, there is a remedy for that evil much easier than the creation of a new bureau.

I hope therefore that so much of the proposed amendment as has been read will be rejected. The remaining branch of the amendment proposed by the committee merely furnishes the ordinary appropriations for the support of the Bureau of Statistics, and I am of course of the opinion that the Senate ought to concur in that part of the amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, a very few words in reply to some suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts. He tells us that bureaus are immortal, and that no matter if evils be pointed out it is the most difficult thing in the world to get rid of them. I think that the honorable Senator has well illustrated that fact. We have pointed out difficulties in this Bureau; we have attempted to show you that much more information can be obtained for the same money; but the honorable Senator gets up before the Senate and insists that this old organization shall be immortal and that there shall be no amendments to it. I think there could not be a better illustration of that argument.

I am not in favor of making a new bureau. The committee have, as I said before, recommended no new bureau; but they have found that additional duties can be specifically imposed upon this bureau without any material increase of cost, and that is what they ask here—duties that are believed to be very important. The honorable Senator tells us that the law as it now exists provides for obtaining statistics with reference to domestic trade, and that that is as broad as it can be. That Bureau has been in existence for many years and no such statistics have ever been presented. If, as argued by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, the present law covers this point, if it includes all the duties which we mention in this amendment, then as a matter of course the amendment cannot materially increase the cost. If the same duties are required now—and we only specifically mention them so as to compel their performance—there certainly can be no very great increase of cost. But I have no faith, judging from the past, that under the existing law we shall ever receive information on this subject. The business men of the whole country in their representative capacity have petitioned Congress to give them the means of obtaining information on this subject. The National Board of Trade for years has passed resolutions urging it, nearly all the boards of trade in the country who have spoken upon it urge that some information be obtained with reference to our internal commerce. The committee believing that this can be obtained at a very small cost, that a reorganization can be made which will simply prevent duplication of duties and give us the information, have recommended this amendment. I believe that it is demanded by the country, and I hope that it may be adopted.

Mr EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the leading and chief objection that I have to this amendment, without going into its merits at all, is the fact that it imports into this bill what seems to me to be entirely new legislation. It provides for an entirely different method of administering one department of the Government. I have always maintained, and I believe the Senate has thought, that we ought not to do this sort of thing in an appropriation bill; and for many sessions hitherto until this one the Committee on Appropriations, or some other Senators, have brought forward a rule to operate for that particular session, which would exclude legislation upon appropriation bills. We have not any such rule now, but the same theory upon which we have adopted such rules is of course just as forcible as it ever was. Therefore it appears to me that, whether this provision is wise or unwise, we ought not to load up an appropriation bill, which ought to be confined to carrying out existing laws and regulating the disbursements of moneys provided for by law, with provisions of this character even if they are ever so good. It is not wise in the sense of regard to good legislation. If you may establish this department or bureau of commerce in this bill, then you may establish a bureau of justice, you may put in penal laws, you may regulate courts, you may provide different methods of collecting the revenue, or do anything that the other committees of the Senate have in charge and upon which they report in bills that are put upon your Calendar. Therefore, without going into any consideration as to whether this is or is not a good provision in and of itself, I do not see any ground for its being in this bill stronger than the grounds upon which half the business on the Calendar might be put into this bill. It may be very good or it may not; but it is an independent departure, so to speak, from the ordinary course of appropriations, and as such it ought to stand, like other matters of legislation on your Calendar and before the committees, upon its own merits and not be carried as a passenger in this bill for the appropriation of money. For this reason, and without expressing any opinion against or for the merits of the thing itself, I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota says that this amendment creates no new Bureau, that it simply reorganizes a Bureau now in existence at an increase of a thousand dollars a year expense, which is trivial enough, and changes the name, with the addition of some further duties in the collection of statistics. He has given us no reason why those additional duties might not be imposed upon the existing Bureau, nor can any one say why they may not be. He has given us no reason why, if a thousand dollars more is necessary for the expenses of collecting these statistics, that money may not be appropriated for the support of the existing Bureau. I fancy, Mr. President, that the whole truth of this business, the whole essence of this thing, is in the change of name. Words are sometimes very potent, and the real substance of this thing is in the word, it is in the name. Every Senator knows that for some time past—for several years past—there have been persons asking, some of them almost clamoring, for a department of commerce and a minister of commerce, a new department in the Government, a new minister to take his seat in the Cabinet, a new and increased prominence to be given the subject over which that minister is to preside. I fancy that this change of the name is simply laying the foundation for a new department of this Government, a new Cabinet minister to be called the minister of commerce, or some equivalent name. That might seem to be small business, although we do know that every department you create in the Government is soon filled with subordinate officers and clerks, and the expenses of the Government are thereby largely increased. We had an Attorney-General's office once, and it cost the Government but very little. We have a Department of Justice now, and it costs the Government about three millions of dollars a year. You have a Bureau of Statistics now. Convert it into a bureau of commerce, transform that into the department of commerce, put a minister of commerce at the head of it, and that bureau will soon cost you a million or more dollars a year.

And yet that will be the very least of the expenditure that will result from the measure, for behind this, far transcending all the expense of your department, lies the proposition for such an indefinite expenditure under what is called "the commercial power," once called "the vagrant power" in the Constitution, that the present indebtedness of this country is in danger of being doubled, if not trebled, if all the schemes that are in people's brains shall have practical execution.

I have seen these Departments grow up, I have seen Bureaus and the like grow up before to-day; and I know by what sly steps they do grow. I know that no Department springs into existence at once like Minerva from the brain of Jove. It is first a bureau, then a commissionership or something of that kind, and then a Department of the Interior or a Department of Justice, and finally we shall have, if this thing is to go on, your department of commerce and your Department of Education, and the Lord knows what other departments we shall have in the course of time if Congress does not set its face against this thing.

Although this may seem to be a very small thing, although it may seem to be simply a change of name, I hope the Senate will vote it down. If there is anything of substance in the business, it requires no new bureau, it requires no new change of name. If there are any statistics that ought to be obtained by the Government, you can charge the present officer with obtaining them; if there are any discrepancies in the reports of officers that ought to be removed, you can provide by legislation for their removal. There is no necessity for laying the foundation here in this proposed bureau of a new department of the Government, and have after that an expense so great that no man can foresee its limits.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Ohio says that these growths spring like Minerva from the brain of Jove.

Mr. THURMAN. No, I say they do not spring like Minerva.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he did. He said they were first a bureau and then a department. I did not know that Minerva began as a bureau and ended as a department; and therefore I was surprised at what he said; but it seems I misunderstood him.

I arose, however, to ask the Senator's attention to another remark which I am sure he did make, which was that once we had an Attorney-General's Office that cost very little, and now we had a Department of Justice that cost $3,000,000. I wish the Senator, if he will, in justice to himself and to the facts, to explain what he means by that. Surely he does not intend to convey the idea that the Department of Justice costs any such sum. He must include in making it up the cost of all the courts of the country, of the marshals of the United States, of the entire judicial service of the country, and that judicial service is not essentially different in its cost from the service as it was before the Department of Justice was created. If it is, if it has grown and augmented as the country has grown, that growth, I think the Senator will admit, has not depended upon the creation of the Department of Justice; or, in other words, it is not true in any sense that the Department of Justice, more than the Attorney-General's office, had it continued so to be called, has created this expense or improperly increased it. If the Senator has any information to the contrary of that, I should be glad if he would give it. If, however, he means, as I understand him to mean, that the expenses of all the courts, of the entire judicial establishment of the United States, amount to the sum he speaks of, I should be very glad to know that. I never heard before that the Department of Justice, in any sense in which that term may be used, cost any such sum of money.

Mr. THURMAN. Surely nobody could have understood me as saying that the mere personnel and the incidental expenses of the Department of Justice cost $3,000,000, or anything like it.

Mr. CONKLING. I think I can repeat precisely the Senator's words. He said "We had once an office of the Attorney-General that cost but very little; now we have a Department of Justice and it costs three million dollars," or, as he expressed it, "three millions of dollars."

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know that it is necessary to explain that; I do not think anybody could have misunderstood it, and I think my language was strictly accurate. But I shall not go into any controversy with the Senator from New York upon a question of language. That is very certain. If it were germane to this subject, I think I could show how the expenses which come under the control of the Department of Justice, and therefore belong to it and which were referred to by me, have been prodigiously enhanced since the creation of this Department of Justice, and in my judgment (although there are certain general causes for them for which certainly the head of that Department is in nowise responsible) I think there are other matters for which that Department is responsible by which they have been greatly enhanced.

But, sir, I do not see fit to take up any time in that; it is not necessary. We do know that it is in the nature of Departments to increase expenditures, and if this is, as I fancy or fear it is, the mere foundation-stone for a new department, we do know that when that department shall be created, not only will the expenses incident to it, its immediate expenses, the expenses of the personnel of the department and its contingent expenses, be far more than the expenses of the present Bureau, but what is worse, behind that, and to bolster up which this department is sought, comes an expenditure that no man can foretell the limits of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the expenses of the Department of Justice, as they appear in this bill, which is perhaps a fair average with other years, are $80,760, and the contingent expenses $15,500, making about $96,000; and then when you add the appropriation for official postage-stamps, (which, as we know, is nothing except carrying the letters of the Department through the mail by putting a stamp upon them,) $10,000 more, you have a little over $100,000. The expenses of the courts of the United States, which are precisely the same as they were before the establishment of the Department of Justice, so far as the act establishing that Department has any application to them, if it has any application to them at all—if I may state it in that way—are guided and regulated each year according to the state of prosecutions and suits that are instituted in the various district and circuit courts of the United States; and the last appropriation for that is undoubtedly that to which the Senator from Ohio alluded. There was an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the expenses of the courts of the United States, not for the expenses of the Department of Justice, but they are the judicial expenses of the courts of the United States, covering salaries, fees, witnesses, jurors, transportation of prisoners, and everything of that character. The difficulty about the Department of Justice, if there be any, is that it has not carried out the full idea that belonged to it in its institution. You will find in this very bill, under the head of the Department of Justice, an appropriation for an Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, a Solicitor of Internal Revenue, a Naval Solicitor and Judge Advocate-General, an examiner of claims, and so on. These people, although nominally under the direction of the Department of Justice, are really just what they were before the Department of Justice was established, and that is independent, subordinate law-officers belonging to these respective Departments, who give their opinions and determine upon the issuing of contracts, patents for land grants, internal-revenue questions, and so on, without any reference of the subject to the Department of Justice as such. That, in my opinion, is a misfortune. The idea that Congress entertained when this Department was established, and I believe without respect of party it was thought to be a good one, was that the Department of Justice should be the law department for the whole Government, and that obligations by the United States or grants by the United States or whatever it was which depended upon the determination of questions of law should not go into effect until the Department of Justice should have given a responsible opinion upon them. The mischief that now exists, and I think it is a mischief, is that all these things go on much as they did before, without the Department of Justice having a direct and controlling opportunity to determine whether in a doubtful or disputed case a land grant or a postal contract or a remission of some fine in the Internal Revenue Department, &c., should take effect.

I hope when we come to that branch of this appropriation bill that we shall so shape the appropriations, if it be possible, as to make the Department of Justice what it ought to be, the responsible and controlling law department of the Government for every Department that there is in it. If you only mean to have an Attorney-General as you did before, who should pronounce opinions which should be demanded from him by the Chief Magistrate of the Union and the heads of the Executive Departments when called upon, and stop there, you do not need the amount of machinery you have got now. But if you mean, as was intended when this Department was created and as the law declares, that all doubtful questions of law and disputed claims should, before they were acted upon, be brought under the consideration of that Department as having a controlling voice in respect to the administration of the law, then we ought to say so, and cut off these quasi independent upon the face of the statute and really independent officers in fact in these other Departments, who give their opinions and guide the administration of the Departments in most important and doubtful questions without any reference to the Department of Justice at all. But, Mr. President, this is of course incidental to the subject we now have in hand. The Senator from Ohio, as he has stated, did not mean to say that the expenses of the Department of Justice proper had been $3,000,000 or that it was in any great sense greater than were the expenses of the Attorney-General's Office before. It is only greater in the respect that some of the law officers that the other Departments had before this Department was created have been in name as well as in substance transferred to this Department, and their salaries, &c., go into this general head, when before they went in under the head of the Treasury or the Interior or the Post-Office, and so on. That is all there is to that.

But, to return to the question before us, I repeat that I think we ought not in this body, if we are careful in respect of the true mission of an appropriation bill, to import into it a legislative provision which provides for setting up a new bureau or a new department of any character whatever, no matter how good it is. It is not the place for it, for if it be the place for it, it is the place for every bill on the Calendar which we may determine upon discussion is proper to be put upon it as an amendment. That view, it seems to me, ought to guide the votes of all Senators, irrespective of the question that may be involved in the merit of the proposition itself, to take it out of this bill.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, if the information to be acquired by this contemplated bureau is important enough to justify the establishment of it, I think the objections are substantially answered. Is this information important? I think it is. I think the information to be acquired by this bureau is necessary to the solution of some great questions before the people—questions that cannot be settled one way or the other without the fullest information which can be acquired except by some system and by some expenditure of money. So far from the establishment of this bureau necessarily involving the Government in vast expenditure, it may have the other effect. The complete information that may be acquired may defeat the dangerous schemes to which the Senator from Ohio has referred. To act upon the great questions of transportation and of commerce that are now pressing upon Congress, and will continue to press for years, we must have the most complete and full information that can be obtained; and no difference what that costs, it is indispensable to the proper settlement of those questions.

Now, Mr. President, if you want this complete, full information, how are you going to get it? By making it an incidental duty of some Bureau already established that has other and more important duties to perform? Certainly not. You will get something in that way, but you will not get the complete discharge of this duty that you want. To get the complete discharge of this duty you must make it the first and the only business of a Bureau for the special purpose. If you attach it as an incidental duty to some other Bureau, it will be imperfectly performed. So far as the increased expense is concerned, that is a mere bagatelle. Is this the best way to acquire this knowledge? I think it is; and if it is the best way, that ought to settle the question, in my judgment. I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I concur in what has just been said by the Senator from Indiana. In my opinion very few propositions have been made to the Senate at this session which are likely to be more important than the one now presented for our consideration.

It is objected to by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that this legislation is not advisable for the reason that it is what he terms legislation upon an appropriation bill. I think my votes in this body will show that I have been as much opposed to that method of doing things as any person here. It is proper to remark in this connection that we have had by our laws what we know and denominate as a Bureau of Statistics; it was made a Bureau I believe in 1866, but it was existing, if not under that name, at least in form for a number of years before as the Bureau of Statistics. By this appropriation bill as it comes from the House of Representatives the Bureau is abolished, or at least there is no appropriation made for its continuance. The question submitted to the committee, as I suppose, and submitted to us now here is whether we shall concur with the action of the House in substantially abolishing the Bureau.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I perceive, if the Senator from Iowa will excuse me, that he is proceeding under a misapprehension of the motion which I submitted. By that motion, if it prevails, the customary appropriation for the support of the Bureau of Statistics will remain in the bill as proposed by the committee. This only relates to what is extraneous to the particular appropriation for the support of the Bureau. I do not object, indeed I am in favor of making the customary appropriation for the support of the Bureau.

Mr. DAVIS. If my friend from Iowa will allow me one moment, I will explain that if this clause is struck out, then we have no jurisdiction over the Statistical Bureau at all, because the other House has struck it out of the appropriation bill, and the only way you can reach it, even if you want the change, will be by putting this clause in the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand that this is true, that by the appropriation bill as it comes from the House there is no appropriation made for the Bureau of Statistics. If this is not included, something else must be included or there is no appropriation for the Bureau at all. I so understand from the chairman of the committee; I so understand from the Senator from Minnesota who has the matter particularly in charge.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Perhaps we could understand better by going to the bill itself. The provisions of the amendment of the committee are on the twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, and twenty-sixth pages of the printed bill. My request, which was acceded to, was when the reading had reached line 625, which it will be seen is before the appropriations for the support of the Bureau of Statistics, that the question should be first taken upon so much of the proposed amendment as preceded line 626. If that amendment should not be concurred in by the Senate, we should then be called on next to pass upon what is contained in lines 626 to 633 inclusive, which has not yet been read, within which limits are the usual provisions for the support of the Bureau of Statistics. Therefore, in all fairness, I think the question has not been before the Senate as to whether we will support the Bureau of Statistics as organized according to the usual course of appropriation, but whether we will create a different bureau and whether we will transfer to that different bureau certain duties that are now performed in the office of the Register of the Treasury.

Mr. WRIGHT. It still remains, Mr. President, as I said, that as the bill comes from the House there is no appropriation for the Bureau of Statistics; it is not in except by the amendment as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. I understand perfectly well the point the Senator from Massachusetts makes, but I was answering the position taken by the Senator from Vermont that this was new legislation upon an appropriation bill. I said that, as the bill came from the House, there was no appropriation in any form for the Bureau of Statistics. The Senate committee has made a recommendation that, in my judgment, instead of being new legislation is only an appropriation in another form to carry out existing laws. That is the point which I make. If it shall occur that we shall vote down this proposition, it is true we can take up the second clause and put that in; but suppose we do not do that, then the Bureau of Statistics is out of the way entirely.

Mr. BOUTWELL. No; we all agree that that shall be done.

Mr. WRIGHT. Not necessarily. That may be so or may not be so. I answer the point made, so far as this being new legislation is concerned, by the fact that there is nothing on the subject in the bill as it came into the hands of the Senate committee, and they report this, not as new legislation, but upon a subject that has been universally in these appropriation bills, and they merely change the form of it.

Now, it is suggested that so far as the Bureau of Statistics is concerned, it is sufficiently broad under the law as it stands to cover this entire subject. It will be found by reference to the last section of the chapter on the Bureau of Statistics that you have in that language all that is said with reference to internal commerce. The preceding sections relate to our foreign commerce, and hence you will find that in section 336 it is provided that "the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury," make certain reports each year to Congress, first, second, third, fourth, and so on, relating to our foreign commerce and to our navigation. The last section of that chapter, however, provides:

> The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall collect, digest, and arrange, for the use of Congress, the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw material, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transportation of products, wages, and such other conditions as are found to affect their prosperity.

That is, the prosperity of the manufacturers of the country; but the new matters that are introduced in this provision by the amendment proposed by the committee are entirely unprovided for by the law as it now stands.

The fears that some Senators entertain that this may grow into a department, I do not share; for if I did entertain them, I should have no objection to it if it should become necessary, to advise us of the growing and increasing internal commerce of this country.

Mr. President, it is remarkable that in this nation of forty millions of people, with our vast extent of territory, with our growing and constantly and rapidly growing internal commerce, there is no department, no bureau, no organization in all this land by which Congress can be advised of the extent of that commerce and its increase. In view of the great and momentous questions that are pressing upon Congress at this time and likely to press more and more every year touching our transportation, touching what is due in the way of legislation in regard to that internal commerce, it seems to me that Congress ought to make some provision by which we can be advised of what this commerce is, of its growth and its extent. At present there is no law under which it can be done.

Because there is a provision inserted here merely changing the name of this Bureau, it is suggested that there is an apprehension that it will grow into a department. I do not share in any such fear; and I think it would be a sad commentary upon the growth of our commerce in this country if, when it is proposed that we add merely a bagatelle of $1,000 increase of salary to these officers, we should deny an opportunity to furnish to Congress and the people information upon this vast and rapidly growing question.

Sir, I stand by the committee. I am not certain that all the provisions of this amendment are such as should be passed; but the main object, the main provision, the main thought in it I am in favor of, and I trust the Senate will adopt the amendment, or at least adopt the principle embodied in it.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question in reference to the assertion he makes about the power of the present Bureau. Section 335 reads:

> SEC. 335. The purpose of the Bureau of Statistics is the collection, arrangement, and classification of such statistical information as may be procured, showing or tending to show, each year the condition of the agriculture, manufactures, domestic trade, currency, and banks of the several States and Territories.

It seems to me under the authority there to collect statistics of domestic trade an appropriation to enable it to be carried out confers no additional authority.

Mr. WRIGHT. I answer that that section is that the purpose of the Bureau of Statistics is so and so; but how is this purpose to be carried out? In the manner provided for in the succeeding sections which limit and define the power of the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Read the last section and see how it is limited.

Mr. WRIGHT. It limits itself to foreign commerce except in the last section.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator from Iowa will see, I think, if he examines the two sections of the statute critically with reference to each other, section 335 and section 342 together they furnish all the power to the Bureau of Statistics to gather information upon the subject of internal commerce and all the power necessary to enable the officers of the Treasury Department to communicate to Congress. Section 335 in declaring the purpose of the Bureau sets forth that one of its purposes is to collect statistics relating to the internal commerce of the country:

> SEC. 335. The purpose of the Bureau of Statistics is the collection, arrangement, and classification of such statistical information as may be procured, showing, or tending to show, each year the condition of the agriculture, manufactures, domestic trade, currency, and banks of the several States and Territories.

If the mere multiplication of words were a power in a statute except for confusion in the construction of the statute, then I admit there would be more merit in the amendment proposed by the committee than there is in the section as it stands. But can anything be more clear than that the purpose with which the Bureau of Statistics is clothed is to collect information in regard to the domestic trade of the country? Does not that include the transportation of every commodity, whether of domestic or foreign origin, upon lake, canal, highway, and railway? Does it not comprehend everything which is the subject of transportation and every means of transportation by which anything can be carried? Therefore the power of the Bureau of Statistics under the law is ample for all the purposes demanded by those who favor the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. WINDOM. Allow me to ask the Senator a question. Why did he not when he was Secretary of the Treasury give the law that construction?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Ah! an easy question to ask. In the first place, during my time there was never any agitation of this subject; consequently my attention was never called as a matter of administration to this provision of the law. In the next place, if it had been so called, there was never any money at the command of the Secretary of the Treasury by which this provision of the law could be executed. But when now we are called to the consideration of the power of the Bureau of Statistics, we find that there is ample authority for doing what gentlemen say they desire to have done, and the only additional thing necessary is an appropriation to execute this law, which may be made by Congress, on the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, without interfering with that wise idea which should control all legislation, that no new power should be granted in an appropriation bill. That is the reason why this provision has never been executed. I was saying that the power exists to collect this information. Section 342 imposes upon the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics certain duties which are thus set forth:

> The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall collect, digest, and arrange, for the use of Congress, the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw material, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transportation of products, wages, and such other conditions as are found to affect their prosperity."

Here is ample power in section 335 to collect this information, and most comprehensive instructions in section 342, under the head of "The Bureau of Statistics," to communicate this information to Congress, covering precisely the subject which is now under consideration in the Senate, and it only remains to give to the Secretary of the Treasury additional clerical force in order that the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics may do the work you desire to have done, and there is no necessity for further powers, no necessity for a new bureau; there is no necessity of imposing additional language upon the pages of the statute-book. All you want is money.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, if this debate shall contribute to directing the attention of Senators and of the country to the importance of the great question of internal traffic, of home products, of home trade, of home commerce, and withdraw for a little while our attention from foreign trade and foreign commerce, it will not have been in vain. If a resolution were passed by this body, directed to any Department of the Government, asking for information about the trade, about the productions of the United States for the year 1874, the reply to that resolution in all probability would be that no Department of this Government had any information on the subject. With reference to our tariff laws, with reference to our custom duties, we have year after year and quarter of a century after quarter of a century been collecting information about foreign commerce and have almost wholly and entirely overlooked internal trade. The Senator from Minnesota states to this body and to the country to-day that the internal trade and commerce of the United States is fifty times larger, fifty times greater in magnitude and value than the trade of the United States with all foreign countries. And yet if I were called upon by one of my constituents of the West for specific information upon this internal commerce, I should be at a loss to make an intelligible response.

The object of this amendment, proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, is to indicate, if it shall do nothing more, that the people of the United States expect from this Government ample and correct information hereafter upon these internal questions. Year after year, month after month, tables of statistics are laid before the country by your Bureau. Not a word about railroad transportation; not a word about river transportation, or almost not a word; nothing about the products of the country; nothing about the great cotton and corn and wheat and rye regions, territorially speaking; nothing about the production of our meats; nothing about the traffic over the railroads and rivers; nothing to show, so far as the public can see it intelligently, any comparison with the different routes of transportation through the country. If this amendment shall be adopted and a commissioner of the bureau of commerce and statistics shall be put in the Treasury Department, whoever he may be, he will know after this debate, he will find out after this day, that he will be expected to direct his attention toward the internal trade of the country. We want to know something about the railroad traffic, and I care not how soon the day shall come when the great railroads of the country, when the corporations managing and operating those railroads, shall be brought face to face with this question. Has the General Government the right to demand information from them, and has the General Government the right to require of them to report their trade, report their charges, report the operations of their roads, report the stock they have issued, report the management of these great interests of the country, that they may under the laws of the country and under the authority of the National Government be laid before the American people?

The railroads have largely been chartered by States and some few by the Territories; but they are in operation in every direction to-day, carrying millions and hundreds of millions of property; and the great Government under which they live has never yet called upon them, has never yet demanded information from them, and we have never yet exercised the right and power to demand of them, reports of their operations both as to their charges for freight and for passengers. It is high time that the people of the United States shall know whether there is power and authority in this Government to bring information from the great carrying corporations, whether they are operating upon land or operating upon water. It is high time that we knew the magnitude of the internal traffic of the country.

Now, what does this amendment provide? The amendment proposes:

> The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a chief of the said bureau, who shall be styled commissioner of commerce and statistics, and whose duty it shall be to gather, collate, and annually report to Congress statistics and facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the railroad systems of this and other countries.

I wish to know, as one citizen of this country, the railroad systems to-day in operation in Europe as well as in our own country. I am willing to vote the necessary appropriations that may be asked for to get that information in a tangible and an authentic shape, so that we may know the railroad systems of other nations as well as the railroad systems of our own country, for the purpose of comparison as to the manner of the construction as well as the manner of the operation of the roads, to see whether we are spending money here extravagantly and lavishly, and that we may know whether these carrying corporations, operating upon water or land, are working their lines as compared with the operation of lines in foreign countries extravagantly and unreasonably, and therefore imposing upon the commerce of the country, upon the productions of the country, high if not extravagant and unreasonable rates.

The doctrine is held forth here, and with some confidence, too, that competition between railroads is to cease; that lower rates and lower charges are not to come of competition; that that day has passed by; that combinations will root out and destroy that great element of competition upon which we once relied for fair rates in the transportation of freights and passengers. If that doctrine shall ultimately prove to be the true one, that combinations can crush out competition, then we want some other standard of comparison to get at the rates charged by these corporations for the transportation of the products of our country.

Not there, however, is this Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics to stop; but he is to go further:

> The construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads, and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States, the charges imposed for such transportation of freight and passengers, and the tonnage transported; and the commissioner of said bureau shall be paid, &c.

I should like to know what would be the reply to a resolution introduced here and sent to one of our Departments about the tonnage transported on our great lines of railway? The presidents of the roads make their annual reports, and upon them the country must rely. They are laid before the country voluntarily, for there has been no authority ever exercised by the Government of the United States over this question yet. I would willingly vote the necessary appropriations to furnish to this Bureau additional clerks and additional means for getting these great facts from every quarter of the country, so that they might be annually or quarterly laid before the people in such shape as that we can compare the charges made for the transportation of the passengers and products of the country with the charges of railroads in foreign countries, and one railroad with another railroad in our own land.

The magnitude of this question, Mr. President, I think, if it shall not to-day arrest the attention of Congress, will in a few years claim it, and claim it most seriously. The question is too grave, the interests at stake are too vast and important to admit of much longer delay. The quicker we take steps in earnest here to direct the attention of the Government toward the collection of information demanded by this amendment the better. I hope the day is not far distant when the national Congress will declare by law its power under the Constitution, not only to require from railroad and other transportation companies an account of their modes of operation, but to authorize companies to construct railroads through the States of the Union, directly empower them to cross State lines and build railroads, so that we may have national lines for the transportation of the products of the East and of the West.

As the matter now stands, evidently the Commissioner of Statistics thought it was his duty to report only in regard to manufactures and foreign commerce; and if attention has been chiefly directed in that line, what we want to-day is information upon the internal commerce of our country. What we want to-day is information about the trade of our own country; and if this amendment will do no further good, it will at least, if this Bureau of Statistics shall be perpetuated, direct inquiry toward those important subjects.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois, with his permission, if his attention has been called to the three hundred and forty-second section of the Revised Statutes, which, as the law stands now, directs the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics to obtain certain information.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Senator from Massachusetts read that a few moments ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, will the Senator be kind enough to explain to the Senate in what respect it is that this amendment in this bill enlarges the subject provided for in that section? That is what puzzles me.

Mr. OGLESBY. I will state. I have just read that this Commissioner of Statistics and Commerce is expressly required by this amendment to give us information upon facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and the railroad systems of this and other countries, which he is not in that section.

The construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads, and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but what does my friend do with these words in the section:

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics shall collect, digest, and arrange, for the use of Congress, the statistics of the manufactures of the United States, their localities, sources of raw material, markets, exchanges with the producing regions of the country, transportation of products, wages, and such other conditions as are found to affect their prosperity.

That is, the prosperity of the trades and businesses of the United States. Why, do not these words "transportation of products" cover every branch of the inquiry into the subjects to which my friend has so properly alluded as being of great importance? If I could see that it does not, then I should be in favor in some proper bill, in some proper way, and immediately, of concurring in his view that we ought to have the information.

Mr. OGLESBY. The honorable Senator from Vermont understands the force of that language. To his mind it is very clear; but it has failed as a statutory enactment ever to have made any impression upon the Commissioner of Statistics. He evidently did not understand that it had any reference to the productions or to the trade and commerce of our country. I think that the language of this amendment will come within his comprehension, or within the comprehension of the Treasury Department, or within the comprehension of whoever shall be put in charge of that Bureau. My only apprehension is that the Senator from Minnesota in agreeing to this amendment, as I understand he does, which comes to us from the Committee on Appropriations, has not gone far enough. My own opinion is that the magnitude of the subject would justify Congress in going somewhat further than giving the Bureau the limited power that is conferred upon it by this amendment; but I am satisfied to vote for it and will sustain the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations because I honestly believe it is a step in the right direction, that this American people now can feel that their Government will take at once immediate steps to investigate this question and to lay before the country the magnitude of its great internal trade.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution relating to the conduct of debate on appropriation bills:

Resolved, That, during the present session, it shall be in order at any time to move a recess, and pending an appropriation bill, to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, and such motions shall be decided without debate. And no amendment to any such bill making legislative provisions, other than such as directly relate to the appropriations contained in the bill, shall be received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SARGENT. I will call it up to-morrow; and in the mean time let it be printed. I will simply remark that it is the same rule that was adopted at the last session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather think I am in favor of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed resolution will be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. RANSOM. I present an amendment to this bill to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It is to provide for the assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let us have the vote now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, commencing with line 575 and ending with line 625.

Mr. BAYARD. Is the question on the motion of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to strike out from line 575 to line 625?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asked for a division of the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is one single amendment reported by the committee which cannot be divided, but I do not make any point of order.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts moved to non-concur in that portion of the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations which is contained between lines 575 and 625 on pages 24 and 25. That is the present motion, as I understand, before the Senate. I hope the Senate will concur in that motion. Without denying for an instant the desirability of the information with which this new officer is charged, without failing in the least to appreciate the value and importance of correct statistical information in regard to the internal affairs of this great country in order that we may have the fullest knowledge praticable of the manufactures and the various interchanges between our own people and as accurately as they have been obtained in regard to foreign intercourse, at the same time, I do not see how it is to be reached if, as is stated by the honorable chairman of the committee who has the bill in charge and as I understood also by the Senator from Minnesota, the machinery to produce all this is simply to increase one officer's salary by the small addition of $1,000 and to change his name from "Chief" of a Bureau to "the Commissioner" of a Bureau.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to correct him, for he misunderstood me?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not mean to say, and I think I did not say, that the machinery could be found in that, but that by the reorganization we could save the clerical labor that was necessary to perform this additional service.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not find in this amendment the provision for any additional machinery, except it be the single officer who is to be placed at the head of this Bureau. The Department practically exists now. There is a Bureau of Statistics under the charge of an officer detailed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and such I think has been the law since 1866.

Mr. WINDOM. I will inform the Senator where we get this new clerical service, if he desires me to do so.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. We transfer from the Register's Office of the Treasury the tonnage division, which is now duplicating duty with the Statistical Bureau, and by not duplicating that duty we get the additional service.

Mr. BAYARD. I quite agree with what fell from the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr EDMUNDS,] that an appropriation bill is not the proper place for original legislation of this kind. If the proposition contained in this amendment is as far-reaching and important as has been stated by the honorable Senator from Illinois who spoke last—and I am not disposed to deny the correctness of any of his assertions in that respect——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator from Illinois was reading from the bill that proposes to establish a department of commerce and not from this amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. The honorable Senator from Illinois was reading from a bill, and the Senator from Maine misunderstood my application of the remarks of the Senator from Illinois. I was about to say that if this broad, important, far-reaching subject is to come before Congress and to take the form of legislation, it should do so, in my opinion, by a separate bill and not by ingrafting a Senate amendment on one of the House bills of appropriation. I felt fully the force of what was said by the Senator from Vermont on that subject, that this method of legislation was, so to speak, vicious, and that it was much better, if this bureau is to be organized, to make it efficient for the broad and varied purposes which have been referred to by the Senators from Minnesota and Illinois and others, I believe. Then, I think it should not be passed in the shape of a mere amendment to an appropriation bill. But in its present shape, what does it amount to? There are certain heads of information which are referred to in this amendment, and the officer proposed to be created is charged with collecting statistics on those sundry heads. In the report of the Secretary of the Treasury submitted to Congress at its present session there is contained the report of this same Chief of the Bureau of Statistics. The hasty and perhaps imperfect examination which I have been able to give the report discloses that a great many of the subjects-matter which are referred to in the amendment of the committee are already touched upon, if not absolutely embraced within, the present labors of this Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department. If the creation of a new bureau were to stop with the nomination of a single officer, to take the place of the one now existing and this petty increase of salary, the same result could equally be reached without any change in the name or in the pay of the official who now directs this branch of the public service, by simply charging him by resolution of Congress with the duty of adding certain other heads of statistics to those which he now has under his care.

If it may be said that this would increase his labors, the answer is increase his clerical force. I have not heard that there is incompetency charged upon the officer who has been for many years at the head of this Bureau. On the contrary, all the information that I have upon the subject redounds to his credit both as a man of character and as a man of ability; and in the congress of statisticians which he attended in Europe he was not found defective or wanting among that class of men whose abstruse labors are so little understood and so very little appreciated. If there be a necessity growing out of any incompetence upon the part of persons connected with this or any other branch of the public service, the remedy is not by legislation but it is by the removal of an incompetent or inefficient officer. If, on the contrary, the capacity, the character, the industry, and the worth of this head of Bureau and of those associated with him are not denied but you simply desire to have new fields of labor added to this officer, increase his clerical force, call upon him simply to take cognizance of new heads of statistical information, and you will obtain it just as accurately and as fully as you do those now which are submitted to him by law. If there be such radical defect in the present organization of this Bureau of Statistics as calls for remodeling it, or the establishment of a bureau on a greater scale, then I submit properly and rightly it should take the shape of a separate measure, thoroughly digested, and recommended by the Department in which the labors are to be executed; but nothing of the kind has been yet proposed. It seems to me that you are merely to unshape the present system, and do it in the most inefficient manner, if the objects which certain Senators have declared to be the intent of the amendment be really kept in view.

As I said before, the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, which is to be found from page 520 to page 597 in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year 1874, will disclose the fact that it touches many of the heads referred to by the amendment; and if the information already taken by this officer be not sufficiently thorough or enlarged, nothing is more easy than to direct his attention so that he shall extend his observations and the tables which he presents to the country on the various heads referred to in the amendment. But I should be unwilling to see this present amendment adopted, which would not have the effect of creating any greater efficiency than the present machinery of the Treasury Department, but on the contrary would be open to the objection that you attempt a broad and important movement, upon the expediency of which I do not propose now to decide, in a very inefficient and hasty manner. There is nothing here from the Treasury Department. We have had the experience of the late Secretary of the Treasury, whose amendment is now before the Senate, in which I am endeavoring to express my concurrence, but before we undertake to create this Bureau and create it by dislocating the present machinery of this Department without adding at all anything of value, merely by changing a name and advancing a salary, for that is the only machinery sought for by this amendment—I say until we have the information from the Department I think it would be far wiser for Congress to delay their action, and not attempt in this way to reach a subject the importance of which I am disposed entirely to concur in.

I believe also that, by a careful comparison of the language of the statutes under which this Bureau of Statistics is organized and finds its power with the amendment proposed here by the committee, it will be found that we are simply in many cases reiterating the duties already charged upon the officers who make up this report to us on statistics, and that therefore the proposed amendment of the committee is simply superfluous; but I look upon it, as was said by the Senator from Ohio, that this is but the entering-wedge for the creation of new offices, new bureaus, the cost of which, the extent of employment in which, is entirely unmeasured and indefinite.

I hope, therefore, that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to have the Senate non-concur in all that portion of the amendment embraced within the lines indicated by him may meet the approval of the Senate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will change the form of my motion, which I understand will make it more in conformity with the rules of the Senate, to strike out so much of the amendment proposed by the committee as is included in lines 575 to 625 inclusive.

Mr. SCOTT. I am unwilling to be placed in the seeming attitude of opposing the acquisition of the information provided for in this amendment. I want it. I want it just as broadly as the Senator from Illinois wants it, and I do not wish by voting to strike this out to seem to prevent any Bureau, or the present Bureau, from acquiring it.

Now, two points seem to be made, if I understand them correctly, by those who advocate the adoption of this amendment. The first point is a want of sufficient power in the present Bureau of Statistics to procure this information; and the second point is that a large amount of clerical labor in the present Bureau is simply engaged in duplicating or, if I understand it, in copying the returns of the registry of vessels, &c., in the office of the Register of the Treasury. When I am in order I think I shall offer an amendment to this provision. If it cannot be done now, I shall at some subsequent stage of the proceedings move to amend by striking out all down to the words "to gather," in line 581, and inserting this language:

That it shall be the duty of the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics to gather, collate, and annually report to Congress, &c.

Following that with the very duties that are imposed here on the head of this proposed Bureau, so that if there be any doubt about the present power of the head of the Bureau of Statistics to gather this information, we will confer that power upon him. If, then, he has not sufficient clerical force to do so, I suppose that the matter of employing the clerks now in his Bureau is one of administration, and under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury; and if they be engaged in duplicating information which is there, it will be in his power to change them and have them employed in getting this information once and giving it to us through the Bureau of Statistics instead of having them engaged in copying it twice. I do not know that it is in order at this time to offer to amend the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is to strike out a certain portion of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. Then it would not be in order to add these words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order to move to perfect the portion proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. SCOTT. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is to strike out all from line 575 to line 625. I shall vote for that amendment, giving notice that I will offer the amendment which I have indicated.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall detain the Senate one moment only. The other House is considering the bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors, and if the question were asked, what is the commerce of any river in the country, the Mississippi or the Ohio, there is no person from whom and no place where that information can be obtained in this Government. If a gentleman were asked what is the commerce of the Hudson, it could not be told; for a record of it is not kept in any place where it can be got at in this Government. It occurs to me, from the fact that we are asked almost daily to make appropriations for the improvement of navigable rivers, that this consideration should bear heavily upon the question now before the Senate, that we might know whether there is any commerce there or not? That question is asked in regard to the Ohio, which probably has more tonnage than the whole foreign commerce of the country. There is nobody, there is no place, where that information can be obtained, except that, I believe, in 1870, Mr. Roberts, an engineer, did make an estimate. For these reasons I believe it important that the information should be given.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am pained to disagree with the Committee on Appropriations on this amendment. I have no doubt that the information sought is valuable. It gives us a knowledge of the productive industries of the country, which, when published and circulated among the people, would be of great value; but I think all that can be done by the present system. My friend from West Virginia says we cannot get it. In many of the States they have it. I have in my room now a pamphlet showing the internal commerce of the Ohio River in all its details. But I pass all that by. The Constitution commits the subject of commerce to Congress. I am willing to let this present Bureau exercise itself in all public matters of information which can be useful; but I am unwilling to create a new Bureau. Our past experience is that the tendency of these Bureaus is always to magnify themselves. They are small in the beginning, only requiring a few thousand dollars; but they may require $10,000, or $15,000, or $20,000, or $100,000, in less than five years. Past experience shows that the moment you create a Bureau, that Bureau desires to be equal with other Bureaus. You get up a rivalry of self-improvement in the Bureaus; and past history, this year and every year, shows when these Bureaus ask for additional clerks and additional employés, one of the arguments is that another Bureau has them, and they, of course, must be supplied too. Now, if you can get this information under the present system of the Treasury Department, why not adhere to it? Why not adhere to that which has acted well in the past? If your statistician is not a good one, change him. I do not see and I have not heard yet an argument why we should create a new Bureau. Admit all that my friend from West Virginia says about the importance of the information, why can it not be had now?

Mr. DAVIS. I understand my friend from Kentucky to say that this amendment creates a new Bureau. I know he did not mean that.

Mr. STEVENSON. It creates a new officer, to be called the "Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics," I believe.

Mr. DAVIS. It provides for an officer in the place of the one who now fills the position, or the same one may be continued. It creates no new office whatever, no new Bureau whatever; it changes the name only, and gives an additional amount of statistics for him to gather, that is, in regard to the internal commerce of the country.

Mr. STEVENSON. It creates a new Bureau, because it says "a bureau of commerce and statistics." That does not exist now.

Mr. DAVIS. My friend knows that there is now a Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know that. I know there is a man in the Treasury Department whose business is to collect statistics, but he is not entitled "Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics," and it is not, as I understand, a separate Bureau.

But that is a small matter, Mr. President. The point I suggest to my friend from West Virginia is, why, under the present management, can we not get all the information that is susceptible of being had? What is the difficulty? None whatever; and I say, let us adhere to the Bureau now established. Obsta principiis. Resist this thing in the beginning. There are thousands and tens of thousands and perhaps millions of people starving for bread in this country; and we have promised the people to be economical. This is a poor way of showing the sincerity of our professions, because, my word for it, if you establish this Bureau, although you only increase it a thousand dollars now, you will have it increased, in less than five or ten years, $20,000, or $50,000, or $100,000. There are Bureaus that a few years ago were satisfied with twenty clerks that now want one hundred, and some that have one hundred want two hundred; and when you ask them why, the answer is, "Another Bureau has so many." Now, I say that if we can reach the practical object which was intended by the establishment of this officer in the Treasury, which was the gathering of information of every character which shall go, when furnished to the people, to show them the amount and character of our internal commerce, do not let us break it up; let us adhere to it, and thereby stop even the increase of $1,000. My own opinion is that, if you undertake to adopt this amendment, you will see in five years an increase of this day's work of $100,000 annually.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of the Senator from Maine, as it is necessary, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. There are some matters necessary to be attended to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask the Senator to withdraw his motion for a moment, to allow me to offer an amendment to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to offer a resolution simply to confine the debate on this bill to-morrow to five minutes. That is the ordinary rule, and I give notice I will call it up in the morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read. Perhaps there is no objection to it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, during the present session, it shall be in order at any time to move a recess, and pending an appropriation bill, to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, and such motions shall be decided without debate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think there is anything in this bill which Senators desire to debate at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. STEVENSON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 18, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

Mr. RANDALL. If that bill is upon its passage, I ask the yeas and nays upon it.

The SPEAKER. The question is first, "Will the House second the motion to suspend the rules?"

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 98, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. GARFIELD to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 76, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Roderick R. ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of two o'clock having arrived and this being the third Monday in the month, the Committee on the District of Columbia is entitled to the floor.

AFFAIRS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask unanimous consent to move that the committee appointed to investigate into the troubles in Mississippi be allowed to make a partial report with testimony, and have it printed and recommitted to the committee.

There being no objection, the motion was entertained and agreed to.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. NEGLEY. The gentleman in charge of the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia yields to me to ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, after the morning hour, a bill amendatory of an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Missouri, may be considered for not exceeding one hour.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. SYPHER, by unanimous consent, presented a copy of an argument on the Texas Pacific Railroad made before the Committee on the Pacific Railroad; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4442) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1876; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made a special order for Tuesday, the 26th instant, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask that all points of order be reserved upon the bill.

PACIFIC OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution of inquiry for adoption at this time:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be requested to communicate to this House the name, nationality, and dates of arrival and departure at the terminal and intermediate ports of all steamships carrying the mails between California and China, including the branch line to Shanghai, under contracts with the Post-Office Department, from January 1, 1873, to the present time; the amounts paid for said service, and the dates of payment; also, whether the additional service authorized by the act of June 1, 1872, has been begun, and if not, when the contractors will be ready to perform said additional service, fully and regularly, in accordance with the terms of the act authorizing said additional service and the contract made in pursuance thereof; also, at what period the contractors will complete and put in commission the four American-built iron steamships of forty-five hundred tons register, called for by their proposals accepted by the Postmaster-General in August, 1872; also, whether all the steamships employed by said contractors in said service have been kept up at all times, by alterations, repairs, and additions, fully equal to the best state of steamship improvements attained, as required by said contracts; also, whether any delays and irregularities have occurred in the arrivals and departures of said steamers, and if so, whether any and what fines and penalties have been imposed as required by said contracts; also, whether any and what portion of said service on the main or branch line has been performed by steamships not wholly of American construction or of less tonnage than required by the respective contracts.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that; we have already got about enough of it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SENER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for and the hour of two o'clock having arrived, the Committee on the District of Columbia are entitled to the floor for the purpose of submitting reports. The Chair will call the attention of the House to the new rule in relation to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was in operation but one day last session. Previous to the adoption of that rule the Committee on the District of Columbia was entitled to the third Friday of each month from two o'clock p. m. The new rule changed it to the third Monday. The Chair at that time gave a construction of the rule to this effect: the District Committee is entitled to the floor at two o'clock, but it is not entitled to put bills upon passage under a suspension of the rules, nor during the time the committee is reporting can a motion to suspend the rules be entertained. In other words, the committee have precisely the same right on the third Monday that they previously had on the third Friday of the month. No motion to suspend the rules from a member outside of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be in order, nor can a member of the committee move to put a bill on its passage under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce and have referred to the Committee on Appropriations a bill and accompanying papers, and that they be printed.

The SPEAKER. Does that come from the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. CHIPMAN. It does not; but it relates to a matter which is of interest to the people of this District.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. After the committee is called for reports, business from the committee is in order, and none other LOUISE HOME.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a bill to incorporate the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes.

The bill (H. R. No. 4445) was received, and read a first and second time.

The first section of the bill provides that James M. Carlisle, George W. Riggs, and James C. Hall, of Washington City, in the District of Columbia, and Anthony Hyde, of Georgetown, in said District, and their associates and successors, shall be created and constituted a body-politic and corporate in law, by the name and style of the trustees of the Louise Home; and by that name may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, have perpetual succession, and shall and may take, hold, manage, and dispose of at all times, real and personal estate, and shall and may do and perform all other acts and things necessary or appropriate, and no other, for the execution of the trusts created and conferred on them in and by a certain deed from William W. Corcoran, of the city of Washington, to them, which is dated on the 21st day of November, 1869, and was recorded on the 15th day of December, 1870, in liber numbered 630, beginning at folio 458, one of the land records of the county of Washington, in the District aforesaid, to which reference is made for greater certainty; the intent of the charter of incorporation being that the same shall be in execution of the trusts in said deed declared and set forth, and not to any other intent or purpose whatever.

The second section provides that the buildings and grounds connected therewith, and all property held by said trustees for the purposes of said trust, on the square numbered 196, shall be free from all taxes and assessment by the municipal authorities or by the United States, so long as the same shall be held and used for the purposes of the said trust.

The third section provides that the said trustees and their associates and successors shall be authorized and empowered, for the uses and purposes of said institution, to close that part of the public alley, fifteen feet wide, in said square which opens on Massachusetts avenue; provided that the said trustees pay for the ground inclosed in said alley at the assessed rate of the ground contiguous to the same in said square, and expend the amount thereof in grading and paving the residue of the public alley therein, or pay the same, pro rata, to the holders of property fronting on said alley, according to the number of front feet, if a majority of the owners of said front feet shall so elect.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is not this bill open to a point of order in that it exempts property from taxation?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The bill enacts that the property "shall be free from all taxes and assessments by the municipal authorities or by the United States so long as the same shall be held and used for the purpose of the said trust." The Chair does not think that would make the bill obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. It puts no money into the Treasury and takes none out.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The United States will have to pay a portion of the taxes.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly there may be an expense indirectly in such a connection, but the Chair thinks that is too remote to found a point of order upon.

Mr. RANDALL. If this bill should not pass, this property would not pay any money into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CHIPMAN. This is purely a private charity, calling for the expenditure of no money on the part of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It also provides in the third section for taking public property.

The SPEAKER. Strictly speaking, the third section of the bill is liable to the point of order which the gentleman makes, if he insists upon it. That section authorizes the trustees "to close that part of the public alley fifteen feet wide in said square which opens on Massachusetts avenue."

Mr. CHIPMAN. Then I move to strike out that section.

The SPEAKER. That would not free the bill from the point of order, if insisted upon.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I insist upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will then be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 958) for the relief of J. E. D. Couzins, of Saint Louis.

3.65 DISTRICT BONDS.

Mr. CHIPMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 4026 a bill (H. R. No. 4444) to amend an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the second sentence of the seventh section of the act of June 20, 1874, shall be amended so as to read as follows:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

The bill also provides that registered bonds may be issued in lieu of coupon bonds, as provided in said act, or exchanged for coupon bonds already issued, and that the interest of said bonds shall be payable at the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I am instructed to present a report in writing. I ask to have it read.

The Clerk read the report. It states that the object of the bill is to carry out the recommendations of the sinking fund commissioners for the District of Columbia, appointed under the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, and to secure the results aimed at by that act. By the seventh section of that act the faith of the United States was intended to be pledged that the United States would, "by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as would do so, provide the means necessary to pay" the interest and principal at maturity. At some stage of the bill, however, two important words were dropped out which it is the object of this bill to restore. The sinking fund commissioners in their report (Executive Document No. 1, part 6, House of Representatives, page 120) say:

It will be observed that the language of the act as it finally passed is rendered somewhat obscure by the omission of the words "do so" where they appear in brackets. * * * The defect in the wording of the law and the absence of such an express and explicit guarantee by Congress as would satisfy counsel to whom it was referred have prevented the bonds from being taken as an investment by various financial institutions in the larger cities, and being thus dependent upon the local market for support has caused them to sell for a less price than was anticipated when the act was under consideration.

It appears from the report of the Joint Investigating Committee of June 20, 1874, (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 5328,) that these words "do so" were in the bill recommended by them, but for some unaccountable reason were omitted from the act as engrossed.

The second provision suggested by the bill is that registered bonds be authorized in lieu of coupon bonds, when desired.

Upon this point the sinking fund commissioners say:

It would much conduce to the convenience of the holders of these bonds that authority be given by Congress for the issue of registered in lieu of coupon bonds, when desired, and that the interest on both classes be made payable through the officers of the Treasury of the United States.

The committee recommend this, as it is the unvarying custom of Congress to make such provision in all Government bonds; and as the United States guaranteeing these bonds have entire control over them and should retain it, the committee thought it best to make them registered as well as coupon. It is a great convenience and protection to holders to possess a bond that may not be stolen or destroyed; and for investment by trustees and others acting in a fiduciary capacity it is an important matter to be able to obtain registered bonds.

The commissioners for the District of Columbia, in their annual report to Congress, (page 10,) call especial attention to this matter, as follows:

We venture to call the attention of Congress to the comprehensive and careful report of the commissioners of the sinking fund, and especially to their suggestions relating to the ambiguity in the act of June 20, 1874, respecting the guarantee by the United States of the 3.65 bonds authorized to be issued in payment of certificates of indebtedness issued by the board of audit, and to their recommendation that the interest on the 3.65 bonds be made payable in coin.

The commissioners again invite attention to the subject in a recent communication to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, January 11, 1875:

The sinking fund commissioners report that up to December 1, 1874, there have been converted into these bonds claims to the amount of $2,088,168.73, (Report of Commissioners, page 122,) there being about seven hundred claimants, as stated by the commissioners to your committee. The report of the board of audit shows that there have been issued certificates of audit amounting to $6,858,727.18, which are convertible into 3.65 bonds. In addition to the foregoing, the board of audit report claims outstanding, convertible into 3.65 bonds when audited, amounting to $3,147,787.48, making a total, if all the claims filed are allowed, of $10,006,514.66 to be ultimately converted. This will be raised somewhat by claims disallowed and by claims for work being done payable in these bonds; but the ultimate issue under the act of June 20, 1874, will not materially vary from the amount stated by the board of audit.

Mr. BLAND. I raise a point of order upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see anything in the bill which either by direction or indirection increases the obligations of the United States. There are two provisions: one is to correct a clerical error; the other is to provide that these bonds may when desired be registered instead of coupon bonds. The bill can in no event take money out of the Treasury; it would rather save it, if anything. The Chair does not sustain the point of order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL HOME SCHOOL.

Mr. HAGANS, from the same committee, reported back the memorial of the officers of the Industrial Home School; moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the memorial was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND RAILROAD.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4446) to repeal the act entitled "An act for giving the assent of Congress to the subscription of the District of Columbia to the stock of the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company," approved May 23, 1872, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that the commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, be authorized and directed to subscribe to the capital stock of the Southern Maryland Railroad Company the amount heretofore authorized to be subscribed to the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company by an act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia approved August 19, 1871, and confirmed by an act of Congress approved May 23, 1872, and that the same shall be submitted to a vote of the people of the District of Columbia at an election to be held in the several election districts of the District of Columbia as such districts existed prior to the present form of government; which election shall be held April 15, 1875, under the direction and supervision of the commissioners or their successors in office, who are authorized and empowered to appoint judges of elections and other officers necessary to carry out the election. The expenses of the election are to be borne by the Southern Maryland Railroad Company, and to that end the company prior to the ordering of the election by the commissioners or their successors are to deposit with them an amount sufficient to pay such expenses.

The second section provides that the commissioners or their successors shall canvass the votes cast at said election; and if it shall appear that a majority of the votes cast are in favor of the subscription, then the commissioners or their successors shall subscribe to the capital stock of the Southern Maryland Railroad Company, in behalf and in the name of the District, the amount heretofore authorized to be subscribed to the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company; provided that the commissioners or their successors shall not issue any bonds of the District for the subscription, nor become responsible therefor, until the Southern Maryland Railroad Company shall have completed their railroad from St. Mary's River, in St. Mary's County, Maryland, and effected a junction with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company within the District of Columbia, so that the people of the District and the Government of the United States shall have direct communication by rail with the deep waters of the harbor of St. Mary's River aforesaid.

The third section provides that for the purpose of enabling the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to effect a junction with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad within the District of Columbia, the Southern Maryland Railroad Company is authorized and empowered to extend its road into and within the District of Columbia at or near the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, with all the privileges, immunities, rights, and powers granted by Congress to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company by the act entitled "An act to authorize the extension, construction, and use of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad within the District of Columbia," approved February 5, 1867; provided, however, that said railroad company shall not enter into and upon any grounds or property of the United States.

The fourth section provides that upon the completion of said Southern Maryland Railroad and its junction with the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and Baltimore and Potomac as aforesaid within said District of Columbia, the said commissioners or their successors, in order to provide for the payment of said subscription, are thereby authorized and directed to issue the registered and coupon bonds of the said District of Columbia, which shall express on their face the object of their issue, and shall be signed, registered, and delivered to the said Southern Maryland Railroad Company under such regulations as shall secure a proper record to be kept of their action in the premises, and shall be redeemable in thirty years after their date, and shall bear 6 per cent. interest, payable semi-annually, to the amount of said subscription theretofore authorized to be subscribed to the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company, to wit: $600,000 and no more; provided, however, the said railroad shall be completed within two years from the passage of the act, otherwise the same will be null and void.

The fifth section provides that the commissioners of the sinking fund shall receive all the dividends which may be declared upon the shares of the capital stock of the said company held by the said District, to be applied to the interest on said bonds as the same shall accrue; and in case there shall be any surplus after the payment of said interest, then the balance shall be carried to the credit of the sinking fund for the extinguishment of the principal when the same shall have matured. And in case there shall be any deficiency in the amount of dividends aforesaid to meet the interest on the same as the same shall become due, then there shall be levied on the property in said District other than the property of the United States a tax sufficient to pay the same.

The sixth section provides that the said commissioners or their successors in office shall cause this act to be published in two of the daily newspapers in the city of Washington for two weeks prior to and including the day of said election, the expenses of which advertisement shall be borne by the said Southern Maryland Railroad Company as part of the said election expenses.

Section 7 provides that the act of Congress entitled "An act giving the assent of Congress to the subscription of the District of Columbia to the stock of the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company," approved May 23, 1872, be repealed, and the District of Columbia is prohibited from issuing any bonds or subscribing any money in aid of said Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I raise the point of order against this bill.

The SPEAKER. What point?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Section 3 gives the right of way, while the whole bill contemplates throwing the District of Columbia into bankruptcy, when of course the Government of the United States will have to assume the whole District debt.

Mr. FORT. Besides, the bill takes money out of the Treasury.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Nothing of the sort.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does not the United States pay the expenses of the District of Columbia?

Mr. ELDREDGE. Not at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It has to pay all its debts.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Not a cent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it contracts this debt it will certainly have this to pay at least.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the gentleman will hold still a moment he will see exactly what the bill is. It expressly provides this railroad shall not occupy any of the lands of the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. But it gives the right of way.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The Southern Maryland Railroad is to furnish the expenses, even the expense of election, and not a cent is to be paid by the United States.

The SPEAKER. The point made by the gentleman from Iowa the Chair apprehends has reference to the third section, which the Clerk will again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of enabling the said Southern Maryland Railroad Company to effect a junction with the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad within the District as aforesaid, the said Southern Maryland Railroad Company is hereby authorized and empowered to extend its road into and within the said District of Columbia at or near the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, with all the privileges, immunities, rights, and powers granted by Congress to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company by act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the extension, construction, and use of a lateral branch of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad within the District of Columbia," approved February, 5, 1867, chapter 29: Provided, however, The said railroad company shall not enter into and upon any lands the property of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it excludes the taking of United States property.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Did not the other railroad company get the right of way?

The SPEAKER. The language of this bill expressly excludes the grant of that right.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How do they expect to get into the District of Columbia without the right of way?

The SPEAKER. The question is not upon coming into the District of Columbia, but going upon public property within the District. The United States does not own the whole of the District of Columbia, and the question is not whether they go upon any property in the District of Columbia owned by the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. They cross the streets in the District of Columbia, which are partly owned by the United States?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be hardly United States property in this sense, any more than going through the streets of the city of Baltimore or the city of Boston.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It seems to me there is one good point against another section of the bill, which provides for an election—that this shall be submitted to a vote of the people of the District. Of course, in the first instance, the expenses of the election will be borne by the United States.

Mr. LEACH. No; they will not. It is provided in express terms that they shall not.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The bill provides expressly that the company shall deposit the expenses of the election before any step is taken in that direction. The company are to pay all the expenses of the election and are to make a deposit previously for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But that might be struck out, and the expenses left to be borne ultimately by the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill has been drawn with a great deal of skill to avoid points of order.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I know it has, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. This does not involve any charge upon the Treasury; nor if the clause were struck out would it involve that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Did not the Chair once rule on this same point that if the bill were so drawn that a relevant amendment would entail expenses on the United States, the point would lie against it?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but that would not be the case here. If this were struck out, it would simply leave the judges without any pay; and if there was a provision moved to make the United States liable, it would be the duty of the Chair to rule the amendment not in order.

As to the point of the gentleman from Iowa that the United States would become ultimately liable, that is another question, which parliamentary law does not deal with. The question whether, as the effect of the legislation before the House, an appropriation may not be involved; whether by some contingent law-suit or construction the United States may not be held in damages—that question is not for the parliamentary law to determine. The bill itself does not involve an expenditure by the United States, nor would an amendment striking out the proviso if carried, involve it. It would simply then result that these judges would have no pay.

The point made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] that if the District of Columbia is allowed to go into debt the United States would ultimately have to pay it, may be very strong as a point of probability as to the matter of fact; but as a parliamentary point it does not lie.

The Chair does not really see that the point lies against the bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suppose it will be open by and by to move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I believe I have the floor, and hope before I sit down to be able to satisfy every member as to the propriety of this bill.

On the 23d of May, 1872, the Congress of the United States authorized the District of Columbia to subscribe to the capital stock of the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company. This was to have been done within two years. That company has taken no steps to avail itself of the advantages of the law. The people of the District of Columbia, with more unanimity, I apprehend, than in any other instance—certainly any within my knowledge—have applied to Congress to be allowed to subscribe the same money to the Southern Maryland Railroad Company. I hold in my hand the memorial of the citizens of the District of Columbia, signed by the principal men in the District, to the number of nineteen or twenty hundred. Among the names are those of George W. Riggs, Marshall Brown, Richard Wallach, Moses Kelly, Alexander R. Shepherd, George Taylor, J. Van Riswick, H. M. Hutchinson, and others, enough to make up two thousand names of the principal business men and property-holders of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. What is the amount proposed to be subscribed?

Mr. ELDREDGE. Six hundred thousand dollars. The bill has every guard that could suggest itself to the minds of the committee or that was suggested from any other quarter. It provides that not one dollar shall be paid until the road is completed. It provides further that there shall be an election at which the people of the District of Columbia shall have an opportunity to vote their approval of the subscription of this money to the Southern Maryland Railroad, their approval of the transfer from the road to which it was originally applicable to the Southern Maryland Road.

In this memorial are set forth the reasons why the people desire to make this subscription to this road. The road is already graded and bridged, with most of the culverts completed for the whole length or nearly the whole length of the road to its junction with the Baltimore and Ohio Road. It is a road of vast importance to this District, and it is a road of vast importance to the United States. The Secretary of the Navy appointed a commission to make an examination with reference to this road and with reference to a coal harbor, and that commission reported that the port of Saint Mary's, St. Mary's River, is the best port for that purpose that there is in the United States. It brings the people of the District of Columbia within two and a half hours of water communications connecting directly with the sea, and brings them within eighty-six miles of the Atlantic Ocean.

Perhaps gentlemen have experienced during the last few days something of the inconvenience in Washington of not having this means of communicating with water that does not freeze. It is said, and I suppose with truth, that it will bring us the mails from two to three hours earlier than they can be brought by any other route to Washington; and that when the river is frozen, as it is now, it will bring the city into convenient connection with the oyster business and various other interests which are very important to the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELDREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. Where are they going to bring the mails from two or three hours sooner if this road be completed?

Mr. ELDREDGE. From any place.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought it was only from St. Mary's.

Mr. ELDREDGE. From every place in the United States that comes in that direction. The people of the District of Columbia are almost unanimously in favor of transferring this subscription to this road; and if no one desires to say anything on the subject I will call the previous question on the bill.

Mr. STORM. What is the amount of the subscription?

Mr. ELDREDGE. Six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. STORM. What is the length of the road?

Mr. ELDREDGE. About eighty or ninety miles, I believe.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me, I desire to state, in the form of a question, what I understand the facts to be.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I wish to inquire whether this District of Columbia is not now substantially bankrupt; whether it has not a debt upon it which its citizens are wholly unable to pay, and if a proposition is not pending before Congress for the assumption of that whole debt by the United States; and whether we propose to have, this District being in this condition, the government of which has been abolished and put in commission by this Congress, undertake to pledge its credit and enter into a scheme to build a new railroad within its borders, adding $600,000 to the $20,000,000 debt of the District which they want Congress to pay? I will ask him why, if anything of this kind is needed, the honester and fairer way is not to apply directly to the United States to build the railroad, and let this District government, which has been abolished, not come into it? I will ask him, if the people of this District are so much in favor of the construction of this road, why the gentlemen who have signed this memorial do not subscribe stock and furnish their own means, instead of pledging what they call the credit of the District to an amount which the United States will at some time be called upon to pay?

Mr. ELDREDGE. Well, that is a pretty long question, and I do not suppose the gentleman desires to have an answer. The debt of the District I do not understand to be any such sum as the gentleman has stated. I do not understand, sir, that the people of this District are bankrupt. I have no such information or belief. On the contrary, I believe that if the United States would pay its proportion, according to the value of its property, of the taxation and debt of the District of Columbia, no community in the United States would be better off to-day than this community. It is this conflict between the liability of the people of the District and the Government of the United States that is the most embarrassing thing with which they have to contend.

Now, the gentleman asks why the men who sign this memorial do not subscribe the money. I suppose he can answer that question as well as I can. Here are nearly two thousand of the business men of the District and the property-holders of the District asking that they may be permitted to transfer this sum which Congress permitted them to subscribe to the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad to the Southern Maryland Railroad. I will ask the Clerk to read the memorial of these citizens, which states the facts more concisely and succinctly than I can, and states pretty fully the reasons why they desire the passage of this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the undersigned, citizens of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, who represent every branch of industrial pursuits in the said cities and District, respectfully represent that they are deeply interested in the completion of the Southern Maryland Railroad at an early day as practicable.

That the said railroad company has been actively engaged in the construction of said railroad from the city of Washington to Point Lookout, at the confluence of the Potomac River with the Chesapeake Bay. That it has completed the greater part of the grading, bridging, and culverts, and that in consequence of the recent panic in the money market and the extraordinary stringency which exists, the company has been unable to press the work to an immediate completion.

Your memorialists further represent that this line will furnish a short and expeditious route, not over two hours and a half from Washington, to the deep waters of the harbors of Saint Mary's River and Point Lookout, and a short and convenient outlet to the sea. That besides a very large traffic it will necessarily pour into Washington, it will open three large and fertile counties for the daily supply of luxuries that abound in them to the markets of Washington and Georgetown.

That to the Government of the United States it will afford a swift and certain route for the transportation of coal and every species of supplies at all seasons of the year, and in time of war, as a strategic line, it will prove of incalculable value. It is calculated that if this line had been in operation during the late civil war, it would have saved the Government several million dollars and a large number of lives.

Your memorialists represent that, in view of the immense impulse it will give to every description of business within the District of Columbia, they desire to lend their aid to the immediate completion of this work.

They therefore pray your honorable bodies to pass an act authorizing and directing the authorities of the District of Columbia to divert to the Southern Maryland Railroad the amount of the subscription authorized and directed to be made to the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad by an act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia approved August 19, 1871, and ratified and confirmed by an act of Congress approved May 23, 1872. The said Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company not having availed itself of the provisions of said acts, your memorialists pray that it may be diverted to the Southern Maryland Railroad. And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Speaker, the board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy made their report, using this language:

The board cannot express an opinion as to the defensibility of such points upon the Saint Mary's River as upon further examination might prove to be the most desirable one for a naval coaling depot, while it unqualifiedly recognizes the importance of such a depot, accessible at all seasons of the year to vessels of the greatest draught of water, and of easy defense, in communication by shortest routes of transportation with the great bituminous and anthracite coal fields of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, as from such a depot of supply the necessary prerequisite to the maintenance of our steam vessels of war and transports in all contingencies and emergencies would be secured, and from which coal may be shipped to points within the United States and elsewhere throughout the world when desired.

Commander Foxhall A. Parker, United States Navy, who commanded the gun-boat flotilla on the Potomac in 1864-'65, in a note to the President of the board remarks—

There could be no better place for a coal depot than the Saint Mary's River, and exactly where I had mine during the civil war; easy of access day and night, plenty of water, and always as smooth as a mill-pond.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELDREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I understand the gentleman to deny that the debt of the District is $20,000,000.

Mr. ELDREDGE. O! it is not necessary to go into that question. I said that was my opinion.

Mr. GUNCKEL. It is important to have the truth. The report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia on page 269 shows these figures:

The aggregate of the ascertained debt of the District may be stated as follows:

Funded debt	$8,883,940 43
Eight per cent. certificates	1,522,400 00
Certificates of the board of audit	6,858,727 18

Adding to this the unadjusted claims, makes a total of $20,412,855.09.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman whether this is not a proposition to submit to a vote of a people largely made up of colored people who are not property-holders, a proposition to permit them to add to this $20,000,000 debt of the District $600,000 more, which they will come to some future Congress and ask the United States to pay in whole or part? It is simply a question whether Congress chooses to appropriate that amount, for the United States will be called upon to pay it just as surely as we pass the bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. O, there is nothing of that sort. I do not know but that colored men will vote upon the question. If they do, I am not responsible for that. If the gentleman feels it on his conscience, I do not at this time intend to impugn his action heretofore or the opinions which he entertained. This is a proposition to submit the question to the people of the District whether they will divert this sum already subscibed to the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad to the Southern Maryland Railroad. That is the proposition, and that is all there is of it. The people desire this road and request this privilege. I do not know but there may be colored men upon the list of signers to this memorial, if they are among the property-holders, and I see no reason why they may not have the right of petition, since you have made them American citizens, as well as anybody else.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Yes, I did help make them American citizens, and I glory in the fact. I would give them the same rights as to petition and suffrage as are given the whites, but I object to forcing taxation in any such way, and especially in a case when I believe the taxation will ultimately come not on the people of the District alone but the whole people of the United States. And as to the colored voters, I always understood the complaint of the South to be that under impartial suffrage the colored people who own no property impose taxation on the whites who hold all the property, and I thought it singular that my democratic friend from Wisconsin sought to repeat the same thing here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not know but what that is the complaint of the South. But that has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. PELHAM. The complaint of the South is rather that the money which has been voted to railroads is given to them before they are built and is wasted. By this bill the money is not given to the road until it is built from beginning to end.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Then I would say——

Mr. ELDREDGE. I hope my friend will not find fault with this bill nor fail to help us in the passage of it, because it will allow the colored population of the District to vote upon it. I hope that is not his objection to it.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to say that the Government of the United States is responsible for a part of the debt of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I did not say any such thing. I said that if the question of the liability of the Government upon its property and the liability of the District upon its property in the payment of taxes was fairly adjusted, the United States would pay in proportion to the amount and value of its property as well as the District; and I think it ought to.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I understand that this is a proposition to permit the District to increase its indebtedness $600,000.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman misunderstands it then. The District is to be permitted to transfer its subscription to this road and take the bonds of the road, and to be entitled to whatever dividends may be received from it. It is thought by many that this will at once be a paying road, and that instead of costing the District anything it will really add to the revenues of the District. The bill provides that the interest upon the bonds shall be 6 per cent., and that when the dividends are beyond 6 per cent. the surplus shall go to the sinking fund to liquidate the bonds.

Mr. FORT. Did the gentleman ever hear of a case where a subscription of this sort ever yielded any dividends?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I say that it will not increase the liabilities of the District one iota. They have already authorized the subscription of this $600,000 to the Piedmont Railroad Company, and this bill simply allows them to transfer it to the Southern Maryland Railroad Company.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The other has lapsed.

Mr. MERRIAM. Is it not a fact that the Potomac Railroad is now dead?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am told by a gentleman near me that it is not dead. I do not know whether it is alive or dead.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Why not introduce a bill to allow these people to subscribe for this road, and not change from one road to another?

Mr. ELDREDGE. Why does not the gentleman do it himself?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I do not want to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Does the Potomac Railroad antagonize this proposition?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am not aware that it does; I have not heard so. Let me say to the gentleman, if he wants an answer, that this subject has been made public through the newspapers; I have here a paper with a full statement of the case. It has been fully ventilated, and nothing of the kind has been brought to the attention of the committee. It has been pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia ever since the commencement of this session. I think if there had been any antagonism from the source he suggests we certainly should have heard of it. We have heard of nothing of the kind.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the rights of the Piedmont Railroad Company are not forfeited, ought not their rights to be protected in this bill?

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman has asked a question, to which I will say that I do not think the Piedmont Railroad Company desires to avail itself of this subscription. I understand they do not. It is probably too late for them to do so, because the time is about out for them to build their road and avail themselves of this subscription. This proposition requires the Southern Maryland Railroad to be built within two years, and not one cent is to be subscribed or one cent expended in taking a vote until the road is built. I have never seen a bill more completely guarded in all the matters which might suggest the criticism of this House than is the bill now pending. We have endeavored to guard against everything.

Mr. MERRIAM. Allow me to suggest one point. You propose to ask the guarantee of the District of Columbia for this road.

Mr. ELDREDGE. No, sir; we do not propose any such thing. This, however, would probably make them liable.

Mr. MERRIAM. It is equivalent to a guarantee.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman evidently does not understand the case at all, or he would not ask that question. The proposition is to allow the District of Columbia to issue bonds to the railroad company and take its stock.

Mr. MERRIAM. Who is to pay for it?

Mr. ELDREDGE. The bonds of the District are to pay for the stock, and the District is to hold the stock to reimburse itself for the bonds it has issued.

Mr. MERRIAM. In other words, the Government must finally pay for it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. O, no; not anything of the sort; there is nothing of that kind in it.

Mr. MERRIAM. I understand it so.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I cannot help the gentleman's understanding.

Mr. MERRIAM. I understand that whatever guarantees are to be given by the District must come finally out of the United States, to be good for anything.

Mr. ELDREDGE. There is nothing of the sort in this bill.

Mr. POTTER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for five minutes.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the beginning in this District, so far as I know—at any rate it is the first instance within the last six years—of a description of legislation which I think wholly unsound and vicious. I agree that Congress should treat the District of Columbia liberally. But for myself I am utterly opposed to initiating here a system of legislation which has proved in other parts of the country so dangerous and vicious. In the first place, I am opposed on principle to one portion of the people imposing needless burdens for private ends on the whole people without their consent. That is, as I think, absolutely unjust—so unjust, that under no circumstances could I give my consent to it anywhere. The experiment of subscribing public money to private undertakings has often been tried in the States. There have been occasions when there was some excuse or apology for it, such as where the contemplated works would be of general public benefit and could not be completed by private subscriptions. But there is no such excuse for an undertaking like this railway at the present time when capital is so abundant, and here at this great political center of the country. Wherever the experiment has been tried in the States it has been found to work badly. It has tended to encourage the growth of corrupt influences about the Legislature in order to obtain such privileges, and it has been as generally followed by unwise expenditures of the money thus granted. It has on the whole worked so unfavorably that in many of the States of the Union where it was for a time allowed it has been necessary to repeal the permission; and in all the constitutional changes which have recently been made, so far as my attention has been called to them, there has been included a prohibition against State, county, and municipal authorities doing exactly the thing which it is now sought by this bill to initiate here. It is altogether too late, I trust, sir, to attempt any such vicious legislation in this District after the lifetime of experience on the subject we have had in the other portions of the country. For my part, for these reasons, I am absolutely and wholly against this bill without reference to its details, and I hope it will be at once voted down.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, there were—ayes 83, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. GUNCKEL called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

No quorum having voted, tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and Mr. ELDREDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 108, noes not counted.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SCHOOL BUILDING IN GEORGETOWN.

Mr. COTTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4448) making an appropriation for the new school buiding in the city of Georgetown, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that for the purpose of paying for the erection and furnishing of the new school building in the city of Georgetown, District of Columbia, and for putting the grounds in order, there be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $50,865, or so much thereof as may be necessary in addition to the $40,000 which was borrowed by the trustees of the public schools of Georgetown from the Linthicum Institute of Georgetown. The money appropriated is to be disbursed under the supervision of the Commissioners of Education, and is to be regarded as a loan, to be hereafter taken into account between the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I make the point of order that this bill contains an appropriation.

Mr. COTTON. I hope the gentleman will reserve his point until he hears an explanation of the bill. It is a very meritorious measure.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. With the understanding that I do not waive the point of order, I am willing to hear the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. COTTON. The building of this school-house was commenced under an act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia of June 26, 1873. That law provided that the funds should be obtained by mortgage and by anticipating the taxes of the District. The building was commenced; but after it had been partly erected an act was passed which took away from the governor of the District and the local authorities the power to raise money in the manner which had been contemplated. In order to insure the completion of the building, the commissioners of the District, on consultation with the president of the school board of Georgetown, assured the school officers that they would recommend this appropriation; that the building should be proceeded with, so that the work already done might be preserved and that the pupils in Georgetown might have, as early as possible, the use of the building. Upon this assurance of the commissioners the money has been and is being expended. I have here the recommendation of the commissioners and also a communication from the president of the school board explaining this matter. If the gentleman from Ohio will withdraw his point of order, I will have these documents read.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

MASONIC MUTUAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

Mr. COTTON, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4447) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that section 3 of said act be amended to read as follows, beginning after the word "enacted:"

That the number of directors of said association shall be twenty-one, who shall be elected by the members thereof at their annual meeting on the second Tuesday in November in each year, from among themselves, and shall serve as hereinafter provided, that is to say: at the annual election held on the second Tuesday in November, 1875, of the directors then elected, the seven who shall receive the largest number of votes shall serve for three years; the seven receiving the next highest number shall serve for two years; while the seven remaining who shall receive the next highest number shall serve for one year; and seven shall be elected annually thereafter to serve for three years; in all cases of a tie vote, the choice to be determined by lot. And the said directors shall, at their first meeting succeeding the annual meeting of the association, elect one of their number to be president of the board of directors, who shall also be president of the association; and shall elect one of their number as vice-president, and one of their number as secretary, who shall also be secretary of the association; and the said secretary shall give bonds, with surety, to said association, in such sum as the board of directors may require, for the faithful discharge of his duties; and one of their number as treasurer, who shall also give bonds, with surety, to said association, in such sum as the said board of directors may require, for the faithful discharge of his trust.

At all meetings of the board of directors a majority of the board shall form a quorum.

In case of any vacancy in the board of directors by death, resignation, or otherwise, such vacancy shall be filled by the remaining directors from among the members of said association, who shall serve until the next annual meeting of the association, at which time a successor shall be elected to serve for the remainder of the unexpired term.

Mr. COTTON. The only change which this bill makes is in providing for the election of one-third of the directors each year, instead of electing all every year according to the law as it now stands.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COTTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 439) to provide for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co. for services in carrying the United States mails.

GEORGETOWN SCHOOL BUILDING.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill in respect to the Georgetown school building is so important that I now move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of its consideration.

The SPEAKER. If the House goes into committee on this day devoted to the District of Columbia matters, bills relating to the District of Columbia will take precedence of all others.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 13.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WARD, of Illinois, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and as this day is set apart for the business of the District of Columbia, bills relating to other subjects will be passed over. The first District business is a bill (H. R. No. 184) to provide for the better education of the indigent blind of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is an earlier bill than that, one relating to the Washington Monument.

Mr. COTTON. I move that all other business be laid aside for the present in order to take up the Georgetown school-house bill.

The motion was agreed to

The committee then took up for consideration a bill (H. R. No. 4448) making appropriations for a new school building in the city of Georgetown, District of Columbia.

The bill, which was read, provides that for the purpose of paying for the erection and furnishing of the new school building in the city of Georgetown, District of Columbia, and for putting the grounds in order there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,865, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in addition to the $40,000 which was borrowed by the trustees of the public schools of Georgetown from the Linthicum Institute of Georgetown. The money thereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the supervision of the Commissioner of Education, and shall be regarded as a loan to be thereafter taken into account between the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. COTTON. I ask the Clerk to read an extract from a communication of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, dated December 9, 1874.

The Clerk read as follows:

Accompanying this communication will be found a statement from W. W. Curtis, esq., the president of the board of trustees of the public schools, relating to the new school building in Georgetown. From a careful consideration of the subject-matter of the same, the commissioners do not hesitate to recommend the appropriation asked for therein, to wit, $86,865.

Mr. COTTON. I now ask that the Clerk read from the published report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia and accompanying papers a letter of the president of the board of trustees, together with the accompanying statement of the expenses of the Georgetown school building.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 2, 1874.

GENTLEMEN: I deem it my duty to call your attention to the matter of the new school-house in Georgetown, and to request that in your report to Congress, should you consider it deserving of the same, special mention may be made of the matter, to the end that proper relief may be afforded in the premises.

In order to a full understanding of the case, it may be proper to state briefly the history of the enterprise, with a further statement of the present condition of the building.

The wants of Georgetown in the way of school buildings have long been seriously felt. The entire value of school buildings and grounds for white schools in Georgetown, aside from the new building, is estimated at $22,000. These buildings are none of them centrally located, and all are deficient in those conveniences and accommodations which are considered indispensable in modern school buildings. They are filled to overflowing with pupils, and we are now renting two rooms for the purpose of relieving the other schools, besides occupying an old dwelling-house situated on the land bought for the new school-house. The schools are year by year steadily increasing, and further and better accommodations have been for five years a necessity. To meet these wants the project of building a large central school-house was started during the administration of Governor

Cooke. Land was purchased in an excellent locality for the sum of $13,000, a price far below its actual value, and appropriate legislation secured to commence the work.

This legislation embodied an appropriation of $90,000, and also the proportion for the colored schools, in all about $126,000. It authorized the anticipation of taxes and the borrowing of money and creating a building committee, consisting of the governor and the school trustees of Georgetown, to take in charge the erection of the building.

Under this law a plan was adopted and a contract entered into with Mr. S. S. Hunt for the sum of $69,115, and the work was commenced.

The sum of $40,000 was borrowed from the trustees of the Linthicum Institute of Georgetown, with which to meet the first payments on the work, and under the authority of the legislative act before referred to, a special mortgage on the property was given as security therefor.

When this amount was expended it was found to be impossible to secure further means to continue the work, owing to the unsettled state of affairs in the District.

The building at this time was roofed in, but was otherwise unprotected; and in that condition you found it when the government of the District passed into your hands.

Every effort had been made by the building committee and the contractor to hasten the building to an early completion; but the collapse of the late District government left us powerless to raise means to continue the work.

There was no authority of law by which your honorable body could aid us in obtaining by loans sufficient funds to complete the edifice, and the slight school revenues were utterly inadequate to meet more than the current expenses of the schools.

The building was in danger of being injured by the elements, and apart from the pressing need for larger school accommodations there was an urgent necessity for proceeding with the work in order to save the amount already expended.

In view of this necessity, it was agreed upon by the honorable commissioners and the contractor that a small installment, to be taken from the school revenues, should be paid to meet the most pressing wants of the contractor, and an informal assurance was given that the matter should be specially brought before Congress, with a recommendation that an appropriation be made to complete and save the building.

The work has been resumed, and is progressing as satisfactorily as can be expected under these unfavorable circumstances.

I earnestly petition your honorable body to lay the matter before Congress, and to recommend that an appropriation be made to pay off present indebtedness and complete the building, including the heating-apparatus, the gas fixtures, the grading and fencing of the grounds, and the furnishing of the rooms, and the proportionate amount due under the law to the colored schools.

The accompanying detailed statement shows the amount required for this purpose.

It is essential that this be provided at the earliest practicable day, in order to save much that has already been expended, and I cannot too earnestly invoke your good offices in aid of the completion of this work.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. W. CURTIS,
President Board of Trustees.

The Hon. COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Statement of the expenses of the Georgetown school building,

Contract price of building, (exclusive of heating-apparatus, gas-fixtures, and plumbing)	$69,115 00
Heating-apparatus	6,550 00
Plumbing	200 00
Gas fixtures	1,000 00
Furniture, including settees for large hall	4,000 00
Grading and fencing grounds, including building of stone wall, removing old buildings, and fees of architect and superintendent	10,000 00
Proportion due colored schools, (two-fifths)	36,000 00
Total	126,865 00
Amount received from treasurer Linthicum Institute	40,000 00
Balance for which an appropriation is required	86,865 00

Mr. COTTON. The committee will see that the balance is $86,865. That includes $36,000 for colored schools, upon the basis that they are to have two-fifths of any appropriation made for white schools; but as this appropriation is made to meet an emergency, to complete this school building and to be voted by Congress and not in the ordinary way, the committee decided to omit the $36,000 from this bill and only to give $50,000 required for the completion of this school building and put it in the form of a loan. What that may amount to in the future I of course cannot say. We first thought of providing this should be reimbursed from the school taxes in Georgetown, but we were informed by the commissioners they are needed to sustain the schools there, and that to provide the school taxes should be taken to reimburse the Government for this appropriation would cripple the schools there. We then saw no other way to provide for its payment than that it should be a loan, to be returned in the future. We provide only for the $50,000 required to complete and furnish this new school building.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COTTON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I see that the phraseology of the bill is that an appropriation is made of $50,000, in addition to $40,000 borrowed by the trustees. I wish to know what the committee intend shall be the force of that expression.

Mr. COTTON. The intention is that this shall be an appropriation of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in addition to the $40,000 borrowed by the trustees from the Linthicum Institute. I have endeavored to draught the bill carefully so that no more should be appropriated by Congress than is necessary.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why is there any need to make any allusion to that $40,000?

Mr. COTTON. For this reason: We appropriate this sum of $50,865, or so much thereof as may be necessary to accomplish this purpose, and it may be that a portion of this money can be saved.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understand that the $40,000 has been all expended.

Mr. COTTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. We cannot touch that in any way. Then why refer to it at all?

Mr. COTTON. For this reason: Instead of saying we give money for the school-house, and its furnishing, &c., we say we give enough to complete the building and furnish it, in addition to the $40,000. The bill says we give $50,865, or so much thereof as may be needed to accomplish the work, in addition to the $40,000. The whole of the $50,865 may not be required. It is to make up the balance over and above the $40,000. So we thought it necessary to specify that we give in addition to that the amount necessary to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The gentleman speaks of school taxes. How are the school taxes of Georgetown now raised?

Mr. COTTON. The gentleman from Vermont no doubt understands that at present there is really no system for levying taxes in this District. There will be a bill presented, I understand, from the commissioners, before Congress adjourns, to provide a mode of levying and collecting taxes in the District. The law passed during last session abolished all former laws in respect to taxes, and levied a certain percentage at that time, but for the future a new law is necessary to collect taxes both for school purposes and for ordinary purposes.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Do the committee propose to put into the law a requirement that this shall be repaid from the District taxes?

Mr. COTTON. We have not put that into the bill, for the reason that this appropriation is made for a particular emergency, in one locality of the District, Georgetown, and we have not determined the proportion as between the Government and the District, which can be adjusted in the future. The money is needed and we see no way to provide it except by the mode proposed in the bill, providing also that it shall be taken into account in making the adjustment between the Government and the District.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Inasmuch as it seems to me that the phraseology of the bill is susceptible of misapprehension, and as I cannot see any good purpose to be served by putting into it the expression to which I have called the attention of the committee, I move to strike out the words "in addition to the $40,000 borrowed," &c. I do not see that this adds anything to the force of the clause, unless it be an inference that we appropriate that sum also.

Mr. COTTON. The bill has been carefully drawn to avoid that inference. It has been framed to give enough in addition to that money to pay for the school buildings.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will the Clerk read that portion of the bill?

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $50,865, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in addition to the $40,000 which was borrowed by the trustees of the public schools of Georgetown from the Linthicum Institute of Georgetown.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Now read it as it will be without the words which I have moved to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose of paying for the erection and furnishing of the new school building in Georgetown, District of Columbia, and for putting the grounds in order, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,865, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. That is all that is needed. I move to strike out these words:

In addition to the $40,000 which was borrowed by the trustees of the public schools of Georgetown from the Linthicum Institute of Georgetown.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I ask the Clerk to read what follows.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the money hereby appropriated shall be disbursed under the supervision of the Commissioner of Education, and shall be regarded as a loan, to be hereafter taken into account between the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. COTTON. I see no occasion for the motion of the gentleman from Vermont. If adopted, it will leave the bill a little obscure.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, it was agreed to.

Mr. COTTON. I move that the bill, as amended, be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The next District bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3249) to provide for the completion of the Washington monument.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that that bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. FORT. Why has that bill not been read?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I have asked that the bill be passed over informally, so that we may reach the bill to incorporate the Louise Home. Of course I feel great interest in the bill providing for the completion of the Washington Monument.

Mr. FORT. What is the objection to having it read?

Mr. CHIPMAN. It will take time, which is valuable to us to-day, and I think there is no hope of passing it to-day.

The bill was passed over informally.

THE LOUISE HOME.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4445) to incorporate the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the reading of the bill be dispensed with. It has already been read to-day in the House.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object to dispensing with the reading of the bill. Let it be read in the committee also.

The bill was read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I would like to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill a question.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I will hear it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is it the law now, or has it been, that property in this District that is devoted to charitable purposes is exempted from taxation?

Mr. CHIPMAN. It is, by a law of Congress.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then I do not care to move, as I had thought of doing, to strike out the second section; but inasmuch as under this act as it now stands this exemption will become permanent, so that it could not be reached by subsequent legislation, I move to add to the bill the following section:

SEC. 3. This act shall be subject to the action of future Congresses, to be altered, amended, and repealed, as the public good may require.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement of half a minute in relation to this bill. It provides for the incorporation of what is known as the Louise Home, situated on Massachusetts avenue, near the Fourteenth-street circle. It is a private charity of Mr. Corcoran, which he has provided for, and before he departs this life he has a feeling of solicitude about placing this worthy charity on some legal foundation, and I trust that the House will pass this bill, understanding, as it undoubtedly does, the worthy object embodied in it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection to the bill, provided the gentleman will strike out that clause which exempts this property from taxation.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I must certainly object to that. Under an act of Congress, which I cannot cite at this moment but to which I can refer the gentleman, it is provided that all charitable institutions in this District shall be exempt from taxation, and I do not see any reason why this charity, which is a private one, should be discriminated against, when we exempt public charities that are supported by public funds.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will tell you why. This is the difference. All the people of the United States support various charities, such as asylums for the insane, lying-in hospitals, and various other charities for the District of Columbia, and the amount divided among the whole people of the United States is no great burden; but I am opposed to the exemption of this property from taxation because it is a private charity, and because the trustees can say who can get into it and who cannot. If everybody could go into it, then I would be for exempting it from taxation; but, sir, the law of the District of Columbia is that property shall be taxed at its market value, and then there is an addition of 3 per cent. taxation in the law. This being so, I think it rather hard for any gentleman to take a large estate out from taxation by calling it a private charity, when it may be for the support of their own friends.

Now, I have not the slightest objection to the bill and will favor it with all my might, provided you strike out that exemption from taxation. My belief upon that subject can be expressed in two or three words. I hold that nothing ought to be exempt from taxation that the whole body of the people cannot freely enjoy. Everything supported by taxation should be enjoyed freely by all. Therefore, if I had my way, I never would have a church exempted from taxation unless its seats were free to all. Hospitals, colleges, schools; anything that all can enjoy may always be supported by taxation or aided by exemption from taxation. But in the case of an institution into which one man can go and another cannot, which one man can enjoy the benefit of and an other man cannot, I am against its being exempt from taxation; and I shall feel it my duty to oppose this bill unless that provision be stricken out. It is undemocratic, unrepublican, and unjust.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the Delegate from the District of Columbia will allow me, I desire to say a word upon the point made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. CHIPMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It seems to me that although the principle suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts may be right, the case which he puts, that if a church is free to all one man can go in as well as another, is to determine the propriety or impropriety of taxation, that argument answers itself. There is no church in the District of Columbia or anywhere else into which everybody can go.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I know that; what I said was that the seats should be free.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It does not make any difference whether the church belongs to one denomination or another; the capacity of the church itself prevents every one from using it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I agree to that. What I said was that I would not have any church exempted from taxation in which seats were not free to all.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman said unless they were open and free to everybody.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Now, that mere fact would not enable every tax-payer to enjoy the benefits of this church, because every tax-payer cannot get in.

Mr. RANDALL. But all would have an equal right to do so.

Mr. ELDREDGE. This matter of equal rights is not one of much importance in such a case as this.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. These galleries are open to all, but everybody cannot get in at once.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Well, I see almost everybody here.

Mr. CHIPMAM. I yield now for a moment to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. POTTER. In regard of the exemption of churches from taxation, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to say anything now, but in regard of private charitable institutions I do take exactly the opposite view from that suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

As to public charities, it is not material whether they be exempted from taxation or not, because, being the property of the State or of municipalities, if they are taxed the money would only go back into the same fund that it came out of. They, therefore, furnish no rule for action in respect of private charities. In regard to private charities, the gentleman from Massachusetts says that they ought not to be exempted from taxation, because they are not open to everybody. It seems to me that is not a wise rule to apply to such institutions. Take this very case. Here was a property of no great value which belonged to this gentleman, as it was, it was exposed to but little taxation. He saw fit to donate it to what seems to me to be a very wise and munificent charity and to erect upon it an expensive building for a home for elderly women; a charity which it seems to me is greatly needed. Nobody else in this section of the country was willing, or if willing was as able, as Mr. Corcoran, to do this. Now that it has been made valuable for a charitable purpose, why should it not be exempted from taxation? Are not such charities worth at least that much encouragement. Men will be less willing to give their fortunes to such wise measures for public good if they are to find their gifts taxed as if private property.

In my own State we always exempt such institutions from taxation, and with good effect. I take leave to think the exemption is not unrepublican, although about what is now called republicanism I cannot speak so well as the gentleman from Massachusetts; but that such exemption is not undemocratic I am perfectly clear. Such institutions are for the public good, even if not controlled by the public authorities. Indeed, they are usually more wisely managed in private hands. But, although in private hands, they are for public ends, and ought, as it seems to me, to be exempted from the burdens of ordinary taxation.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. In reply to that, I ask simply if all old ladies who want to go into this institution can do so, or is it limited to Mr. Corcoran's particular friends?

Mr. POTTER. That will possibly depend upon how many old ladies there are.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Under the deed of trust that is left to the board of trustees to determine.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is a close corporation of four or five men. It is exactly like one which was established in my State. The merchants in a certain town set up a charity for indigent women. The merchants subscribed largely to it and the people gave to it. It turned out it was only a contrivance by which the merchants supported the widows of their sea-captains, which they would have had to do if they had not set up this charity. The only difference between that and the one in New York was, that in New York they supported those who were not widows.

Mr. CHIPMAN. That case is not in point.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think, as a matter of principle and a matter of fair administration, we ought not here, on the one side, devote one hour of the day to allowing the people to tax themselves for a railroad so as to make their property more valuable, and then the next hour take taxes off of certain property, when the very thing they complain most about is that the United States has so much untaxed property here that their taxes amount almost to confiscation—3 per cent. of the market value of the property. Such a thing as that never was heard of in regard to any other community.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think Louisiana is another case where the tax is 3 per cent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the bill by striking out the second section exempting this property from taxation.

Mr. CHIPMAN. This question of taxation in the District is coming before this House in a bill that will bring up the whole subject, including churches and charitable institutions. The amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] provides that this bill shall be subject to future change and alteration by Congress. His idea is to leave this point open. I think we should not attempt to settle this question upon this one bill, but allow the question to come up and the House to act upon it when they come to consider the whole District matter.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Here is a most munificent charity given by a gentleman out of his own private fortune. It seems to me the people of this District would prefer that this property should be free from taxation. Notwithstanding there may be perhaps a little exclusiveness in the benefits of the institution, so far as regards the objects of this charity, I apprehend the people of this District would gladly pay the taxes, as a small token of their respect for the gentleman who gave them this institution; it is but little to do. And I apprehend the trustees will extend the charity to the full extent of the accommodations which they can furnish; and that so far as that is concerned, it will not be a private charity, but only limited by its capacity. I understand that the building is to be enlarged to the extent of the alley, which is appropriated by this bill for its use. It is proposed, not that the alley shall be given to the institution, but that it shall be purchased for a fair price, and either the money paid to the adjoining property-holders or applied to the charity itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which is to strike out section 2. The Clerk will read the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the buildings and grounds connected therewith, and all property held by said trustees for the purposes of said trust, on the square numbered 196, shall be free from all taxes and assessment by the municipal authorities or by the United States so long as the same shall be held and used for the purposes of said trust.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move to amend the amendment for the purpose of saying one word more. It is true that the gentleman who has given this large property to the people of this District for the benefit of this charity is understood to be a rich man. And undoubtedly while he lives he could pay the taxes without any inconvenience, and probably would do so without any objection. This is a perpetual gift. The purpose is to have this corporation live forever and furnish the means of support for the class of individuals intended to be provided for.

Now, if the taxes are to be paid by the institution, then, after bestowing this magnificent gift, Mr. Corcoran must provide for the perpetual payment of taxes, must put some other portion of his property in a position where it will meet the yearly liability of the institution for taxation. Now, for the exemption from tax the District, I think, gets an equivalent, and more than an equivalent, in the fact that Mr. Corcoran by this charity provides for taking care of indigent old ladies who might otherwise call upon the District for their support. It is unjust, at least it is ungracious, to insist upon the payment of taxes. It seems to me it is a case about like this: a gentleman sees fit to give to another a good horse; and the latter will not take the horse nor thank him for it unless he provides for its keep.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. How are inmates admitted to the institution?

Mr. ELDREDGE. That is to be under the regulation of trustees; and I suppose rules will be prescribed by which the institution will be occupied to its full capacity.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. By whom are the trustees to be appointed?

Mr. ELDREDGE. They are appointed now; they are named in the deed of trust.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. How are their successors to be appointed?

Mr. CHIPMAN. The trustees are to write the names of two persons upon the records of the institution; and these persons upon the death or resignation of any trustee are to be taken in their order to fill the vacancy; so that the public will know at all times who the successors are to be.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the persons provided for by this charity are not supported in this institution, then they must be supported out of the public funds of the District.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. By no means.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman says "by no means." Perhaps he knows what the circumstances of the inmates of this institution may be. I do not know, except that they are indigent, and persons I suppose who have no proper support from their relatives and no means of gaining support for themselves.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. How is this charity to be perpetuated?

Mr. ELDREDGE. By this act of incorporation this is to be a perpetual corporation. I believe corporations of this kind are considered as immortal.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Those trustees who are now appointed are, as I understand, to elect their successors.

Mr. CHIPMAN. In the manner I have indicated.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The difficulty with the argument of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] is that there is no provision in the bill as to who shall be supported in the institution. It provides that four gentlemen who are named, Mr. Carlisle, Mr. Riggs, Mr. Hall, and Mr. Hyde shall be—

Created and constituted a body politic and corporate in law, by the name and style of the trustees of the Louise Home; and by that name may sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, have perpetual succession, and shall and may take, hold, manage, and dispose of, at all times, real and personal estate, and shall and may do and perform all other acts and things necessary or appropriate for the execution of the trusts created and conferred on them in and by a certain deed from William W. Corcoran, of said city of Washington, to them, the said parties hereinbefore named, which is dated on the 21st day of November, 1869, and was recorded on the 15th day of December, 1870, in liber No. 630, beginning at folio 458, one of the land records of the county of Washington, in the District aforesaid, to which reference is hereby made for greater certainty; the intent of this charter of incorporation being that the same shall be in execution of the trusts in said deed declared and set forth, and not to any other intent or purpose whatever.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman will find in the deed a more specific description of the persons to be admitted and the duties of the trustees in the admission of those persons entitled to the benefits of the institution.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, Now, then, Mr. Corcoran selects the trustees, the trustees select the successors, and these select the inmates forever.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Well, now, what is the objection to that?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will tell you.

Mr. CHIPMAN. All charities are based upon a system of discrimination. You have charities for colored people; you have charities for soldiers; you have private charities; and if the donor in a case like this has not the right to indicate the individuals to receive the benefits of the charity, I cannot understand who has?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I agree that he has. I do not object to this donor indicating anybody on earth to receive the benefits of his money; but he has no right to wring money out of me for taxation in order that he may carry out his peculiar wishes.

Mr. CHIPMAN. If the charity is not a worthy one, that point is good.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is worthy or not, precisely according to how it is executed; and in this case the public are to have no control of the distribution, while they have to contribute toward it. That is the difficulty. Now, if we are to be taxed to pay for this charity, then let us have a chance to say who shall go into the institution. My friend from Wisconsin says that if not supported in this institution, these people must be maintained by the District of Columbia. Non constat—that does not appear. The institution may take people from all over the country; it may be a sort of home for decayed gentility. I have heard of such things. Of course Mr. Corcoran may have it just what he pleases to make it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think that the deed of trust provides that the inmates shall be indigent persons of the District.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He may have it just what he wants it; but when he asks me to pay for it, or help pay for it, I want to have some hand in its management.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I wish only to say this, Mr. Corcoran is a very generous man, and if this House decides that of all the charities in this city his charity alone shall pay a tax, he will do it I have no doubt very cheerfully. But my point is, that until this question is settled by some general law, this charity should stand upon the same basis as all other charities. The law of Congress provides today that all charitable institutions shall be exempt from taxation. Why then discriminate against this one?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will tell you why. Because of the——

Mr. CHIPMAN. I agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts in his general principle, but do not let him discriminate against this charity now.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not; I do not mean to. All the other charities in this District are public charities. That is the difference between them and this. This is a private charity, in which this gentleman——

Mr. CHIPMAN. Let me cite the gentleman from Massachusetts to an instance. I am not myself familiar with the law incorporating the Smithsonian Institution, but that is exempted from taxation. It was not originated by an American citizen at all, but by a foreigner to whom we owed nothing.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. It receives contributions from all parts of the world.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That institution was established for the diffusion of knowledge among all men.

Mr. CHIPMAN. This may become as useful.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. But are not the inmates selected from one section of country?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I do not know how that is. I only know that a citizen of the District of Columbia proposes to give out of his own means to establish this charity for indigent old ladies—call them respectable, if you please, but for indigent old ladies. I do not care where the inmates come from, it is a charity for so many indigent old ladies.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Such as Mr. Corcoran chooses.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Such as Mr. Corcoran chooses.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let him pay, then; he has a right to do it.

Mr. CHIPMAN. It is his own money which he proposes to give for the establishment of this charity.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But he asks you to pay; he asks me.

Mr. CHIPMAN. No.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He asks everybody.

Mr. CHIPMAN. The point I make, Mr. Chairman, is not as to the merit of this institution, but that you should not discriminate against this charity.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We do not discriminate. It is the only private charity here.

Mr. CHIPMAN. There are other private charities here in charge of various churches.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We ought to repeal the law, then, as to them.

Mr. CHIPMAN. There are half a dozen charities under church organizations. What is the difference between them and this charity?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They are open to everybody. If they are not, if you will show me one not open to all, I will go for the repeal of the law in reference to them.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. What one is exempted from taxation?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let me reply to my friend from the District of Columbia. If all the charities are exempted from taxation under the law, and this is a like charity, why do you bring it here at all?

Mr. CHIPMAN. It is not incorporated.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But it will be.

Mr. CHIPMAN. It is now under a deed of trust, and before the donor dies he wishes to have it incorporated and under the protection of law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He will get it incorporated and, if like the other charities here, it will be exempted from taxation. Why is it not exempt if like all the other charities here?

Mr. CHIPMAN. Because he provides for it and these others are asking you for money.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. What one is exempt from taxation in this District?

Mr. CHIPMAN. You make appropriations every year for them.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. What one is there?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I can name half a dozen.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. They are under the management of churches and other corporations.

Mr. COX. Do not let us look a gift horse in the mouth.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I can refer to the Children's Hospital and to the Soldiers' Orphans' Hospital.

Mr. COTTON. Let us have a vote.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Chairman, there is a good deal of plausibility in the position assumed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] and if the same principle is asserted by this House and carried out honestly and fairly to all the other institutions of the District it will be more far-reaching than the gentleman intends. It will require us, at all events, to revise much of the legislation we have adopted for the government of this District for several years past. We have on several occasions granted aid by Congress to different charitable corporations under the control of different churches in this District, and we have justified ourselves in thus using the public money and placing it under the control of sectarian institutions, as they are called, upon the ground that these institutions, under whatever management they may be, relieve the demand upon the general charities of the District to that extent, and therefore are to be encouraged. I see no difficulty, no objection to applying this rule to the particular charity under consideration. It is a charity pure and simple, and as such I am willing to vote to exempt it from taxation, as we have similar charitable institutions, under whatever management they may be, for the reason that whatever number of persons this institution may continue to support will relieve the demand upon the charities of this District to that extent. I care nothing about a discrimination as to the particular classes of people that shall enter the institution. That is a matter as to which the gentleman who provides so munificently for this institution can judge for himself.

Why, sir, if the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] shall obtain, then we ought not to exempt from taxation the public school-houses of the District, because under present regulations colored children are not allowed to attend school in those buildings. I desire to know of the gentleman from Massachusetts if, to carry out his position, because colored children are excluded from the public schools, he would tax those public schools?

Mr. COTTON. They are free schools.

Mr. NIBLACK. They are not free to everybody as long as colored children are not admitted. According to the theory of the gentleman from Massachusetts they ought to be liable to taxation.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman desire an answer from me?

Mr. NIBLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Public schools are supported at the public expense. What, then, would be the use of taxing them? If you do, you would only take money out of one pocket and put it into the other. My position applies to institutions of an entirely different class, as a church, for instance, where a man says, "You cannot go into that pew, it belongs to me;" and yet says, "Exempt us from taxation."

Mr. NIBLACK. This is not a parallel case. Here is a fund set apart as a charity; and the question is, Shall we diminish this fund by imposing taxes on it? As a matter of public policy I am opposed to it. I am in favor of encouraging everybody who can afford it to make provisions of that sort. I am against taxing any institution whose sole object is charity.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, to strike out the second section of the bill, there were—ayes 52, noes 76; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN under the rule ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. CHIPMAN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 89.

So the motion to strike out the section was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. CHIPMAN'S motion to lay the bill aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COTTON. I move that the committee rise and report to the House the bills on which favorable action has been taken.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARD, of Illinois, reported that the committee of the whole House had had under consideration sundry bills relating to affairs of the District of Columbia, and had directed him to report the same to the House, with the recommendation that they do pass with certain amendments.

THE LOUISE HOME.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 4445) to incorporate the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes, with amendments.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW SCHOOL BUILDING IN GEORGETOWN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. No. 4448) making an appropriation for a new school building in the city of Georgetown, District of Columbia, with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COTTON. I call the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question being taken on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, there were—ayes 52, noes 29; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. COTTON, and Mr. SMITH, of Ohio.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 103, noes not counted.

Mr. LAWRENCE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request comes too late. The engrossed bill has been read.

The bill was passed.

Mr. COTTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that the House do now adjourn; but before the motion is put I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The Committee on the District of Columbia have not yet got through with their reports.

The SPEAKER. They are entitled to the entire day.

Mr. ELDREDGE. There are several bills of importance to the District which the committee desire to report.

MEDICAL SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. COTTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4449) to amend an act entitled "An act to revive with amendments 'An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia,' approved July 7, 1838;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill amends an act entitled "An act to revive, with amendments, An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, which was approved July 7, 1838," by striking out in the third section thereof the word "gentlemen," and inserting instead thereof the word "persons."

Mr. COTTON. I can state in a word the object of this bill. The present act authorizes the licensing of "gentlemen"—gentlemen only—to practice medicine. We propose to amend it by substituting the word "persons," so as to admit lady practitioners to be licensed.

The following is the third section of the act of 1838, which it is proposed to amend:

SEC. 3. That it shall and may be lawful for the said medical society, or any number of them attending, (not less than seven,) to elect by ballot five persons, residents of the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to grant licenses to such medical and chirurgical gentlemen as they may, upon a full examination, judge qualified to practice the medical and chirurgical arts, or as may produce a diploma from some respectable medical college or society, each person so obtaining a certificate to pay a sum not exceeding ten dollars, to be fixed on or ascertained by the society.

I desire to submit with my remarks a memorial by two ladies, practicing physicians in the District, praying for the passage of this bill. It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, practicing physicians in the District of Columbia, respectfully submit the following petition, and pray that the honorable bodies will take such action as is necessary to protect them in their rights:

We are graduates of medicine from a regular college chartered by Congress, but owing to the fact that we are women are kept from practicing our profession legally by reason of a charter granted to the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, A. D. 1838, which charter empowers said society to grant license only to medical and chirurgical "gentlemen." By reason of this act we are denied the privilege of consultation, cannot legally collect our fees, and are refused proper recognition as physicians.

We therefore pray that the charter of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia be so amended as to allow all persons graduates from any regularly chartered medical institution to practice the profession legally.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1875.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COTTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POTOMAC AND MOUNT PLEASANT RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HENDEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported (as a substitute for the bill H. R. No. 4181) a bill (H. R. No. 4450) to incorporate the Potomac and Mount Pleasant Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk commenced to read the substitute.

Mr. COTTON. This is a very long bill, and is in the usual form of bills incorporating horse railroad companies. I suggest that unless some gentleman desires to hear the bill read the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; that will not do.

Mr. ELDREDGE. There is every guard and restriction in this bill that has ever been put in a bill of this character. The committee examined it very carefully and put in all the usual guards.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the bill can only be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I never heard of passing a bill without its being read at all.

Mr. POTTER. No such bill can pass this House without being read, if I can help it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER. That motion is always in order.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I make that motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. These bills have been pending before the Committee on the District of Columbia for a long time, and I hope the House will not adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the House adjourn now this bill will come up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will yield to me to introduce a bill.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to give a notice to the House simply.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order!

MARIE P. EVANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House an additional report of the commissioners of claims, on the claim of Marie P. Evans, of Orleans Parish, Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from Lieutenant Wheeler, relative to the geographical survey west of the one hundredth meridian; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COALING STATION IN MARYLAND.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the report of the board of naval officers appointed in compliance with House resolution of April 13, 1874, to inquire as to the expediency of establishing at the harbor of St. Mary's River, in Maryland, a naval coaling station; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to give notice to the House that, as soon as the Indian appropriation bill shall have been disposed of, I will move to go into Committee of the Whole on House bill No. 2978, to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes; and I ask that a substitute for that bill which I send to the Clerk's desk be printed, and also printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the motion to print was agreed to.

The following is the substitute referred to by Mr. KELLOGG:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on and after July 1, 1875, the organization of the Treasury Department, and the several offices thereof, and the annual salaries paid to the persons therein, shall be as follows, to wit:

In the office of the Secretary of the Treasury:

The Secretary, $8,000; two assistant secretaries, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; one chief of division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations, $3,000; seven chiefs of division, at $2,800 each; eight assistant chiefs of division, at $2,400 each; two disbursing clerks, at $2,800 each; twenty-five clerks of class four; stenographer to the Secretary, $2,400; twenty-six clerks of class three; twenty-one clerks of class two; eighteen clerks of class one; thirty-one clerks, at $900 each; eleven messengers, and eleven laborers; one clerk of class four and one clerk of class one, to assist the chief clerk in superintending the building; one captain of the watch, $1,400; one engineer, $1,600; one machinist and gas-fitter, $1,200; one store-keeper, $1,400; sixty watchmen, at $720 each, and additional to two of said watchmen, acting as lieutenants of watchmen, $280 each; twenty-five laborers, at $720 each; one assistant engineer, $1,000; nine firemen, at $720 each; and ninety char-women, at $180 each.

In the construction branch of the Treasury:

Supervising Architect, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,500; one photographer, $2,500; one principal clerk, at $2,400; two clerks, at $2,000 each; one assistant photographer, at $1,600; two clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; two clerks of class one; two clerks, at $900 each; and one messenger.

In the office of the First Comptroller:

The First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,800; four chief clerks of division, $2,400 each; six clerks of class four; twelve clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; five clerks of class one; six clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and three laborers.

In the office of the Second Comptroller:

The Second Comptroller, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,800; four chiefs of division, at $2,400 each; eight clerks of class four; seventeen clerks of class three; eighteen clerks of class two; twelve clerks of class one; ten clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and three laborers.

In the office of the Commissioner of Customs:

The Commissioner of Customs, $4,500; deputy commissioner, $2,500; three clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; nine clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer.

In the office of the First Auditor:

OVERCHARGE OF DUTIES ON TONNAGE AND IMPORTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4451) to provide a judicial remedy for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CHIPMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4452) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. ATKINS, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. WILLARD, of Michigan: Papers relating to the claim of Frederick W. Smith, of Jackson, Michigan, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 19, 1875.

Prayer by the Rev. E. D. OWEN, D. D., of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory, asking aid in the completion of the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory, praying for the establishment of a mail-route from Lake Kampeska, the terminus of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, by James River, to Ashmore, on the Missouri River; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the memorial of Captain Alexander C. Rhind, now on the active list of the Navy, praying to be restored to his proper position on the Navy Register next below Captain Aaron K. Hughes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of Levi P. Wright, and Dennis O'Neal & Co., praying an amendment of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia," so that they may receive pay for sweeping the streets, avenues, and alleys of the city of Washington, out of any money in the District treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same as other ordinary municipal expenses are now paid; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I present the memorial of the National Association for the Relief of Colored Women and Children. They represent that the number of inmates in the asylum now is as large as it has been heretofore; that their building is an old wooden building requiring considerable repair, and that the District government here having been superseded by the National Government, they are now thrown upon the National Government for the same amount of aid that was given them last year. They represent that the utter wretchedness of so many poor, homeless, disowned colored children commends this institution to the charitable not only, but to the nation, whose freed ones they are, and whose condition, until they obtain some recognized status in society, must be ameliorated in extreme cases by some well-organized and responsible association. Hundreds, after having their education commenced and their habits well directed, have found good homes, making themselves useful and respected. They ask that the same appropriation shall be made which was made last year, the sum of $10,000. I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of August Fleck and 110 others, praying for a liberal appropriation for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition numerously signed by citizens of Dubuque, Bellevue, Dyersville, and Comanche, Iowa, in favor of granting aid for the improvement of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, transmitting an estimate of appropriation required for the Indian service in Colorado, to pay expenses incurred in negotiating with the Utes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, transmitting an estimate of appropriation required to pay a balance due James W. Terrill, as disbursing agent for the North Carolina Cherokees; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, transmitting an estimate of appropriation required for the civilization of Indians of the central superintendency; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARVEY presented a petition of citizens of Colorado Territory, praying the Senate to pass House bill No. 3281, providing that lands granted to any railroad company which remain unpatented by neglect or refusal of such company shall be subject to taxation the same as other lands belonging to individuals; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I present a memorial of Ira H. Owen and 400 others, citizens of Michigan, protesting against the ratification of the so-called reciprocity treaty. The heading of this memorial is so short and the signers are of such character that I ask to have the memorial read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned, your memorialists, would respectfully protest against the ratification of the so-called reciprocity treaty with Canada.

First. They believe its effect would be to discriminate against our own manufacturers of those articles admitted free, inasmuch as the Canadian producer is free from the onerous taxation of our people, which enhances the cost of our production.

Second. They believe its effect would be to build up a manufacturing empire in British America, along the border, and to paralyze our great manufacturing industries, throwing out of employment a large number of workmen, or compelling them to accept the Canadian scale of wages.

Third. They believe it would retard emigration from Canada to the United States, and attract capital and emigration from the United States to Canada.

Fourth. Finally, that it would postpone indefinitely the time of annexation of British America to the United States, as the Canadians would have acquired all the benefits accruing from annexation without assuming any of the burdens resulting therefrom.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. This memorial is signed by so many of our influential business men of Michigan that I asked for its reading. I now move that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON presented additional papers in relation to the application of William Cash for compensation for the use of his property in Kentucky by United States troops in 1862; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALCORN presented a memorial of the State Grange of Mississippi Patrons of Husbandry, praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Pascagoula, Mississippi, and that Pascagoula be made a port of entry; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Anson Atwood be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Patents.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1063) to amend and re-enact section 44 of an act to reduce internal taxes, approved June 6, 1872, reported adversely thereon, and recommended its indefinite postponement.

Mr. SARGENT. Under the new rule, perhaps such bills had better go on the Calendar, and we can indefinitely postpone them when they are reached in the call of the Calendar. Now, it might lead to some discussion on the motion for indefinite postponement, and thus cut short the committee, who have a right to the morning hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it does not lead to any debate, we had better not load the Calendar with it. Nobody wishes to discuss this.

Mr. WRIGHT. I hope my friend from California will not insist on the rule where there is no objection to the report of the committee.

Mr. SARGENT. I will not insist on it.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am also instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3628) for the relief of owners and purchasers of lands sold for direct taxes in insurrectionary States, and for other purposes, to report it back with amendments. There is a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which explains the action of the committee; and in order that the question may be the more readily before the Senate when the bill shall be called up, I move that this letter be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 979) for the relief of First Lieutenant Henry Jackson, Seventh Cavalry, United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph H. Colton, of New York, praying that the Government will adopt the necessary measures to compel the government of Bolivia to compensate him for the engraving and printing of maps of Bolivia, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1156) for the relief of Joseph H. Colton.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 995) for the construction of a military wagon-road from Sidney, Nebraska, to the posts at the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 622) for the relief of John J. Shepheard, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Francis J. Comstock, praying compensation for hay used by the United States Army in 1865, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1157) to authorize persons unjustly deprived of their property in Utah Territory prior to 1860 to bring suit therefor in the courts; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying memorial of John M. Hockaday, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have received and been requested by the parties interested to introduce a bill. I know nothing of its merits.

Leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1158) to incorporate the Corcoran Square Market Company; and it was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1159) to amend the fourteenth section of the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1160) relative to the steamers Philo Parsons and Island Queen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. OGLESBY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1161) in relation to school lands; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY OFFICERS MUSTERED OUT OF SERVICE.

Mr. LOGAN. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 588) approving the action taken by the Secretary of War under the act approved July 15, 1870, have had the same under consideration and have directed me to report that the Senate non-concur in the amendment of the House and ask for a committee of conference. I submit that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the committee, and Messrs. LOGAN, WADLEIGH, and RANSOM were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. MORTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That three thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the amendment of the Constitution in respect to the election of President and Vice-President be printed for the use of the Senate.

DEBATE ON APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business the Chair will call upon the Committee on Appropriations for business.

Mr. SARGENT. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. MORRILL, of Maine] last evening before the adjournment submitted a resolution with reference to debate on appropriation bills. On the part of the chairman of the committee, who is absent, I call up that resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California calls up the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Maine. The Secretary will read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time to move a recess, and, pending an appropriation bill, to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, and such motion shall be decided without debate.

Mr. BAYARD. There were two resolutions submitted yesterday, one by the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] and the other by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL.] I ask the Senator from California, if he has no objection, that the resolution which I send to the desk be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us determine on taking it up first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from California will be read, as requested by the Senator from Delaware.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time to move a recess, and, pending an appropriation bill, to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, and such motions shall be decided without debate, and no amendment to any such bill making legislative provisions other than such as directly relate to the appropriations contained in the bill shall be received.

Mr. CONKLING. Is the resolution before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California, to take up the resolution submitted yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SARGENT. I presumed that it was the privilege of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations under the rule to call up this resolution for action, as it relates to the dispatch of the appropriation bills. If I am in error with reference to that, I suppose the question will come up first on taking up the resolution, but with the idea that it come up under the rule I had asked that it might be considered. I submit that for the consideration of the Chair.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to hear the decision of the Chair on that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from California to move to take up the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution comes up of itself this morning, it having laid over for one day.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from California if this resolution is reported from the Committee on Appropriations or is it offered by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. SARGENT. It was offered by the chairman of the committee, for the purpose of expediting the business of disposing of the appropriation bills. I claim for it no higher privilege than that; and I supposed it came up by its own force, as it was laid over yesterday until this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the resolution came from the committee. It appears now that it comes merely from the chairman of the committee; and therefore the Chair rules that it is necessary to make a motion to take it up for consideration. The Senator from California has made the motion, and that is the question before the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. What is the exact resolution before us?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time to move a recess, and, pending an appropriation bill, to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, and such motion shall be decided without debate.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, before this resolution of the Senator from Maine was moved by the Senator from California, the Senator from California had prepared another resolution similar in its objects and in accordance with the resolution adopted at the last session of Congress, which I sent to the Clerk's desk just now and had read. I now move that it be substituted for the resolution before the Senate. I believe the clerk has already read it.

The two resolutions are almost identical in words, excepting that the resolution of the Senator from California, which I think had better be substituted for the resolution of the Senator from Maine, goes further and confines amendments to matters germane to the appropriation bills. After the limitation of debate and the provision as to a motion for a recess it goes further and says, "No amendment to any such bill making legislative provisions other than such as directly relate to the appropriations contained in the bill shall be received." This was the form of resolution adopted a year ago; and it occurs to me if, for the expedition of business, if it be deemed desirable by the Senate to adopt such a rule now, we should follow the language of the resolution of last year, which is very much the same as that used in the resolution offered by the Senator from California. I therefore move the resolution of the Senator from California as a substitute for that of the Senator from Maine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware moves to amend the resolution pending before the Senate by the substitution of what has been sent to the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the substitute offered by the Senator from Delaware for the resolution of the Senator from Maine read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand correctly, the rule now provides that amendments in the nature of legislation cannot be offered by any Senator to appropriation bills, and I submit to the Senator from Delaware that that provision is not necessary unless he desires to accomplish something beyond.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg pardon. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Delaware to mean by the latter clause of his substitute that no legislation shall appear upon an appropriation bill, or simply that an amendment in the nature of legislation shall not be offered in the Senate to an appropriation bill?

Mr. BAYARD. I wish it could reach further; but I apprehend that this is intended only to affect amendments to appropriation bills, as the terms of the resolution distinctly express. I have long felt that the regular appropriation bills are too often made the mere riders for utterly improper and extraneous measures, that should be the subjects of direct legislation. I do not suppose that this order of the Senate will affect that question one way or the other.

I am no friend of this prohibition upon discretionary debate. A business-like method of disposing of the business of this body I have endeavored always to assist in; but I do not like this matter of coerced restriction. I think it is a mistake. For pure business purposes, however, money bills, bills containing the appropriation of money, that have passed under the hands of a committee and are recommended by the Departments and been in some degree sifted by examination beforehand, require necessarily less extended examination and discussion than others. The object of the modification which

I have sent to the desk, which was submitted by the Senator from California, was to make the appropriation bills in substance precisely what they were intended to be—not bills for general legislation, but simply specific appropriations of certain sums for certain fixed purposes which had been recommended by the Departments and passed upon by the appropriate committees. It is not to touch the question of legislation germane to appropriation bills. The rule for that would have to be more extended. It simply applies to amendments offered here in the course of discussion upon the bill, and in regard to which debate is limited against the former and I think the more creditable experience of this body.

I simply ask that, should this resolution be adopted, it shall be in the form proposed by the Senator from California in preference to that proposed by the Senator from Maine. It will then be found to be in almost precise accord with the resolution of the last session of Congress, adopted then, however, in the closing hours of the session, when measures were pressing upon the consideration of the Senate and in an absolute dearth of time, such as does not now exist. It is my impression that this motion for restricted debate has now been made earlier in the session than ever before since I have been a member of the body. However, if it is to be adopted, it should be with the words which have been suggested in the amendment, that the restriction of debate to five minutes on each amendment shall be coupled with the fact that no amendment shall be in order that does not directly relate to the subject-matter treated of in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the resolution offered by the Senator from California; but it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will have an effect upon the pending appropriation bill which perhaps may not be fully understood. We have a proposition now on that bill, placed there by the Committee on Appropriations, providing new legislation. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware to this resolution proposes that no such amendment shall be received, so that, if I understand the scope of it, no amendment can be offered to the pending bill, when we return to the legislative appropriation bill, having reference to the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics.

It seems to me we had better adopt the proposition of the Senator from California, which simply provides that the debate shall be confined to five minutes upon the pending bill, or upon all appropriation bills if you please, and leave this question of legislation as it now stands under the rule. If I understand the rule correctly, no amendment is in order upon an appropriation bill providing new legislation. Any new legislation upon appropriation bills must come from some standing committee of the Senate or from the Committee on Appropriations. I think the Senator from Delaware had better not insist on his amendment, which simply provides, it seems to me, for cutting off amendments to the pending bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we had better take this resolution as it comes from the Committee on Appropriations, who have considered the matter. Although I agree with the Senator from Delaware as a general rule that there should not be legislation upon appropriation bills, yet it should be a joint rule, not a rule of the Senate alone. Appropriation bills come from the House of Representatives loaded with legislation, and in such cases it is often necessary for us to put on additional legislation in the way of modification; and this restriction would place us under a disability which the other branch of Congress does not suffer. I think there should be such a joint rule, and I may say I have prepared one to be submitted to the Committee on Rules. But whatever restriction is put upon an appropriation bill should apply to both Houses, not to us alone, we suffering all the disadvantages and having none of the advantages. I think we had better take the resolution as it comes from the Committee on Appropriations and then consider the general subject hereafter.

Mr. BAYARD. It perhaps is no answer to an objection urged now to say that it was passed over or not considered a year ago; but on the 18th of May, 1874, this Senate adopted a resolution almost precisely in the words of the resolution offered by the Senator from California, and which was first in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. What date was that?

Mr. BAYARD. On the 18th of May, 1874, a resolution in the form which I have submitted as a substitute for that offered by the Senator from Maine was adopted, and I presume by the vote in part of the Senators from Iowa and Rhode Island. This was not a joint rule, but a rule of the Senate:

> Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time to move a recess; and pending an appropriation bill to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion; and such motions shall be decided without debate; and no amendment to any such bill making legislative provisions other than such as directly relate to the appropriations contained in the bill shall be received; and no special order shall be made during this session: Provided, That this order shall not extend to the post-office appropriation bill.

That proviso was meant, I suppose, to touch the question of subsidies in case that came up. I merely mean to say that this was the resolution adopted by the Senate at the last session. It certainly can do no harm; it may do much good. You have undertaken to adopt this rule of restricted debate upon an appropriation bill. I do not favor that, because I do not believe in the history of the debates in this body that this five-minute rule has saved five minutes of time in all the years it has been adopted. I think the Senate are aware of that fact. This theory of the five-minute rule being economical as to time is a mistake. The debates upon matters germane to appropriation bills do not in the aggregate, without the rule, equal the time consumed under the rule. Such, I believe, will be found to be the experience of every Senator who chooses to recall the history of our debates under this rule.

Now, what objection there can be when you adopt this five-minute rule to saying that the amendments proposed shall be germane to the bill—for that is the substance of my amendment—I do not see. I shall vote against the resolution in either form, however.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the resolution as submitted by the Senator from Maine.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. The pending business, I believe, is House bill No. 3818, being the regular legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which I ask may be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the unfinished business at the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. SARGENT. Now, in accordance with the rule adopted by the Senate, I move that in the further consideration of this appropriation bill the rule limiting debate to five minutes be applied.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will not the Senator give way?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Kentucky desires to occupy the remainder of the morning hour in the consideration of another bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and as this bill will come up immediately after the morning hour, I give way for that purpose.

LOUISVILLE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky. The bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Appropriations last year. It provides for the purchase of a small piece of ground in the city of Louisville, a wooden building which is essential for the protection of that custom-house. It is only twenty-five feet by one hundred and fifty, and the cost of the purchase is restricted to $12,500, and it is discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase from the owner or owners thereof, at a price not to exceed $12,500, all that certain piece of ground in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, situate west of and adjoining the United States custom-house, fronting twenty-five feet on Green street, and extending back one hundred and fifty feet, parallel with and the same depth as the custom-house property.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That bill may be all right, but I think it had better be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and we shall have time when that committee is called to take it up.

Mr. STEVENSON. This bill was referred last year to the Committee on Appropriations. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and has been fully considered by the Committee on Appropriations. I do not see why the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have anything to do with this measure.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I only notice that this is a subject which ought to have been referred by the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I do not understand that it was ever before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MORTON. This bill fixes a maximum price, that the purchase shall not exceed $12,500. That is usually regarded as fixing the price, and that amount of money is appropriated I know nothing about this myself, but I have been told that that price is greatly in excess of the value of the piece of ground; that it could not be sold in the city of Louisville for any such sum of money.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 20, noes 17.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I now renew the motion which I submitted a few moments ago, that the rule adopted this morning be enforced on the legislative appropriation bill—the five-minute rule.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator surely is not going to take up the unfinished business before the morning hour is out.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; the Committee on Appropriations is the committee called now, and we propose to go on with the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I could make a point of order on the Senator, but I do not wish to do so, though I do not think this is a fair thing. The morning hour was intended to be so used as to enable us to get on with the little bills and not to take up appropriation bills. If I were to be strict about it, this bill is not on the Calendar.

It is before the Senate already as unfinished business. It was taken from the Calendar three or four days ago, and therefore it does not fall within the rule at all if we are to be exact about it. It is not the fair thing.

Mr. SARGENT. I assure the Senator I have no intention to do an unfair thing. I will cheerfully yield to the Senator if he has any business to present now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not anything, but I am speaking of getting on with the morning business of committees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Appropriations has the morning hour to-day for any business it has to present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to what is regarded as privileged, a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. SARGENT. I give way to that.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3572) "to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, and 36; and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 15, and 16.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the words proposed to be striken out the words: "Provided also, That there shall be an allowance of 5 per cent., and no more, on all effervescing wines, liquors, cordials, and distilled spirits in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity in lieu of breakage;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its sixth amendment, and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out with an amendment as follows: Strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its thirtieth amendment, and agree to the section proposed to be stricken out with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 23 after "States," in line 17, page 14, and insert in lieu thereof the words "when such persons are designated or acting as officers or deputies or persons having the custody or disposition of any public money;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "23" (the number of the section) insert "24;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "24" (the number of the section) insert "25;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirty-fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "25" (the number of the section) insert "26;" and the Senate agree to the same.

They further recommend that in section 7, page 5, line 21, after the word "returned," the word "empty" be inserted; that in section 7, page 5, line 17, "1874" be stricken out and in lieu thereof "1875" inserted; that in section 14, page 9, line 17, "1874" be stricken out and "1875" inserted in lieu thereof.

JOHN SHERMAN,
FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HORACE MAYNARD,
HENRY H. STARKWEATHER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The report of the conference committee at the last session of Congress was printed and is on the desk of every Senator, and the only difference between the report now made and the report made at the last session is that the rate of duty on hops is raised to eight cents. On that point the Senate committee of conference conceded to some extent to the views of the House. In other respects it is in substance and I think in form the same, with the exception of some trifling matters, such as changes of date. The report was adopted at the last session by the Senate and disagreed to by the House. If any Senator desires to examine it more critically or wishes any further information, I will answer any question about it.

The points of disagreement between the two Houses were mainly the tobacco section and the section providing for a tax on sales of bonds and securities. Those sections were stricken out by the Senate and our amendments in that respect are agreed to. In regard to the duty on hops, the Senate conceded to the House their wishes to some extent, in order to secure concurrence.

Mr. BAYARD. We all know that reports of conference committees are very unintelligible to the mass of the Senate as they are read. In order to understand what this legislation is would require a careful collation of the original bill with the amendments which have been agreed to or disagreed to by the conferees. I only desire, for the purpose of assuring myself as to my own vote on this bill, to ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Ohio, with whom I was associated as one of the conferees originally on this bill, whether the report which was made and to which I gave my assent at the last session of Congress, some time in June last, was the same as this with the exception that here is an increase of three cents per pound in the duty upon hops?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already stated that the conference report now made is in substance, if not in detail in every respect, the same as it was signed last session by the Senator from Delaware, except as to the duty on hops. Of course we had to change the dates and some matters of form, but in substance there is no other change.

Mr. BAYARD. I asked the question because it is impossible to understand from the hasty reading of this report what the effect of it is. The honorable Senator and myself were in accord on this bill at the last session, and I only desired to know whether the report now made was substantially the same that he and I concurred in at the last session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the duty on hops is the only material point of difference between this report and the one made at the last session.

Mr. COOPER. I agree with the Senator from Ohio that he has stated the only point of difference.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand that the principle of section 9, relating to the return free of barrels and gunny-bags, the manufacture of the United States, when exported filled with American products, is retained in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; except that the word "empty" is inserted at the proper place.

Mr. COOPER. I should have said that there was a change from the old conference report as to the duty on hops.

Mr. SHERMAN. That I stated.

Mr. COOPER. We compromised with the House on that question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 4443) in regard to the visit of His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands;

A bill (H. R. No. 4445) to incorporate the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4444) to amend an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874;

A bill (H. R. No. 4447) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869;

A bill (H. R. No. 4449) to amend an act entitled "An act to revive, with amendments, 'An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia,' approved July 7, 1838;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 4448) making an appropriation for the new school building in the city of Georgetown, District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 439) to provide for the payment of D. B. Allen & Co., for services in carrying the United States mails; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 19th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 1068) to remove the limitation restricting the circulation of banking associations issuing notes payable in gold; and

An act (S. No. 924) donating condemned cannon to the city of Massillon, Ohio, for monumental purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BOUTWELL to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations relative to the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 574—

That there shall be established in and attached to the Department of the Treasury a Bureau, to be denominated the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics; and the President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a chief of the said Bureau, who shall be styled Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics, and whose duty it shall be to gather, collate, and annually report to Congress statistics and facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the railroad systems of this and other countries, the construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads, and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States, the charges imposed for such transportation of freights and passengers, and the tonnage transported; and the Commissioner of said Bureau shall be paid for his services at the rate of $3,500 per annum; and the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department is hereby transferred to, and made a part of, the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics created by this act; and all the duties now by law performed in the said Bureau of Statistics are hereby transferred to the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics, and made a part of the duties of the said Commissioner; and the officer now in charge of the Bureau of Statistics, together with the several clerks, messengers, and laborers employed in the said Bureau of Statistics, are hereby placed under the direction and supervision of the Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics; and the reports now by law required to be prepared and published monthly in the said Bureau of Statistics shall hereafter be prepared and published quarterly under the direction of the said Commissioner; and the accounts and returns in relation to tonnage, and to the registration, enrollment, and licensing of vessels, now required by law to be made by collectors and other officers of the customs to the Register of the Treasury, shall hereafter be made to the Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics; and all the duties now by law devolving upon the Register of the Treasury in relation to attesting marine documents and issuing the same to collectors and other officers of the customs, and to preparing annual statements of the tonnage of the United States, are hereby transferred to the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics, and made a part of the duties of the said Commissioner; and the several clerks and messengers now employed in the office of the Register of the Treasury upon the duties herein mentioned are hereby placed under the direction and supervision of the said

Commissioner; and for the purpose of carrying this provision into effect there is hereby appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, the following sums, namely:

Bureau of Commerce and Statistics:

For Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,000; eleven clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; nine clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one laborer; and one char-woman, at $480; in all, $60,440.

The amendment to the amendment was to strike out the first paragraph, being all except the appropriating clause.

Mr. SARGENT. In order that we may have a test-vote on that proposition and on the general amendment, I move to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

Mr. BOREMAN. This I understand is the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, to strike out a portion of the amendment of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question being on the amendment of the committee, the Senator from Massachusetts moved to strike out all of that amendment from line 575 to line 625 inclusive, and the Senator from California now moves that the motion to strike out be laid on the table.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire, Mr. President, to know whether the effect of that motion made by the Senator from California, if it prevails, is to leave the proposition as it came from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SARGENT. That is the intention, and I merely want an early test-vote.

Mr. CONKLING. In order that we may not get confused, I inquire of the Chair whether under the rule authorizing the motion to lay an amendment on the table, it is in order to move to lay on the table a motion to strike out?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the motion to strike out be laid on the table.

Mr. CONKLING. But the question I submit to the Chair is whether the rule allowing an amendment to be laid on the table without carrying the bill, covers a motion to lay on the table another motion to strike out; in other words, whether the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts is an amendment within the meaning of this rule, which amendment can be independently laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion, if adopted, carries the amendment of the committee and the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts on the table.

Mr. CONKLING. Then we understand that the effect of the motion will be to lay the amendment of the committee itself on the table, as well as to lay the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts on the table.

Mr. SARGENT. I certainly did not expect any such parliamentary result of my motion, and I will not take up the time of the Senate in discussing it, or in appealing from the decision. I withdraw the motion, to save time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There were two points presented to the Senate yesterday on which I have further information than I was able to command at that time. The discrepancies between the returns of the Register and the Bureau of Statistics are due to a difference in the facts which are the subjects of inquiry in the two branches. The returns from the office of the Register are those which have been made up from the beginning of the Government, a debit and credit sheet, if you may say so, on one side of which are entered all the vessels built from time to time, with their tonnage, and upon the other those that are lost or worn out by use, and the difference shows the amount of tonnage in actual existence.

In 1866 Congress passed an act giving to the Secretary of the Treasury power, and also requiring him, to cause to be placed upon each vessel a number, and the duty was imposed, as I think erroneously, upon the Bureau of Statistics. The results in the Bureau of Statistics are the results attained by the progessive numbering of old vessels that were in service in 1866, to which has been added from time to time the registering of vessels since built. Therefore it is apparent that the results would be different, and the results attained by the Bureau of Statistics, I am free to say, are of no value whatever.

Now, then, as regards the expense that will be saved by imposing all these duties upon one office. I understand from the head of the division in the office of the Register of the Treasury that the services of a clerk, woman or man, for a week, furnish to the Bureau of Statistics all the information which they are required to furnish in the course of a year. Therefore it is the fifty-second part of $1,200 or $900, as you may choose to estimate the value of the clerk who performs the labor.

I come now to another point, if within my five minutes I have time to refer to it. By the act of 1793 the business of registering vessels was placed upon the Register of the Treasury. In that branch of the Government—and that branch of the Government is as permanent as the Government itself—are all the documentary and record evidences of the vessels which have been built from the commencement of the Government until now, and I can use no milder term than to say that this proposition, without having had the official sanction or even the official judgment of the head of the Treasury Department, is none other than a proposition to jerk from that Bureau an essential and important part of its business and transfer it to a Bureau which, in the nature of its service, is subject to legislation, and may at any time at the will of Congress be abolished; but the office of Register of the Treasury is as permanent in the Government of the country as is the office of President itself.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I did not design to ask the attention of the Senate any further on this matter, and I would not but for the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I will not discuss the question as to the disagreement of these two reports. The Senator himself admits that they are not in accord as presented to the country, that there is a difference between them. I merely mentioned yesterday as incidental to the discussion of the question, that it was hardly worth while to keep up two distinct and separate divisions of tonnage in order that we might have two distinct and conflicting and different reports on that subject. I laid no other stress upon it.

Now, as to the saving to be accomplished, it has been urged here by those who say that we ought to have this important information with reference to our internal commerce that we place this matter under the charge of the Bureau of Statistics, and Senators have said "Why not give more money, why not make further appropriations to that Statistical Bureau and thus get the information, if it is important?"

Now, sir, in answer to that, I have to say that we propose to do it without any additional money; and I think, if the Senator from Massachusetts will further consider this question, he will find that he is very much mistaken as to the cost. It might not require more than one clerk to certify to the Statistical Bureau from the Register's Office the information they have there; but there are five or six clerks engaged to-day in the Statistical Bureau making up these reports, while there are eleven clerks and copyists engaged in the Register's Office in substantially the same business; and I say to the Senate to-day, from the very highest authority in the Treasury Department, that there is no doubt but that these duties are to-day duplicated in the Treasury Department. Now, sir, shall we stand here and insist that we will give additional money to hire additional clerks to the Statistical Bureau, and at the same time continue this duplicate duty that is of no service to anybody? We shall save one of these sets of clerks by this reorganization.

But the Senator from Massachusetts says that you will wrench from the Treasury Department certain documents, certain records, that have been there since the Government was formed. Why, Mr. President, all you will do will be to transfer from one room in the Treasury Department certain books that contain those records into another room in the Treasury Department containing the same records. I can conceive of no great difficulty in that; and the fact is, too, when this original Statistical Bureau was created that it was designed that this very duty should be performed in that Bureau, and for awhile it was performed there, but on account of a certain dislike to the gentleman who was then Director of the Bureau of Statistics this tonnage division was sent back to the Register's Office, and these two duplicate duties are being performed to-day.

The Senator from Massachusetts told us yesterday that the authority was ample now to get all this information, and why ask for more. I put to the Senator the pertinent question, Why did not he when Secretary of the Treasury discover this ample authority? He said his attention was never called to it. Now, if the condition of the law be such that as careful, as painstaking, as earnest, and industrious a Secretary of the Treasury as the one to whom I refer could not discover the necessity for this duty in that law, I say it is high time that we point out a little more specifically in the law what the duties of the office are. The Senator from Massachusetts when Secretary of the Treasury did not discover it; the law was not clear enough then, though he says to-day it is ample; and as that office has been in existence ever since 1866 and no one has ever discovered yet that the law required any information in reference to the internal commerce of the country, we propose to specifically point ont that duty, and we propose, instead of giving more money, to take clerks whose pay amounts now to $12,740, engaged in one Bureau in duplicating duties performed in another, and to transfer these clerks over to this Bureau, thereby saving $12,000 and over, which we now expend in duplicating this work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment to the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 17.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Boreman, Boutwell, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Schurz, Scott, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, and Washburn—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Clayton, Davis, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Sargent, Tipton, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Hamilton of Maryland, Harvey, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Norwood, Pease, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stewart, Stockton, and Thurman—23.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That leaves the amendment now to stand making the appropriation for the Bureau of Commerce and Statistics without any additional duty; it is substantially for the Bureau of Statistics as provided for by the act of 1866. I suggest, if we do not care to make a new officer under these circumstances, that we strike out the words "Bureau of Commerce and Statistics," and then I shall ask the Senate to consider the other question, whether they will appropriate for the Bureau of Statistics by itself. I move to strike out the words "Bureau of Commerce and Statistics."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to amend the amendment of the committee in line 626, by striking out "Bureau of Commerce and Statistics."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That motion should also include the words, "for salary of Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics $3,500."

As this now adds no additional duty, and as it is evidently not the sense of the Senate to devolve that duty, there is no occasion, I take it, for a new officer at the head of this establishment. If you strike that out, then the amendment is merely an appropriation for the Bureau of Statistics, as provided for by the act of 1866 and subsequent acts and as it was appropriated for last year. The sense of the Senate being decided on that point, I propose to modify this amendment in this way, and then I will submit the question to the Senate whether they will appropriate for the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest that in lieu of the words stricken out there should be put in the words "officer in charge of the Bureau $2,500."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Those words may be inserted if that is the pleasure of the Senate, but I want to test the question of continuing the appropriation at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to strike out the words "Commissioner of Commerce and Statistics, $3,500," and insert "officer in charge of Bureau, $2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now the question recurs on adopting the appropriation, which is substantially that which has been made for several years for the Bureau of Statistics, and on this point I will state precisely how the question stands. In 1866 Congress created a Bureau of Statistics and put at the head of it a director, as was stated yesterday, and appropriated the gross sum of $50,000 to enable him to perform the duties, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. This gross sum was appropriated down to 1873. Since that time there has been a specific appropriation for the person in charge of the Bureau of $2,500 and for the clerks in that Bureau amounting to $65,000, in all $67,500. Last year it was changed so that the appropriation for clerks was $59,000, and that is the sum proposed at the present time with the addition of $2,500, which has been put in for the officer in charge of the Bureau, as suggested by my honorable friend from California. Then the question is whether it is the pleasure of the Senate to appropriate for this Bureau provided for by the law of 1866, and it has been uniformly appropriated for from that time down to the present. The House of Representatives having omitted it for some reason or other, our committee have deemed it to be their duty to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that one branch of the public service had been omitted in this appropriation bill.

With these observations, so far as I am concerned, I desire to submit the question to the Senate whether it will appropriate for this service.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope this paragraph will be put in the bill, but I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the sum total should be reduced in the last line by $1,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We will attend to that if the amendment should prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, as amended, which will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Statistics:
Officer in charge of Bureau $2,500; chief clerk $2,000; eleven clerks of class four, seven clerks of class three, nine clerks of class two, four clerks of class one, five copyists at $900 each, one messenger, one laborer, and one char-woman at $480, in all $59,440.

Mr. WINDOM. If in order, I move to strike out the whole of that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to strike out the whole of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order.

Mr. WINDOM. It was in order to move to strike out a part of it. Why not the whole?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which takes precedence; the negative of that would be striking out the clause.

Mr. SCOTT. Has the motion of the Senator from Minnesota been entertained?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; but he has the floor on the amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, if we are to have no reorganization of this Statistical Bureau, I prefer that for the present we should have no Statistical Bureau at all. If, as has been shown to the Senate, we are to continue to employ five to ten clerks in doing the same duties that five to ten clerks are doing somewhere else, and it is impossible to correct this evil now, I prefer to wait until it can be corrected. I know that the facts reported by the Statistical Bureau are of great advantage, but I do not believe that the ground covered by its reports now is anywhere near so important as that which is proposed by the reorganization. The House of Representatives has decided in passing this bill to leave out this Statistical Bureau entirely. If we cannot cover the ground that ought to be covered; if we are to ignore utterly and entirely the internal commerce of the country and the demands of the people on that subject, then I say let us be consistent and ignore the foreign commerce with it. If we are determined to close our eyes to the wants of the people so far as the internal commerce is concerned, then let us "go it blind" so far as the foreign commerce is concerned, and presently there will be a demand from all sections of the country that we have some facts and information on this subject; and therefore for one I shall vote against this Statistical Bureau at all as it is now left. It is expensive in duplicating duties for nothing; it covers only a very small part of the ground that ought to be covered; and when we attempt to improve on it, we are told that Bureaus are immortal and we are refused any permission to inaugurate anything now in reference to it, to add anything to its duties, or prevent its present expensiveness; and therefore I am opposed to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Minnesota is rather unjust to the majority of the Senate in imputing to that majority an indisposition to obtain information touching the internal commerce and industry of the country. I certainly did not oppose the first branch of this amendment upon any such ground, and I do not think most other Senators did; and I was about to rise, before the Senator had risen, to propose to amend the pending amendment by adding at the end thereof, so as to relieve the present law from all possible doubt on the subject of internal industry and commerce, &c., these words which are found, with the necessary preliminary which I have written, in, at the foot of the twenty-fourth and the top of the twenty-fifth page of the printed bill:

And it shall be the duty of the Bureau of Statistics, in addition to its present duties, to gather, collate, and annually report to Congress statistics and facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the railroad systems of this and other countries, the construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States, the charges imposed for such transportation of freight and passengers, and the tonnage transported.

This, added to the present law in respect to the Bureau of Statistics, will make it perfectly clear that it will be the duty of that Bureau of the Treasury Department to obtain and give to the people the information which the Senator from Minnesota as well as myself so much desires.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Vermont has indicated exactly the amendment which I gave notice that I would offer, with the exception that I had made it the duty of "the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics," (as that is the phraseology which has been used in all the legislation upon this subject since the actual director has been dismissed or discharged.) I desire to say that I voted for striking out the first part of the amendment reported, for the reason that it is a totally inadequate provision for the purposes which it professes to accomplish. I am willing that the Bureau of Statistics shall be charged with this duty, and that it shall be performed to the extent to which its clerical force and our appropriations will enable it to perform it; but if the purpose to be accomplished had been attempted by the establishment of a department fully equipped and with all the necessary powers to procure this information, I think then I should have been much more disposed to vote for it than I would have been to vote for this attempt to procure the same result by simply changing the name of an officer and adding a thousand dollars to the appropriation already made for the Bureau of Statistics.

I trust that the amendment indicated by the Senator from Vermont will be voted upon for the purpose of perfecting this amendment before we reach a vote upon the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to strike out, so that any ambiguity about the powers of the existing Bureau of Statistics will be cured and the duty imposed upon it of inquiring into and reporting upon the statistics enumerated in the section.

Mr. WINDOM. Of course, I would prefer this item as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Vermont rather than not have any information on the subject, and therefore I shall vote for his amendment. It will have to be followed, however, by the other provisions which the Senate has just stricken out, or else by an appropriation of twelve or fifteen thousand dollars additional, or it will be utterly useless. I do not want to hold out to the country the idea that we are to give them this information, and deny to the officer upon whom the duty is imposed the means of procuring it.

The honorable Senator from Massachusetts told us yesterday that there were two reasons why this information has not been procured heretofore, or was not during his term of office as Secretary of the Treasury. One was that his attention was not called to it, and the second was that there was no money to do it with. As I have said half a dozen times, the original amendment just voted down proposed to furnish the clerical force to do it. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont imposing this duty; but I shall follow it by another amendment to transfer the clerks engaged in this duplicate work, and if that fails, by an amendment appropriating twelve or fifteen thousand dollars to enable the Bureau of Statistics to perform this duty. If that be done, substantially the same thing will be accomplished that I sought before. There is nothing particular in the name, although the name "bureau of commerce" seems to have frightened some of our friends dreadfully. The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr THURMAN] put on his magnifying glasses yesterday when he heard the name "bureau of commerce" mentioned, and looking at this through those glasses he saw another Department of the Government that by this bill has only $100,000 appropriated for it costing $3,000,000, and directing those glasses in the distant future at what was to be the effect of this little phrase "bureau of commerce," he saw a stupendous department of industry or commerce looming up; he saw that power of Congress "to regulate commerce among the States" invoked, and some two or three times our present public indebtedness (which would amount to $6,000,000,000) employed in improvements in this country, and he became alarmed. I presume that that alarm was contagious, so that if that term "bureau of commerce" contained anything so dreadful, I am not at all sorry that the Senate voted down that proposition and left it simply a Bureau of Statistics, provided you give to that Bureau the power to get those facts which the Senator from Vermont now proposes it shall obtain.

But to commit—I will not use the word I was about to use; I was going to say to commit a fraud on the public by telling them that you are going to get the information and then provide no means for doing it, I am not in favor of, nor do I think any Senator here is. I do not think the Senator from Vermont intends anything of that kind, and hence I know that when I vote with him for his proposition charging the Statistical Bureau with the duty of giving this information, he will vote with me to give to the Bureau the power to attain it. So I will pair off with him on that, or at least log-roll to get both our propositions through.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is an amendment to this amendment now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be in the second degree. What do you suggest?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I rose to suggest that if we adopt this amendment, we ought to provide for additional expenses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That can be added after this is adopted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I give notice that I will offer that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is in precise accord with the view I took of this question yesterday. If these statistics are desirable—and I do not mean to say that they are not—the whole machinery is at command now to obtain them. There has been no suggestion impeaching the accuracy or the competency of the present force employed in obtaining statistics for the use of the Government. I trust, therefore, it will be adopted as it is entirely in accord with my own ideas and suggestions of yesterday. I understand that it proposes to procure the very information which it was the design of the original amendment of the committee to obtain, and it is done without increasing as yet the cost in any way. I apprehend that all this information can be obtained simply by an order of the Secretary of the Treasury to his various subordinates throughout the country connected with the collection of the excise duties of the Government, which will cause almost the whole of this information desired to flow into the Department as a matter of lawful return connected with the taxes which are paid by railroad companies and other transportation associations.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont may be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, as amended, the following words:

And it shall be the duty of the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics to gather, collate, and annually report to Congress statistics and facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the railroad systems of this and other countries, the construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freight and passengers on railroads and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States, the charges imposed for such transportation of freights and passengers, and the tonnage transported.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not know how this information is to be obtained except by taking the reports made to the State authorities and the reports of the chambers of commerce of the several cities where such chambers exist. I do not know that the work of this Bureau in collating will be of any very material service to the Senate. There is nothing better than reliable statistics, and there is nothing worse than those which are unreliable. Now, so far as information is necessary for the guidance of Congress in any legislation that we have authority to adopt or that we ought to adopt within our authority, it is my belief that we have all the statistics we need. It requires some labor, perhaps, to get them together in a convenient and condensed form, but he who will perform that labor can easily enough obtain them.

What would be the effect of this Bureau of Statistics going into the railroad system of the United States? Simply this: You do not appoint agents to collect originally, by an examination of the books of the railroads, valuable statistics. You do not propose any such expense as that. You do not propose to have a hundred agents traversing the United States to investigate the books of those corporations, sitting as committees of investigation upon them. You do not propose any such expense as that; and how will the statistics be obtained? Take my own State as an example, and I think I can tell you precisely how they will be obtained, and I think my State in this particular is precisely the same as most of the other States. We have a railroad commissioner. Every railroad company in the State is bound annually to report to that commissioner, under oath, an answer to certain inquiries which are put to it, and in answer to all other inquiries that the commissioner of railroads deems it for the public interest to make. The companies make their reports under oath. They are published by the commissioner of railroads with his comments upon them. They form each year a volume of three or four hundred pages; and thereby the Legislature of the State obtains as accurate information as the nature of the subject will admit of the workings of all railroads within the State of Ohio. We have the same thing elsewhere, if I am not mistaken. If I am not mistaken, this precise system exists in New York, Massachusetts, and perhaps in most of the States of the Union. Now, pray, what will you have from the Bureau of Statistics upon the subject of railroads? Without any appropriation for agents to go and inspect their books, to verify or disprove their statements, to call your attention to any particular abuses that may exist, what will you have but a mere compilation from these reports that are made to the States? I do not believe you will have anything else, and I believe that any Senator who wishes to study the railroad system, who wishes to study its operations, and who wishes to obtain information in respect to it, can obtain from books already in existence all that is necessary to guide his course in this Chamber. I do not believe you need anything more for your information than is to be found in the annual publication of Poor's Manual of Railroads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will modify my amendment, at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, by inserting after the word "to" in the five hundred and eighty-second line, as it stands in the print, the words "the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to," so as to read "annually report to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to Congress," making the report of this Bureau officer to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say, in reply to the Senator from Ohio, that I do not think his remarks quite reach the point of this amendment. It is true that the various States obtain information of the character which he has described, but if you have this officer authorized and required to take that information which is isolated and separated, and classify and compare it, and generalize it, even if he does nothing more, you will then have furnished to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury very valuable information, broader than its separation into States, broader than localities, but giving us the means of knowing how the internal commerce of the country can be best assisted and promoted. So that I am sure, in that point of view, the Senator from Ohio, even with his views, ought to unite with us in supporting this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as modified, to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I now offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the amendment of the committee as it stands:

And the sum of $20,000, or so much as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to defray the expenses thereof.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to participate in this debate, and only do so now long enough to express the general discontent among business men and among all who have examined our statistics as to the nature and character of our statistical information. It is a strange thing that so practical a people as the Yankee nation have never yet been able to present its resources, its wealth, its railroads, its population, or any statistical information with regard to them, with the perfection that Great Britain, Germany, France, and many other nations have done. There is more information in Whittaker's Almanac, or the Statistical Abstract of Great Britain, a little document of a few pages, than you can find in this vast roll that I have before me. [Holding up a monthly report of the Bureau of Statistics.] It does seem to me that there is a great deal more merit in the proposition of the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] than the Senate seems to have given to it. I dislike to vote for any amendment on an appropriation bill that contains a legislative provision, or I certainly would have voted for his proposition with great pleasure; but I do think that the amount of labor wasted in the different Departments of this Government at present would give us in a convenient, compact form all the statistical information necessary for practical use among business men in regard to our commerce, our navigation, our productions, and our wealth. Now, take this document; my friend from Massachusetts knows it as well as I. Here [exhibiting a book] is a document called Monthly Reports of Commerce and Navigation of the United States, which is an immense document, a document sufficient in its volume and cost to convey practically all the information desired in regard to our national statistics; and yet this is confined to a few subjects and contains a great deal of matter that is useless. This is a monthly statement which probably might be made quarterly, and even the three months might be condensed into much less space than the monthly statement that is furnished. This document is sufficiently large in volume and size to contain the names and number of miles of railroads, the number of tons of freight, the nature and character of that freight, and the whole of the statements in regard to transportation, in regard to banks, in regard to insurance companies, in regard to the property, wealth, production, occupation, &c., of the people of the United States. All that might be comprised in the space of this single document, which it probably cost thousands of dollars to print and a great many thousands of dollars to compile.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There is one consideration prevailing in this country which I think does not prevail to so great an extent in England, and that is the desire for knowledge concerning localities. You observe, for example, in regard to tonnage, that it is distributed in the document throughout all the districts of the country, and that idea and practice prevail in other things. Whether it is wise or not I cannot say, but every locality desires to know its own standing in every particular branch of industry and trade; and we cannot furnish that information except in a voluminous way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have made these remarks in regard to our statistical information simply for the purpose of saying that I believe this work could be done by one intelligent mind, with a comparatively small body of clerks, having the control of all the information that is collected together in the Treasury Department alone, and if it were possible, extended also into the Interior Department, so as to embrace our public lands and various other matters of wealth, and with the information that is accessible to him as presented by the reports of the States. The reports of no State are more perfect than those of the State of Ohio in regard to this particular subject. The reports of our secretary of state and commissioner of railroads are probably equal to the reports of any other States, with the exception, perhaps, of Massachusetts, and perhaps are unequaled by those of any State. There would be no trouble in a few intelligent persons skilled in this kind of hard labor collecting, compiling, and condensing in a tangible form a vast amount of information to cover the whole ground proposed by the honorable Senator from Minnesota. I sympathize with him, therefore, in his desire to concentrate and combine all the labor that is now spent and wasted in the Treasury Department and in the Interior Department, so as to bring that information together under the direction of an intelligent mind, aided by a few clerks, so that we might have a few statistical documents showing the wealth of our country.

As I said before, there is a little document printed by Great Britain every year at the cost of a few pennies that contains more information about their exports and imports, the nature of their productions, the extent of their wealth, their railroad system, and all things of that kind, than is contained in the whole mass of Treasury documents that are sent to us. Here is Whittaker's Almanac, a statistical abstract, as they call it, sold for a few pennies, which any person can get for a trifle, containing an answer to almost every question one can ask about British commerce, wealth, production, railroads, and everything of that kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to know how many people we are to have gathering statistics? We have an Agricultural Bureau that makes its report upon agricultural statistics; we have a report upon commerce and navigation; we have a Bureau of Education that returns educational statistics; we have a Treasury Department, with an Internal Revenue Bureau in it, that gives us information in regard to internal revenue; and now, pray, where are we to stop or among how many officers are we to divide this duty of gathering statistics? But this is not all. My colleague has done very well to call the attention of the Senate to the volume he held up to your view; but what a vast body of statistics have we already in the census returns. We have statistics upon almost every subject, on commerce, on navigation, on agriculture, on climate, on disease from cerebro-spinal meningitis down to the itch. How many more statistics do you want to be piled up here and looked at by nobody or scarcely by anybody? It is nothing but expense; that is all there is of it. I repeat that we have now to anybody who will study it a collection of statistics quite sufficient to govern us in any votes that we may be properly called upon to cast in this Chamber.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Where would the Senator, if he desired to get the domestic commerce of the States, find that? I mean that which floats upon the lakes and rivers.

Mr. THURMAN. I will answer the Senator if I can do it within my five minutes. Pass this measure, and how will that officer get the information? He will get it just as I would get it; he will get it just as the Senator from Maine would get it. He will not get it by original investigation. You do not give him any authority or means to make original investigation. He will get it by collecting together the reports of chambers of commerce and boards of trade in the various cities, by collecting together the reports made to State officers under State authority. He will get it from newspapers and books and all the sources that have been published on this subject—Poor's Railroad Manual and various others—and from them good, bad, and indifferent, as they may be, he will make up his compilation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This proposition is to employ him to do it instead of doing it ourselves; and if my honorable friend, whose time is so precious to him and to the country, would sit from this time to the close of the session, he would scarcely get an intelligent notion of the commerce of the country after exhausting the vast sources of information at his command.

Mr. THURMAN. So far from that being the truth, I could show to my friend here in less than twelve hours publications on the subject of the internal commerce of this country that would satisfy every reasonable curiosity that is in his mind, and just as authentic as he would obtain from this Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. When this idea of having an officer to gather statistics was first authorized, the whole expenditure amounted to about $19,000. It is now proposed to appropriate $60,000 here; and I think through the officer that we now have we can gather all these statistics without any further appropriation; and I hope no further appropriation will be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. If in order, I move to insert before the amendment which has just been adopted the following:

> And the reports now by law required to be prepared and published monthly in the said Bureau of Statistics shall hereafter be prepared and published quarterly under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SARGENT. That is a reform.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes; that is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senate for information whether there is any objection to transferring the making up of the statistics in regard to commerce and navigation to this officer?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The same objection exists, that the business is perfectly well done in the office of the Register of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. But this information ought to be compiled and put with the information now required. However, I will not press it if the Senator thinks otherwise.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator from Minnesota said that he had information from the highest authority in the Treasury, which means the Secretary no doubt, although he did not so state; but I have direct information from the head of the division in the Register's Office that the services of one clerk for a week furnish to the Statistical Bureau all the information that is communicated to that Bureau from the Register's Office in a year, and that there is no duplication of work. But then this is to be set off against that, and this debate undoubtedly will call the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to the matter, that there is no law which will prevent his abolishing the system so far as there is duplication of work. So far as that is concerned, it is a mere matter of administration.

Mr. SHERMAN. The volume sent to us by the Register of the Treasury, his annual report, ought to be compiled in the statistical statement.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The statistics furnished by the Register of the Treasury, with the exception of those which relate specifically to the finances of the country, are limited in quantity. They relate to the tonnage of the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a very large document and a great deal of unnecessary detail of information is contained in it that it seems to me might be thrown out and the whole matter turned over to the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannnot imagine that the chairman of the Committee on Finance proposes to transfer to this Bureau of Statistics the statistics relating to the public debt, the condition of our bonds, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. I only refer to those with regard to the compilation of the tonnage and the registry of vessels.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That business is very limited. There are twelve officers in the office of the Register of the Treasury employed on that branch of the business.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me the Register of the Treasury, in the present condition of affairs, ought to be confined to the registry of liabilities, debts, notes, bonds of the various forms, and that mere statistical information about our commerce ought to be transferred to a Bureau of Statistics, where the whole matter can be compiled.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The suggestion seems to me, with due respect to the Senator, not wise. In the office of the Register of the Treasury are the records and documents giving the history of every vessel in this country. The statistical information which that office furnishes is of very little consequence compared with the proper authentication of the character of every vessel and the name and standing of the owner. Then the Statistical Bureau is turned out of the Treasury Department. There is no room for it there. There is no building that is fire-proof for it; and, until you construct such a building, these documents would not be safe. The idea of taking from a fire-proof building documents which contain the history of every vessel in the country, the record of the ownership and character of vessels, seems to me not justified under circumstances like these.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to make a correction in relation to the expenditures of this Department. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has proposed an appropriation of a gross sum, in another place, of $60,000, and I desire to say this: When the Commissioner of Statistics was first established, the service was so administered that the Commissioner traveled all over the country, and even went abroad, and the expenses were increased to so large an amount that it was immediately abolished, the system not being in operation more than two or three years. But I believe the amount appropriated here to the present officer is amply sufficient to gather all of the valuable statistics that Congress may require. I hope, therefore, that no further sum will be included in this appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will say to the Senator that when the Bureau was created $50,000 in a gross sum was appropriated. That ran along until 1872. Since that time $2,500 has been appropriated for the officer in charge, and $55,400 for the force under him, except for the last year, when $59,000 was appropriated for that force.

Mr. SARGENT. I think it is a matter of very grave doubt whether the Bureau of Statistics should be appropriated for in any form. It has been very clearly demonstrated in this debate, and I think was also by the investigation of the committee into the subject, that there is a great duplication of duties among the different Bureaus, and that much of the work which has heretofore been done by the Bureau of Statistics has also been done by other Bureau officers. We have found a lamentable tendency on the part of the different Bureaus to magnify their own importance, to insist upon further employés being furnished them, and, to a certain extent, to make a pretense of being busy, when really, by so doing, they were doing the work which at the same time was being done by others. I have no doubt that quite a number of Bureaus in the Treasury Department might be consolidated with very great advantage to the public service, and I feel very much like regret that some committee does not charge itself with the duty, or is not charged by the Senate with the duty, of so reorganizing these Bureaus that their duties may be more clearly defined, and simplified, and restricted.

Now, the appropriations in this bill go a very short way toward showing the expenses of this Bureau of the Treasury. There are not merely the employés here in Washington, but in all the custom-houses, certainly all the important ones, there are clerks detailed at the request of the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics whose only duty it is to collect statistics for that Bureau, and by this means the amount of expenditure does not come to the attention of Congress; but it is really a very large item, so that I suppose I would be safe in saying that the amount appropriated in this bill is no more than one-third—and I think I am very much under the figures—of the cost of such information as has been already furnished us. As much of this information is furnished by other Bureaus, by the tonnage division, &c., certainly we ought to look rather critically into this matter, and not enlarge the appropriations for this Bureau, and perhaps we ought not to continue them. I feel so strongly persuaded of the correctness of the position which I take on this matter that I will venture to submit a motion to lay the amendment of the committee, with the amendments, on the table, and leave it, as the House left it, without further appropriation for this Bureau. Then it falls, as the House intended it should fall. I think that would be judicious. If afterward it shall be esteemed that a bureau of commerce is necessary, or a department of commerce, let that proposition be brought forward in the course of ordinary legislation and stand on its own merits, and let it be examined by a committee, who can determine whether it is a proper matter of legislation or not.

I submit the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask as an explanation——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is out of order, unless the Senator from California withdraws his motion.

Mr. SARGENT. I will withdraw the motion to allow the Senator from Delaware to ask a question.

Mr. BAYARD. I will renew the motion. The effect of this proposition of the Senator from California would be to abolish the present Bureau of Statistics entirely. Is not that the case?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Simply to leave it without an appropriation.

Mr. BAYARD. Which amounts to the same thing.

> You take my life,
> When you do take the means whereby I live.

And if you follow the plan of the House, you would simply have no official report as to statistics at all. Is the Senate prepared for that? Is it a wise thing to abolish the imperfect reports—that is to say, the reports imperfect not as to the subjects to which they relate, but imperfect as not embracing many other subjects which gentlemen here, on this floor, have advocated having returns as to? As the amendment now stands, there is a provision for a report monthly of statistics upon these heads, chiefly relating to the external commerce of the country. To that I have no objection. On the contrary, I am in favor of enlarging these heads of inquiry and having other statistics, which I think can be readily obtained and may be of very large possible value; but I cannot understand how two wrongs shall make one right. I cannot understand how the cessation of this branch of the public service, and I apprehend it is strictly one of public service, is to benefit those gentlemen who desire to have information upon additional heads. Therefore it is that I trust the proposition may be allowed to stand in the condition it now is as amended by the action of the Senate. I merely wish the Senate to understand, which perhaps they did before, that the effect of the motion of the Senator from California would be to wipe the present office entirely out of existence by taking away the means for its support. I now, however, give way to the honorable Senator, that he may renew his motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. SARGENT. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California renews his motion to lay the pending amendment on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended, which will be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after line 625 the following clause:

> Bureau of Statistics:
> For officer in charge of the Bureau, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; eleven clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; nine clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one laborer; and one charwoman, at $480; in all, $60,440. And it shall be the duty of the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics to gather, collate, and annually report to the Secretary of the Treasury, for transmission to Congress, statistics and facts relating to commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the railroad systems of this and other countries, the construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of such construction and operation of railroads, the actual cost of transporting freights and passengers on railroads, and on canals, rivers, and other navigable waters of the United States, the charges imposed for such transportation of freight and passengers, and the tonnage transported; and the reports now by law required to be prepared and published monthly in the said Bureau of Statistics shall hereafter be prepared and published quarterly, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to defray the expenses thereof.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to submit an amendment to the bill under consideration, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was at the end of line 650, to insert in the clause relative to miscellaneous expenses of the Treasury Department, after the item, "for rent of buildings, $13,000," the following proviso:

> Provided, That the Secretary may rent other buildings in lieu of those now rented, as he may deem for the public interest, for a sum not to exceed this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for the office of the assistant treasurer at Chicago, to insert after the word "dollars," in line 811, the words "for one clerk, $1,500;" in line 812, after the word "for," to strike out the words "one clerk" and to insert "two clerks, at;" in line 813, after the word "dollars," to insert the word "each;" and in line 815, to strike out the words "fifteen thousand" and insert "seventeen thousand seven hundred," so as to make the clause read:

> Office of assistant treasurer at Chicago:
> For assistant treasurer, $5,000; for cashier, $2,500; for paying-teller, $1,800; for book-keeper and for receiving-teller, at $1,500 each, $3,000; for one clerk, $1,500; for two clerks, at $1,200 each; for one messenger, $840; for one watchman, $720; in all, $17,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 916, in the appropriations for the Mint at Philadelphia, to increase the item "for wages of workmen and adjusters" from $225,000 to $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 919, to strike out the words "one annealing furnace, ten," and to insert "two annealing furnaces, fifteen," so as to make the clause read:

> For two annealing furnaces, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 921, to increase the appropriation "for freight on bullion and coin" for the Mint at Philadelphia from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 931, to increase the appropriation "for wages of workmen and adjusters" at the mint at San Francisco, California, from $253,000 to $275,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 942, to increase the appropriation "for wages of workmen and adjusters" at the mint at Carson City, Nevada, from $67,000 to $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 945, to increase the appropriation "for materials and repairs, fuel, light, charcoal, chemicals, and other necessaries" for the mint at Carson City, Nevada, from $75,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 975 the following clause:

Assay-office at Boise City, Idaho:
For salaries of assayer in charge, $2,500; melter, $2,500; in all, $5,000.
For wages of workmen, $1,500.
For fuel, crucibles, chemicals, repairs, and other necessaries, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 1069, under the head of "Territory of Utah—"

For legislative expenses, namely, for compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and others, $23,400.

And to increase the amount of "$1,600," in line 1076, to "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

For legislative expenses, namely, for compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and others, $23,400; for rent of secretary's office, $600; storage and care of Government property, $300; fuel, $200; stationery, lights, and incidental expenses, $500; in all, $25,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "dollars," where it first occurs, the words—

And this appropriation may be used, under the direction of the Department of Justice, to defray the judicial expenses of the supreme and district courts of said Territory, and the amount so used shall be reimbursed to said appropriation out of the treasury of said Territory; and until such reimbursement shall be fully made no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 1179, 1180, and 1181, in the clause relative to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to strike out the word "monthly" and insert "quarterly;" and in line 1183 to strike out the words "one month" and to insert "three months;" so as to read:

And no moneys shall, after the 1st day of April, 1875, be drawn from the Treasury for the use of said home except in pursuance of quarterly estimates and upon quarterly requisitions by the managers thereof upon the Secretary of War, based upon such quarterly estimates, for the support of said home for not more than three months next succeeding such requisition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "authenticated," in line 1194, to insert "by the officers of said home thereunto duly appointed by said managers, and;" so as to read:

And the managers of said home shall, at the commencement of each quarter of the year, render to the Secretary of War an account of all their receipts and expenditures for the quarter immediately preceding, with the vouchers for such expenditures; and all such accounts and vouchers shall be authenticated by the officers of said home thereunto duly appointed by said managers and audited and allowed as required by law for the general appropriations and expenditures of the War Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee explain to us what all this legislation on the forty-seventh, forty-eighth, and forty-ninth pages of the bill means. It appears to be new, and I should like to know in what respects it changes the present law, and whether it draws from the Treasury any additional sums of money, and to receive any other information which will enable us to be informed on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This part of the bill refers to an act of 1865, by which certain moneys that would have been due to soldiers but for desertions and other things—in fact that all stoppages of money under the regulations of the Army were to be turned into this enterprise of founding these hospitals for the soldiers. It was found, contrary I suppose to everybody's expectation, that that involved a very large outlay for clerical force, amounting to about seventy clerks in the Second Auditor's Office and also a large force in the Adjutant-General's Office. For what? To ascertain precisely what these stoppages were. It was therefore seen that, in order to endow these institutions indirectly, we were paying all this force. On the whole the House of Representatives, and I think properly, came to the conclusion that we would provide for them directly out of the Treasury and dispense with this force. So it will be seen that by this part of the bill that law is repealed in regard to stoppages hereafter, and the governors of these institutions are to make estimates to be submitted to Congress direct for such appropriations as may be necessary for the purpose. I believe these are the substantial facts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is the annual expense that the Government thus assumes?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Government saves nothing except as to the clerk hire.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is the sum of money that will naturally be required to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. When we come to appropriate directly for these asylums it will be a pretty large sum. In other words, I understand that the four institutions involve an expenditure of between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars annually, but we make no appropriation for them this year. There may be, and I believe there will be, an estimate by the managers, but not in this bill, for some four or five hundred thousand dollars for the next year in addition to the sum they already have growing out of these stoppages.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What have the stoppages, so called, amounted to in the last fiscal year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That I am not able to tell. The reports of the managers will show, but I am not quite familiar with them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then at this present moment we do not know but that this change in the law will impose on us the duty, as it evidently does, of making a sufficient appropriation to carry on these institutions, and it may exceed by hundreds of thousands of dollars the sums which we have already given to them, comprising all these stoppages and sums of money due to soldiers who desert.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Undoubtedly. The foundation of these institutions rests in the stoppages of the soldiers, so that the Treasury of the United States, or, in other words, the Departments, were engaged in ascertaining how much those stoppages really were. They were in the Treasury and they belonged to the Treasury; they did not belong to the soldiers. It was an indirect way of endowing these institutions out of the Treasury, and the Treasury has been at a very large expense in ascertaining how much the endowment was annually. We propose to stop that, and this bill does stop it. Then whenever you come to the appropriation will come the question whether you will carry on these institutions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if we have already granted to these institutions these stoppages from monthly pay and the sums due to deserters and so forth, and we undertake to say now that we will not do that, it would seem that we should be morally bound to make good at least that sum which we have already given in continuity to them; and we not only propose to do that by this bill, but really to pay the total expenses of these various institutions. Now, they have perhaps a just right to say that inasmuch as the Government has given to these various institutions these particular classes of moneys which belonged to the soldiers, stopped from their pay, and belonged to soldiers who desert, we shall continue to do it, and that it would be an act of unfairness, after they have got the disabled soldiers and taken care of them, to stop that. But we are not bound at this present moment to go any further than to keep the faith that is already pledged, if it be pledged, and give to these institutions—these waifs from the military department, so to speak. This bill evidently, as it strikes me, in effect, takes upon our own shoulders the total expense of all the institutions, inasmuch as it takes away the gift that we had before given, the quantity of which is indeterminate. That is the effect of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Undoubtedly the Senator is right in his conclusions, and undoubtedly the House of Representatives have acted in full view of such a result, for it will be seen that they have directed the directors to make estimates; but that is a question not involved in this amendment. The only question here is whether the Senate will concur in the House recommendation, that if we make appropriations at all for these institutions, they should be made directly, without the checks which have been found necessary to ascertain what these stoppages were.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to ask my friend from Maine to give us a clear statement of how these asylums are supported. They get stoppages, they get the pay that would have belonged to deserters——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Stoppages for any cause whatever.

Mr. THURMAN. Any other cause that stops the pay. In general terms, you may say they get stoppages, and they did get—I do not know whether it is so yet—any pensions that were due to their inmates. I do not know whether that remains the law now or not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; that has not been the law.

Mr. THURMAN. That was the law.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think not. It is not now at any rate.

Mr. THURMAN. I know it was the law, but it may be that the law has been altered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it has been altered.

Mr. THURMAN. When a soldier entitled to a pension became an inmate of one of these institutions he surrendered his pension to the institution as long as he remained there.

Mr. ALLISON. That is still so. He does surrender it, and the institution takes charge of it, but does not expend the money.

Mr. THURMAN. They take the money; and I know very well that I read from a report here once in which General BUTLER spoke very disparagingly of some of these soldiers, because he said that they managed to get discharged just before their pension became due, and then drew their pension and went right back into the asylum. But I wish to know, suppose these various stoppages, these various sources of revenue to these institutions prove insufficient, who makes up the deficit?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. They have not thus far proved insufficient; they have been ample, and there is a fund on hand of about a half million dollars. General BUTLER, who I understand is president of the board, was before the committee and stated the facts, and he probably will ask the House of Representatives, but not on this bill, for some $400,000 in addition to the accumulations on hand, for the next year, not this present year. So the Senator will see that the whole policy in regard to this institution by this part of the bill is changed. Whereas they were founded and have been supported up to the present time by these stoppages, in the future they are to be differently provided for. Then the question comes how Congress will support them.

Mr. THURMAN. I would inquire how much these institutions cost?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My recollection is, from a statement of the president before the committee, between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. THURMAN. And does the chairman tell us that the stoppages amount to eight or nine hundred thousand dollars a year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. These asylums have been established since about 1867 or 1868, and they have collected several millions.

It is suggested by my friend from California that I am mistaken about the amount, and that the $900,000 will cover a year and a quarter's appropriation. It may be that I am mistaken, but the annual expenditures have been somewhere between seven and nine hundred thousand dollars, doubtless. I cannot speak accurately, but my impression about it is that the whole accumulations have amounted to somewhere between three and five million dollars, probably nearer the latter than the former.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1201, in the appropriations for the office of the Adjutant-General, to strike out the word "two" where it occurs the second time and insert the word "three;" in line 1202, to strike out the word "three" and insert "six;" in line 1203, to strike out the word "ten" and insert "twenty;" in line 1204, to strike out the word "thirty-nine" and to insert "sixty," and in line 1206, to strike out "$274,800" and insert "$320,600;" so as to make the paragraph read:

In the office of the Adjutant-General:
One chief clerk, at $2,000; nine clerks of class four; fifteen clerks of class three; twenty-five clerks of class two; one hundred clerks of class one; three temporary clerks of class four; six temporary clerks of class three; twenty temporary clerks of class two; sixty temporary clerks of class one; ten messengers, at $840 each; in all, $320,600; and the said temporary clerks are for one year only, and no longer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the office of the Surgeon-General, in line 1251 to strike out the word "eight" and insert "sixteen;" in line 1252 to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twenty-three;" and in line 1253, after the word "twenty," to insert "eight;" so as to read:

In the office of the Surgeon-General:
One chief clerk, at $2,000; six clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; sixteen clerks of class two; one hundred and twenty three clerks of class one, (twenty-eight of whom shall be temporary;) one anatomist at the Army Medical Museum, at $1,600; one engineer in division of records and museum, at $1,400; one messenger, at $840; twenty-two watchmen and laborers, (six of whom are temporary,) at $720 each; in all, $208,880.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the action of the committee. Since this has taken place, I have had a communication from the Surgeon-General, and I submit it to the Senate, and especially to my associates on the committee, in which he proposes, in line 1250, in lieu of six clerks of class four to insert "nine;" on the following line to strike out "eight" and insert "ten;" and on the next line to strike out "four" and insert "seven." It will be seen that this does not increase the force at all. It retains the same number of clerks, but transfers them, so that it gives more of a higher class, the object being simply to retain clerks who are absolutely in the office and performing duties, so that this amendment shall not reduce them to lower grades. That is all there is of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does it affect the money question, the total expense?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It affects the total expense about $1,800.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Against the Treasury, I suppose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir, against the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Always.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is to be said of it is that here are several clerks in these higher grades, and they have been there a great while. They are worthy clerks. As it now stands, the paragraph would reduce them to lower grades. The Surgeon-General appeals in their behalf, and asks the Senate to transpose these clerkships so as to retain these old clerks in the higher classes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the emoluments that are appropriate thereto.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I make the motion I have suggested, and submit it to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In line 1250 to make "six" read "nine;" in the following line to made "four" read "seven;" in the next line to make "eight" read "ten."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Secretary be authorized to change the footings of the various paragraphs where it is necessary to make them correspond with the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert the following proviso after the word "dollars," in line 1272, at the end of the clause appropriating for clerks, &c., in the office of the Chief of Ordnance:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to employ in said Bureau not exceeding thirteen enlisted men for one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 1324, 1325, and 1326, as follows:

For superintendent of building on Tenth street, occupied as the Surgeon-General's Office, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 1332 the following clause:

For superintendent of building on Tenth street, occupied as the Surgeon-General's Office, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Department of the Interior, from lines 1437 to 1441, inclusive, to increase the item "for stationery, furniture, advertising, telegraphing, cases for official records, ice, and miscellaneous items, including new books and books to complete broken sets, and cases and maps for library," from $12,000 to $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the following items:

For rent and fitting up additional rooms for the use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $16,000.
For casual repairs of the Department building, $20,000.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee something in regard to these very large appropriations of $16,000 "for rent and fitting up of additional rooms for the use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education," and $20,000 "for casual repairs of the Department building," and on line 1453 there is another appropriation of repairs for that building and for completing the F street portico of $65,000. We all know that the Department of the Interior is one of the most solid structures in the country; the material of which it is built is almost imperishable. This is an item of a class that has come into almost every appropriation bill that has been passed for the last five or six years to my knowledge. I would ask the honorable Senator whether there has been anything submitted by this Bureau of Education, which already is provided for and which has grown with a very unhealthy growth as I think, to show that it should have this large appropriation, or why upon a marble building so large a sum as $20,000 is necessary for casual repairs; and again why, not for casual repairs but for an alteration made necessary by the exceedingly reckless manner of changing the grades of the streets adopted in this District, $65,000 is to be appropriated by the same bill? I would ask my honorable friend from Maine whether these large appropriations have been criticised by him and whether he does consider that they are moderate and just, whether such sums of money should be poured out constantly upon a building which from the very nature of the material of which it is constructed, expensive in its origin, should certainly be without the necessity of constant repairs; but here for a mere casual repair and fitting up of offices we find $101,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The questions which the Senator from Delaware propounds are very natural. I have been through that process a great many times since I have been upon the Committee on Appropriations. These incidental expenses have always been among the most difficult of the items to ascertain precisely what should be allowed. They are like incidental expenses of housekeeping in families. They come round every year; we never know precisely why they should come and sometimes we doubt whether they ought to come, but they do. Take the first item of $16,500 "for stationery, furniture, advertising, telegraphing, cases for official records, ice, and miscellaneous items," &c. If my honorable friend will look to the report which is submitted every year at the early part of the session, he will find all these various items of contingent expenses accounted for.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no doubt the money is spent, but my objection is that it is not necessary to be spent. My friend speaks of housekeeping expenses——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Well, I will say in a general way that for the last five or six years all these incidental expenses such as we are now considering in these several items have been cut down very much indeed. Especial attention has been paid to that branch of expenditure in all the Departments with a view of cutting them down, and they have been cut down. They have passed under the very careful and scrutinizing attention of the committees of both Houses, and to my certain knowledge there has been no disposition to increase these items.

It will be seen on page 59, among the items to which my attention has been called, that one has been increased by $4,500, from $12,000 to $16,500, and that upon a careful examination at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, who suggested that it was really just to the head of that Department that that item should be so increased.

I would make a single remark upon another item; that is, "for casual repairs of the Department building, $20,000." That seems large, to be sure, but there is an acre of room in that building.

Mr. BAYARD. This is for casual repairs for one year, and not only that, but we have in the same bill $65,000 for other matters connected with the mere alteration of the surface of the streets.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is extraordinary, of course; but when we come to the question of casual repairs, my experience is that as much as we hesitate about these items every time that I have undertaken to examine the question with a view of bringing them within the closest possible limits that was possible, the Committee on Appropriations have never been able to dispense with these items. Now, they are within the necessities of the ordinary expenditures for these purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator from Maine any information on this topic in respect of the expenditure of the $20,000 appropriated for this same purpose last year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So I see. It is the same as during the current year, which has not yet expired. Twenty thousand dollars was appropriated to be used for casual repairs of this building, none of the extraordinary ones. Are not the committee able to tell us in what general respects this money has been expended and whether all of it has been spent?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As a matter of fact, the reports show that they do expend it. They could get along, doubtless, if we were to say $10,000; they would be obliged to get along; but the experience has been that this is about what they expend ordinarily year in and year out for casual repairs. I have in my hands the report of the Secretary of the Interior, giving the amount of the entire expenditures of these incidental and miscellaneous items. I have examined it from time to time with a great deal of care. Sometimes we cut down these items, sometimes we do not; but where they average each year about the same, unless our attention is particularly called to it, we generally assume that it has become a pretty settled thing that about so much money is necessary each year for the casual repairs.

Mr. SARGENT. As a sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations, I think last year—it is possible that it may have been the year before—I went to the Interior Department with one or two others in order to investigate this very item, and we went up on the roof, the copper roof there, and we found that the heat of the sun and the variations in temperature had pulled apart the seams of the roofing; we found hundreds of places over that immense roof where it had been soldered and resoldered, where new sheets of copper had been put on, and so forth; and it was obvious that it was a very expensive and difficult job to keep that immense roof in repair. Among other investigations which we made, we looked at the walls through the corridors and in the rooms, some of which had become, by the smoke and gas and by the silent operation of time, darkened and blackened, which are calcimined or whitened in various parts. We found that part of this money was expended for rehanging doors where they break or get out of order, for the repairing of window-frames and all the various affairs made necessary in an enormous building like that.

After a thorough investigation, the sub-committee were satisfied, and so reported, that the amount which was appropriated, $20,000, was not more than was necessary to keep that building in order. These items do not pass the committee sub silentio, or assuming that because they have heretofore been appropriated they are to be for all time appropriated; but year by year we take up items of this character and inquire into the details of the expenditure, whether the money is judiciously expended or not, and whether we cannot cut down the sum; and I desire to say for the benefit of the Committee on Appropriations that by looking over the bills for several years past, it will be found that such items have diminished rather than increased. Where there is an extraordinary item like that in line 1453, it is on account of exceptional circumstances. For instance, there was a change in the grade of the streets. I do not agree with my friend from Delaware that so far as that instance is concerned it was an improvident one. It has been really a benefit to the Government to have the unsightly bank between these two public buildings, covering up the lower windows, removed, and the benefit is very far beyond the amount which it will cost to repair the lower story of the Post-Office building and to put on the additions to the portico of the Interior Department. We shall be able the coming fiscal year to utilize a very large part of the lower story of the Post-Office building and use it for offices for clerks, and especially for depositing the voluminous files of the Department, and will be able thereby not only to get more room, but to save the renting of some buildings; so that really the operation which has taken place by lowering the streets has been greatly for the benefit of the Government, by giving it the use of its buildings which before has been prevented by the unsightly bank which covered up the lower portion of the buildings.

But I meant to speak particularly with reference to this outlay for casual repairs. If the judgment of the sub-committee was worth anything, it certainly was deliberately formed upon an examination of the details of the expenditure.

Mr. BAYARD. That was last year.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir. The appropriation was the same for last year as this for casual repairs; for instance, keeping the big roof in order. The operation of the sun each year being the same on that immense copper structure, it would follow that about the same scale of repairs would be necessary each year. There would be about the same amount of whitening of the walls required; there would be about the same amount of windows accidentally broken, and of doors which by rough use would become unhung.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The item has gone up from $14,000 for the year 1873-'74 to $20,000 last year and $20,000 this year. If you keep it at that rate, in a few years it will get to be $50,000.

Mr. BAYARD. One fact I think is not to be disputed by any one, and that is that any amount of money that is appropriated will undoubtedly be expended. If you were to make this appropriation for casual repairs $250,000, I doubt not that the money would be expended. The question is as to whether it is a just and economical expenditure. I admit the amount will seem very small to people who are dealing with the magnificent figures that members of Congress of either House contemplate when they are spending the money of the public. But I must say that it appears to me that having had this expenditure of $20,000 in the past year for what the Senator from California, no doubt very properly, says were essential repairs, we ought to be spared the outlay for the present year. This large sum was expended, and I have no doubt ten times the sum would have been expended if it were appropriated; no doubt it will always be so. If we provide a fund to be drawn upon, there will be plenty of ways and means found to expend it.

However, sir, I propose to follow out my own theory in regard to this matter, and offer to amend line 1447 by striking out "$16,000" and inserting "$8,000," so that there will be $8,000 appropriated "for rent and fitting up of additional rooms for the use of the Pension Office and Bureau of Education."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senator will allow us to go on with the amendments of the committee.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well; if I can offer the amendment hereafter, I will not move it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1469, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office from $3,000 to $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if this is an increase of salary in an appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is; by a thousand dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the chairman of the committee think it right to increase salaries in the appropriation bills? I thought it had been determined a session or two ago that we would not do it in that way if salaries were to be increased.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it has been very frequently determined both ways. The committee recommend this upon the ground that the country derives great benefit from that office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1471, in the appropriations for the General Land Office, to insert—

Law clerk, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1479, to increase the total appropriation for clerks, &c., of the General Land Office from $171,920 to $174,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1481 and 1482, in the items "for additional clerks on account of military bounty lands" in the General Land Office, to strike out the words "principal clerk $2,000," and in line 1484 to reduce the total appropriation from $52,640 to $50,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1593, in the appropriations for the United States Patent Office, to increase the item "for photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of current and back issues for use of the office and for sale, including pay of temporary draughtsman," from $40,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line 1593, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1876, the grade of third assistant examiner in the Patent Office shall cease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the United States courts, page 76, to strike out all from line 1854 to line 1875, being the following proviso to the appropriation "for compensation of the district marshals of the United States:"

Provided, That the provisions of an act "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875," approved June 16, 1874, which prohibit the allowance of mileage to persons holding employment or appointment under the United States, shall not be so construed as to apply to the legal traveling fees of United States marshals or deputy marshals. And all accounts of said marshals or their deputies, for expenses and mileage, incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall be audited, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, in the same manner as if said act had not been passed; but no fees shall be allowed for constructive mileage, and every claim for mileage shall be accompanied by sworn proof that the distance for which mileage is claimed was actually and necessarily traveled by the officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Court of Claims, in line 1885 to strike out "postage."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "repairs," in line 1896, to insert "on old desks and tables in the clerk's office and court-room;" so as to make the clause read:

To complete the repairs on old desks and tables in the clerk's office and court-room commenced last year, $550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 1924 and 1925, to reduce the appropriation for law and miscellaneous books for the library of the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury from $1,000 to $500; and in line 1928, to reduce the total appropriation for contingent expenses of the Department of Justice from $16,000 to $15,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the second section of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Iowa shall be held at the times and places now provided by law for holding the United States district court in and for said district; but the circuit judge shall not be required to sit in said court except at Des Moines. Causes removed from any court of the State of Iowa into the circuit court of the United States within said district shall be removed to the nearest circuit court, unless the parties thereto shall otherwise agree: Provided, That all appeals or writs of error allowed by law from the district court to the circuit court for Iowa shall be taken to the circuit court at Des Moines, to be heard by said court when held by one or more circuit judges: And provided further, That the judge of the district court for said district of Iowa may in his discretion order that the same jurors be summoned to serve in the circuit and district courts when held at the same time and place and at a place other than Des Moines.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senate will not agree to the striking out of this second section. The object of the section is to provide for the holding of circuit courts at the places where the district courts are now held in Iowa. This is a provision that was inserted in the House of Representatives after very full consideration by the Judiciary Committee of that House. It is a very necessary provision in order to facilitate the transaction of business in the circuit court in our State. It is in accord with the precedents in many other States. There can certainly be no objection to it. It does not increase the expense in any way, and I trust that gentlemen will allow this provision to pass. It is true it is in the nature of new legislation, but it was not inserted in the Senate, but inserted, after a very full consideration, in the House of Representatives by a two-thirds vote. I trust there will be no objection to the provision remaining in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much surprised at two things stated by the Senator from Iowa about this business. The first is that one of the members of the Committee on Appropriations should insist that entirely distinct legislation, which has nothing whatever to do with any part of the subject of this bill, and which is of a character considered by another committee of this body that has before it two or three propositions from that State already for consideration, and perhaps twenty or more from all the other States—that this particular contrivance for the State of Iowa in respect of the holding of its courts should be taken out of the ordinary course and forced through on an appropriation bill.

My second point of surprise is that the Senator from Iowa, in order to persuade the Senate that it ought to do him this favor, or justice, or whatever it may be, has thought it necessary to back it up here by stating what the other House thought about it, and how large the majority there was. I have been under the impression that it was not a suitable thing for Senators to urge measures here by the force of the momentum of the members of that body of gentlemen who sit in the south wing of the Capitol. Perhaps I am mistaken about that. Certainly it is not a matter that I shall take any time to refer to further than I have done.

But, on the merit of the thing itself, if we are to have any order in legislation at all, and are to have matters considered by the appropriate committees, and to let every Senator have a fair opportunity to have legislation for his section brought forward and considered in its order, there is no justification, as the committee itself has thought, in forcing into this bill—whether done in one wing of the Capitol or another makes no difference—a provision entirely foreign to the bill itself, and regulating the judicial or any other Departments of the Government. On that theory we might properly, and I do not know but that we ought to do it, report all the measures before the Judiciary Committee which we think ought to pass right upon this bill, because all that ought to pass are necessary and proper, as the Senator thinks this is. I do not know, neither does the Judiciary Committee know, whether this is a provision that is proper or not, because the Senator has never brought it to our attention, by bill or otherwise, to be considered. If I did not know the patriotism of my friend so well as I do, I should be inclined to suspect that it was because it was not very meritorious that it had not been referred to the proper committee for consideration; but I do not impute that to him. I have no doubt that he thinks it is meritorious, and that he thinks it a case of urgency; but I appeal to him, as a Senator and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, desirous of having legislation proceeded with in a proper and regular way, not to insist upon maintaining this provision in this bill. I am glad to see that his committee has reported to strike it out.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, perhaps I ought to apologize to the Senator and to the Senate for making any allusion to what was done in the other branch. I agree with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that it is not quite in good taste perhaps to have this provision in the bill; but it is here, it is a part of this bill, and the Committee on Appropriations only struck it out because they thought it ought not to be placed in an appropriation bill; and this day we have legislated independently upon this very bill. Upon motion of the Senator from Vermont, a number of independent provisions were added to this bill. It is true they related to a Bureau of the Treasury Department already in existence——

Mr. EDMUNDS. And pointed out how the money was to be spent.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, the matter is before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Whether it will be reported at this session or not I do not know. I only know that it is necessary to promote justice in Iowa that this provision should be adopted. It is nothing more nor less than a provision requiring the circuit court to sit where the district court sits in the State of Iowa, a provision that exists in many of the States in this Union; one that exists in the Senator's own State. If I understand the law correctly, the circuit court in the State of Vermont sits in three different places. In Iowa, with a territorial area of fifty-five thousand square miles, we are compelled to transact our circuit-court business at the capital of the State only, thus compelling witnesses, litigants, and attorneys to go to the capital of our State to transact their business, instead of allowing the judges to go and sit at the several places where the district court is now held, convenient to the suitors. That is all there is in the section. There is no principle involved in it. It is not difficult to see that it is for the convenience of suitors that the circuit court should be held at the different places where the district court is held. I have examined the statutes, and I find that in a number of States, perhaps not in all of them, the circuit court is held at all the places where the district court is held. The question is, whether or not this is a proper provision to be inserted upon our statutes? I do not think that it needs any great consideration from any committee of this House to see that in a State of the territorial area of Iowa a provision of this kind will have the effect to promote the interests of those who are compelled to go into our courts.

I might say one word further in reference to the United States courts in Iowa. There is at this time an unusual amount of business transacted in these courts, arising from the fact that nearly all our railroad corporations in the State are foreign corporations, and the business of the circuit court has so accumulated within the last two or three years as to deprive litigants of justice rather than to secure justice to them.

I appreciate the importance of having all matters relating to the courts considered first in the Judiciary Committee, and if this matter was of any great moment or had any particular interest outside of the State of Iowa, I should of course desire that it should receive the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary; but it does not seem to me that it is of that importance which would require such consideration. I hope the section will not be struck out.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator from Iowa has stated the grounds of objection which the committee had to this section, namely: that it was independent legislation, having no reference to this bill whatever, and it was impossible for the committee to know whether it was a proper thing to do in and of itself. It is sufficient to say that it has no relation to any subject whatever in this bill. It is originally and absolutely independent legislation; it does not belong to this bill, and it did not occur to the committee that there was any especial necessity for it anywhere. It is a matter that should be examined by an independent committee, who have the opportunity of inquiring in regard to it, so that they would not be embarrassed by such considerations as arise in this bill.

Mr. President, there is no practice probably in the Congress of the United States so vicious as the attempt to put general legislation upon an appropriation bill. Now turn back to the seventy-sixth page of this bill and see what we have done. In this bill we have stricken out a proviso that relates to the regulation of the fees of marshals of the United States. That proviso undertakes to correct legislation of last session, upon an appropriation bill, by which Congress regulated the fees of marshals and determined the general principle upon which mileage should be paid in the civil service generally. The result of it was that it was unconsidered. That had some little relation to the appropriation bill, to be sure, but it was in its nature general legislation. The result of the whole thing was disastrous. An attempt has been made here to correct it on an appropriation bill, which is itself independent legislation. The Committee on Appropriations, upon the ground that it was independent legislation and did not belong to them to consider, and that they could not intelligently consider it, struck it out; and I think the Senate ought to keep these bills free from independent legislation. If they do not, there will be no end to the difficulties and complications which must come from legislation on such subjects in such way.

Mr. CONKLING. I have heard no Senator affirm that this proposition in itself, regardless of its place upon an appropriation bill, is not meritorious. If any Senator has made such a statement, the statement has escaped me. If it be meritorious and just to allow a term of the circuit court to be held in the great and growing State of Iowa at more than one single place, and if it be right to do that now, I am not quite satisfied, for one, even with my notions which I thought were somewhat rigid on the true mission of an appropriation bill and the propriety of keeping it intact, that that reason alone should cause the rejection of this proposition. If the Senator from Iowa had moved it as an amendment upon the appropriation bill in the Senate, I should be fully with the Senator from Vermont and would say the Senator ought to introduce it as an independent proposition, ought to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary and let it incur the hazard which waits upon all such propositions. But on the other hand the House of Representatives, in which this bill originated, in which such bills appropriately originate, has seen fit to make an exception to what we think should be the general rule, and to select this appropriation bill as the bill in which to incorporate this provision. It is proposed in the Senate to strike it out, and proposed to strike it out by a committee which has moved upon the same bill new and general legislation.

My honorable friend from Maine observed, I think, that the provision about a Statistical Bureau was there with a sort of harmony because there was an appropriation in the bill to pay for the gathering of statistics. I think I might say to the honorable Senator that there are appropriations in this bill also which relate to matters that have a good deal to do with courts, and by parity of reasoning I do not see why I cannot say that this is a very symmetrical amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend did not quite understand what I did say. It was not original legislation; it was an appropriation in conformity with the act of Congress providing for a Bureau of Statistics. The House had simply neglected to make that appropriation. It became the duty of the Committee on Appropriations, as I stated, to appropriate for the Bureau of Statistics. To that amendment was added one condition. That was all. Therefore the Bureau of Statistics was provided for by law, and was legitimately and properly in the bill. The amendment was germane to that Bureau. That was the condition of the case. There was no original matter in the bill in that respect.

Mr. CONKLING. It seems that I did fully understand the honorable Senator from Maine. He excuses the provision in the bill to which I referred by showing that it relates to a topic which was mentioned in the bill, and he denies that it was in any sense original legislation.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But my honorable friend does not state me at all correctly now. The amendment was to provide for a Bureau of Statistics which was established by the law of 1866; and the only new matter was an amendment to that amendment, which was in itself germane to the amendment providing for the Bureau.

Mr. CONKLING. So I understood the honorable Senator to say before, Mr. President. I will not venture to restate it because, after my experience, I know I shall make a mistake. The Senator hears me, and I venture to suggest to him that his position is just about as applicable to the thing we are to vote upon as it is to the other portion of the bill. Here a court is to be held in one additional place. There not only a Bureau was to be changed as to its original functions, but it was to be born again and made over with all the modern improvements and perhaps some more. I think the cases are very much alike.

But, Mr. President, I rose to say that the House of Representatives having put this section upon an appropriation bill, we finding it there and finding in the bill other matters which I will not characterize lest I might not conform to the understanding of the honorable chairman of the committee, it seems to me it will not be a very heart-rending or distressing matter if we allow the Senator from Iowa to have his little proposition considered here on its merits, just as it would be if it had come in on some other bill which as an original proposition might be more appropriate for it. Therefore I think I shall have to vote, and I trust some other Senators will join me in voting, upon this amendment in respect of its merits, what ought to be done and not merely in respect of its presence upon this bill. The session is very short. The Senator from Iowa is not likely to besiege us with many requests. It is not his wont. If he loses his proposition here it is quite likely that he may not have it considered again, and therefore I think he had better make hay while the sun shines and hold on to the provision while he has it before us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad to gain wisdom from the lips of the Senator from New York, as I certainly do when he tells us that he is usually very rigid about these matters, and it is only in a clear case—for that is the substance of it, as I understand him—that he would think of allowing legislation of this character unconsidered by the appropriate committee (and in respect of which the Committee on Appropriations who have reported against it say, through their chairman, that they do not know whether the legislation in itself is right or wrong) to be put upon this bill. If I did not know the Senator from New York so well, know his character and his patriotism and his independence, I should imagine that his rigidness depended upon his degree of friendship or otherwise to the particular gentleman who had a proposition to make, for that is all the evidence of rigidity that I perceive about the attitude of the honorable Senator from New York. In that respect I cannot allow myself to be outdone. I claim to be just as friendly to the Senator from Iowa, to all his measures, as the Senator from New York can be; but I say that when the Judiciary Committee has, as it is stated, this measure in two or three forms before it and has it under consideration, and twenty other measures of the same character and just as important locally as this measure is, in order that we may recommend to the Senate what it is wise and right to do, it is improper to have legislation of this kind in this appropriation bill.

The Senator says it comes from the House of Representatives. What difference does that make? Has the House any special right to put a provision into this bill that we have not a special right to take out if we think it is in the wrong place? You cannot distinguish between a proposition of the House and a proposition made here in the Senate. I take it it is our right to amend this section in respect to adding other districts and circuits, and just as great a right as that of the House to put in this. No such distinction can stand; and if Senators think it wise to put this in, it being a local measure, I certainly should not feel at liberty to object to other Senators putting in their measures. There is one I have in my eye from the Senator from Texas. There are one or two propositions from Iowa which I believe I am personally in favor of respecting their courts and districts. Where are you to stop? It is impossible to get on equitably. I should be very glad to oblige the Senator from Iowa, but I do not think it is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment reported by the committee, striking out the second section of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to inquire, if the Senate should agree to the report of the committee striking out this section, whether it would then be in order to amend it?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is in order to amend now.

Mr. CONKLING. It is in order to amend now, and it will be in order after we vote down the motion of the committee to strike out.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Davis, Edmunds, Fenton, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, Kelly, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Sprague, Stevenson, and Wright—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boreman, Cameron, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morton, Ogleaby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, and Washburn—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boutwell, Brownlow, Buckingham, Carpenter, Chandler, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Jones, Lewis, McCreery, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, West, and Windom—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I have consulted my colleague, and propose an amendment as a substitute for the second section, which I send to the Chair. This amendment, if adopted, will answer the purpose as regards the courts in our State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the motion made by the Senator from Iowa to strike out the section and substitute the section sent to the Chair is now in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When we get through the committee's amendments, we can strike out and insert something else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that an order was adopted to proceed with the amendments submitted by the Committee on Appropriations; and when those are gone through with any other amendment can be offered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope we shall finish this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot finish the bill to-night? It is totally impossible. We are not out of committee yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 19, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—PACIFIC MAIL.

Mr. STORM. Within the last half hour, I have been informed of a communication in the New York Daily Tribune of January 18—yesterday. I understand that the same communication has appeared in other papers throughout the country. I deem it my duty at the very first opportunity to make a personal explanation in regard to it. I ask the Clerk to read the paragraph I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The books in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms would, without doubt, show the names of the other fifteen or sixteen, since the deposit will appear in their accounts; or, if they were broken up, payment was probably made by check. The names of five of those on the list prepared by Dillon have been ascertained with a considerable degree of certainty. They are believed to be as follows: CHARLES HAYS of Alabama, J. HALE SYPHER of Louisiana, Boyd Winchester of Kentucky, Daniel W. Voorhees of Indiana, JOHN B. STORM, of Pennsylvania. The first two are republicans and the last three democrats. One of them, Mr. STORM, is said to have voted against the bill. The manner in which the money was distributed was very simple, and as was supposed, perfectly safe. The thousand-dollar note was inclosed in an envelope and sent to the member of Congress with no accompanying communication. This enabled the agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to swear that he never paid any member of Congress any money to vote for the bill, and the recipient to swear that he never received any money from the company or any of its agents.

Mr. STORM. As many of the members of this House know, in the Forty-second Congress a committee of the House was directed to investigate this charge of corruption in regard to the passage of the so-called Pacific Mail subsidy. A friend of mine intimated to me that the then paying-teller of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, Mr. Dillon, had been before the Committee on Ways and Means and had there produced a paper, (and I was also informed by members of that committee,) a memorandum of the initials of certain persons who had had one thousand dollar bills changed in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms. This was alleged to be some time in May, I think, immediately after the passage of the subsidy. I heard it rumored that my name was, or the initials of my name, "J. B. S.," were, upon that list. I immediately went before that committee, and they informed me that they had examined the record in regard to my action on the subject, and had no doubt that a mistake had been made and that they were satisfied with the matter without proceeding further. I insisted upon being called before the committee and being sworn; I was examined. I will state here, as I stated then, that never in my life have I had a thousand-dollar bill changed in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House. I stated before the committee at that time, and I state now, that I never in my life had a thousand-dollar bill; and of course I could not have had one changed. I stated that before the committee, and I state it here this day upon my honor as a man and a Representative of the people—that I never had a thousand-dollar bill. Being a poor man, it was too much for me ever to have had and not have recollected it. Either there was a mistake made by the paying-teller in putting down my initials, as being those of a man who had had a thousand-dollar bill changed in his office, or else the list was not properly made, if he intended to include me.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what more I can say or do in this matter in order to refute this foul and slanderous charge. I have been in Congress well-nigh four years. I have never voted for any subsidy, or for any land grant, or for anything that the newspapers of the country have even hinted was a job. I fought this subsidy all the way through, step by step, as the record shows. I voted for the adverse amendment offered by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I not only voted against the bill, but I spoke against it with more vehemence and earnestness than I ever spoke against any other bill in my life. And now if my record, my whole public action, my sworn statement before the committee, and this my solemn statement before the House, made in all truthfulness, as I shall answer to God at the great day, is not a sufficient refutation, I do not know what can protect the name of a public man.

I understand that the paying teller of the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Dillon, has said that this list was made up some time in the month of May, 1872. Yet I am reported in the Globe as having made a speech against the subsidy as early as March 20, 1872. And I am recorded as having voted on May 20 for the amendment offered by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] And I am also recorded as having voted against the proposition as it finally passed this House, in the shape in which it came to us from the Senate. Not only that, but I can appeal to members around me who will recollect in regard to votes taken in Committee of the Whole, of which of course no record is made, and they will state that upon the vote by tellers in Committee of the Whole I voted against this proposition in every shape.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that a member of Congress might have had a one thousand dollar bill changed, as stated by Dillon, without the imputation of corruption. Yet in this case, as a matter of fact, I have to say that I had no such bill changed. I have frequently had bills changed at the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, but never one as large as one thousand.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I owe it to this House, I owe it to the country, I owe it to my constituents, to say that not one dollar was ever paid me directly or indirectly by any one to influence my action on the Pacific Mail subsidy or upon any other question ever before Congress; and I appeal to my record upon all questions before Congress for my vindication.

Mr. Speaker, on the 12th of March, 1872, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] moved the amendment, I think, to increase the subsidy from $500,000 to $1,000,000. On the 20th of March, 1872, the question came up in the Committee of the Whole. The Congressional Globe, volume 89, page 1842, reports me as saying:

Mr. STORM. I oppose this proposition, upon the principle of principiis obsta—oppose the first beginnings. There is not a gentleman of this committee who has spoken upon this subject who has not said in general terms that he is opposed to subsidies; but each one who has favored this proposition has found an excuse for himself for this particular measure. The gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. GARFIELD,] has his particular reason for supporting this subsidy, although to his mind the word "subsidy" means something obnoxious and odious. My friend from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN,] who has spoken in favor of the subsidy, says he finds it to be sui generis: that there is something peculiar about it. And my friend from New York, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] who gives this measure his support, does so upon the ground that it is no subsidy at all. He is anxious to have it adopted as a measure for extending the mail service; that it is to pay for carrying the mail on routes where it does not now pay. Sir, no other gentleman who has spoken upon this subject, except the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] has put it on that ground. The friends of the subsidy have said that they asked for it, not because it was for carrying the mails, but that it was in the interest of commerce. Does any one say that the sum of $500,000 a year is not sufficient to pay for carrying the mails from San Francisco to China? No one says so but the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

Sir, it is a subsidy in the pretended interest of commerce, and nothing else. My friend from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] just behind me, says that this shall not be a precedent for him. Why, it is impossible not to make it a precedent. A court might as well make a decision upon general principles, and then turn around and say that it did not want that decision to be regarded as a precedent in other cases just like it. There are Atlantic lines whose claims upon the Government are as meritorious as those of the Pacific Mail; how could the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] refuse those lines governmental aid after voting for this measure? If he did not vote for aid to these lines, he would be abused by the Secretary of the Treasury and the friends of this subsidy policy as opposed to the revival of American commerce and of belonging to a party that had a crab-like policy.

I am afraid that when we in our verdancy voted $50,000 to pay the expenses of the Japanese embassy we did not apprehend that we were setting up a job on ourselves. I believe that whole thing has been arranged for stage effect; that the Japanese embassy was brought over here by this very company that is now seeking this subsidy, for the purpose of influencing our legislation. And my good Japanese friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has moved this amendment to increase the subsidy to this steamship line to the sum of $1,000,000 a year, in pursuance of a prearranged plan. Sir, it looks to me like a job all the way through.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dickey] says there are those classes of men who will not vote for this proposition. I say that probably there are five or six classes who will go for it. Every lobbyist now in and around this Hall is in favor of it, as he is using his influence to pass it. Every banker, every broker, every speculator will go for it. Every man who has stock or is a director in either the Union Pacific Railroad, the Central Pacific Railroad, or the Pacific Mail Steamship Company will go for it. This steamship company is but the tail to the Central Pacific Railroad; their interests are identical. I am opposed to this proposition, because by the combination of these corporations you will crush out all competition, which is the life of trade. Any company which might be a competing line may be destroyed by the adoption of this proposition. We all know that it would at any time be bad policy to destroy a competing line in this country. Extending our commerce by destroying one line to enrich another is impossible.

I am opposed to it because it increases the revenues and influence of a corporation which spans this continent and the Pacific Ocean; a corporation owning $55,000,000 of our bonds, and property to the value of $300,000,000; a corporation to which that hydra-headed monster, the United States Bank, strangled to death by Jackson, cannot be compared; a corporation that can and does control the election of members of Congress in the States through which its roads pass; a corporation which possesses more influence for evil than all others combined, and one to which the liberties of this country are in danger of being sacrificed.—Congressional Globe, Forty-second Congress, second session, page 1842, May 20, 1872.

On the same day I voted in committee against that amendment, as gentlemen around me will testify.

May 21, 1872, the Congressional Globe, volume 91, page 3679, shows that I voted for the adverse amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, and the next page shows that I voted against the Senate amendment which increased the subsidy to $1,000,000.

Thus at every stage of the measure I opposed it, because I then thought it wrong in principle and think so yet.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am no longer a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, but I was a member of that committee in the last Congress. I mention this fact to show that I am probably at liberty to speak more freely than those gentlemen who were then members of the committee and are now members of the same committee, or than I would feel myself at liberty to do were I still a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. This subject of the Pacific Mail subsidy was under investigation by that committee during the last Congress. The names of certain gentlemen of the House were submitted to the committee as being implicated. The committee, feeling the gravity of the matter not merely to the character of the House, but more especially to the gentlemen concerned, without promulging what had appeared before them, gave these gentlemen an opportunity to present themselves before the committee and be heard in relation to it. They were satisfied, I believe without dissent, that so far as any imputation might have seemed to rest upon these gentlemen of the House, there was not the slightest foundation to believe that they had received anything directly or indirectly, or that their official action in voting for or against the subsidy had been in the slightest degree affected by any other consideration than their regard for public duty. In other words—and in this I speak of the whole of them—there was nothing to throw a suspicion upon the integrity and character of these several gentlemen whose names were mentioned; and for this reason the committee thought it just to them that the matter should be suppressed and not go beyond the limits of the committee.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] whether Hon. Boyd Winchester, of Kentucky, did not appear before the committee and make a most satisfactory explanation of his account with the Sergeant-at-Arms, and show by the records of the Globe and the Journal that he had throughout consistently voted against the Pacific Mail subsidy in all the stages of its progress through this House?

Mr. MAYNARD. That gentleman was one of the parties. I have strictly avoided repeating any names; but my remarks are intended to include all the gentlemen—the gentleman's then colleague among the rest. It is true he appeared before the committee as stated and made an explanation, which was regarded as satisfactory.

Mr. SYPHER. I rise to a privileged question, since that seems to be the order this morning.

Mr. Speaker, my name appears in the report of the New York Tribune in connection with that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STORM,] who has spoken on this subject, as having had a thousand-dollar bill changed at the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House. That is a fact. I have had several one thousand-dollar bills changed there, and I have received a number of one thousand-dollar bills from the Sergeant-at-Arms since I have been a member of this House. If my account for this Congress is examined it will be found to amount to between fifteen and twenty thousand dollars, and there has been no Pacific Mail subsidy that I have knowledge of in this Congress.

It has been my custom to do my banking business through the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House; I have drawn my drafts from home through him, and I have paid drafts drawn on me through him. If you will examine my account there, you will find that it runs up to a considerable amount—even more than lobbyists, newspaper men, or others are in the habit of receiving for their influence upon lobby measures.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I voted for this Pacific Mail subsidy, and I spoke for it on this floor. If I had an opportunity I would do the same thing again. I believed it was right then and I believe it is right now. I believe it is high time for this Government to look after its commerce on the seas. It is time for this Government to pattern after England and France in this matter, who pay millions annually to support their great steamship lines. But that was not the principal reason why I voted for this measure. We had on the Speaker's table a bill which had already passed the Senate giving $125,000 to a line between New Orleans and the ports of Mexico, and I advocated the Pacific Mail line and the Brazilian line in order that their friends might vote for our measure, which had greater merit than any other bill ever presented to either House of Congress on a subject of that kind. Here is a country lying within three hundred miles of us and having a trade of $52,000,000 a year that is carried in British bottoms away from our doors; and this Government in its unwise and stupid policy has neglected and failed to devise any measure to direct this immense commerce into American channels for the benefit of American citizens. It was in the interest of that bill that was to accomplish this purpose that I advocated and voted for this Pacific Mail bill; and I would do the same thing again under the circumstances. I received no money for voting for that measure, and no man will take the responsibility of making such a charge. I have given my sworn testimony and denial on this point before the committee, and therefore will not detain the House further. This is my explanation.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a personal explanation. I want to say, in justice to my colleague, [Mr. STORM,] that during all the period of the controversy about the Pacific Mail subsidy that gentleman never wavered a moment in his opposition to that measure; that he constantly conferred with me and repeatedly urged me on in my opposition to it. I looked upon him as one of the most faithful opponents of that subsidy in the Forty-second Congress.

Now, sir, I initiated this investigation in consequence of a conversation which took place between Mr. STORM and myself, in which I understood him to say (and I so stated to the Ways and Means Committee) that he had himself been offered money to vote for this subsidy. But notwithstanding I so understood him, in no degree did he ever at any moment in his congressional career, when this question was in any way directly or indirectly involved, show front except in opposition, and strenuous opposition, to the measure.

I deem this statement due to an honored colleague, four years' association with whom has shown to my mind that he is as pure a man as lives.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I rise to a privileged question, and ask the Clerk to read a few words from the Chicago Tribune of Saturday, January 16.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SIMEON B. CHITTENDEN, who was elected in Brooklyn last fall to fill a vacancy in the present Congress, appears to be another of the members caught in the Pacific Mail business. Five thousand dollars—and what was Mr. CHITTENDEN's service for the money? Everybody supposed he was rich enough to keep clear of the lobby.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I do not suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the Chicago Tribune owes me any grudge; neither do I suppose that the Hartford Post, which is quoted by the Tribune as the author of the words just read, is in any degree unfriendly to me; but I wish to assure these very influential journals that they have for once mistaken their man. If there is anybody bearing my name in any wise complicated with the Pacific Mail business, it is not SIMEON B. CHITTENDEN, father or son, both of Brooklyn. And lest in clearing my own skirts I shall seem to reflect upon others, I will stop just here. But as the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] is present, if he has any information bearing directly upon the point, perhaps he will in his discretion give it to the House in this connection.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to state that I have in my hand the affidavit of Mr. L. E. Chittenden, of New York, saying that he is the man who received the money.

Mr. KASSON. The testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means shows that L. E. Chittenden, and never S. B. CHITTENDEN or SIMEON B. CHITTENDEN, was mentioned.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, I have a dispatch from a late colleague of mine, Mr. D. W. Voorhees, which I ask to have read in the hearing of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

TERRE HAUTE, January 18, 1875.

Hon. WILLIAM E. NIBLACK or Hon. J. B. BECK,
Washington, District of Columbia:

Specials from Washington to the Saint Louis Democrat, Cincinnati Gazette, and Chicago Inter-Ocean seek to implicate me in the Pacific Mail subsidy on Dillon's testimony. No greater outrage was ever perpetrated. Took leave of absence May 21 for the balance of the session, knowing nothing about the bill. I had no thousand dollar bill at that time nor the tenth of it, and I made no deposit of any amount with any one. If necessary for my vindication, summon me at once. I court and defy investigation. I never heard tell of the lobby in the interest of the subsidy. My innocence is absolute and must be made to appear. Answer.

D. W. VOORHEES.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire for a moment to say that I have examined carefully Mr. Voorhees's account with the Sergeant-at-Arms at that time, and find no such deposit made to his credit in the year 1872. Mr. Voorhees has been summoned before the Committee on Ways and Means, and in all probability will soon be here.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I have received a dispatch from one of my former colleagues in this House, Mr. Boyd Winchester, who also has been falsely libeled in this matter. He was a member of the last House of Representatives. He has been summoned, and will be here to speak for himself by day after to-morrow. I wish only to add that the record shows from beginning to end Mr. Winchester voted against this Pacific Mail subsidy—upon the yeas and nays and everywhere else—and that he appeared before the committee during the last Congress and made such a full and clear statement of all the facts that the committee refused to consider the matter further. He will do it again when he comes here.

WHITELAW REID.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege, and offer the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker to inquire whether the privileges of this House have been violated by the arrest and detention of Whitelaw Reid, of New York, at the suit of Alexander R. Shepherd, while said Reid was within the District of Columbia under a subpœna of a committee of this House authorized to send for persons and papers, and for the purpose of attending and returning as a witness before said committee; that they consider and report whether any and what legislation is necessary or expedient for the protection of witnesses coming into this District by order of either House of Congress.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, this House has not, as the Senate has, a committee on privileges; and while so many questions are occurring, it perhaps would be desirable there should be such a committee of the House, or that the Committee on Elections, as in the Senate, should also be a committee on privileges. There has been handed to me by a member of the House a statement giving a recital of facts referred to in the resolution. I thought it preferable to move a resolution of inquiry rather than one which would assert any state of facts in advance of investigation, as I was not of course prepared to make the statement upon any personal knowledge of my own of what had occurred. But it seems to me unless the privileges of the House do cover the protection of a witness compelled to attend in this District under the order of the House that some legislation which should extend a similar privilege to that which members of the House have of exemption from arrest, except for treason, felony, and breach of the peace, should be provided in such cases, and that it should be understood that no person can be summoned here and the fact used to his detriment in any of his civil relations.

Mr. COX. I ask my friend from Massachusetts whether this resolution gives power to that committee to report a law of any kind?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The words "with power to report at any time" are not included in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary if it is a question of privilege.

Mr. COX. Do I understand they are authorized to report a law on this subject? I hope there will be no delay, because this man is entitled to be at large at once.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I demand the previous question, unless some gentleman wishes to be heard on it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is that resolution open for discussion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] demands the previous question upon it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I should like to say a word.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I said that if any gentleman wished to speak upon the resolution I would yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do desire to say a word.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Then I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have stood here heretofore insisting that the privileges of this House do not extend to interfering with everybody's business and everybody's rights; to the imprisoning and setting at large of persons that the House may think fit should be imprisoned or set at large. Nor do I think that this House should interfere with the administration of criminal justice. If Mr. Reid should send into this District a packet of poison by which any man receiving it should receive injury in his person, he would be liable to be brought here by process and tried criminally for that act. But it is claimed that if he only sends a package of malicious falsehood, by which the reputation and good name of some citizen of this District are struck down, he may do it day after day without any animadversion; and if a law is or is supposed to have been passed which would make him amenable for the civil and for the criminal injury that he has done, that moment all the country should arouse, and we are called upon to extend the privileges which the Constitution has extended alone over us to him. I do not speak of the individual, but I speak of the principle; and I only use Mr. Reid's name because his name has been brought before the House.

I observed with some feeling, which was not akin to admiration, that when Mr. Reid was examined by the Committee on Ways and Means of this House, it was a secret examination. I observed that when others were examined, less shining lights of the press, it was an open examination. I assume that the Committee on Ways and Means had good reason for that; and although I say I did not admire it, yet it was none of my business and I say nothing about it, only that it shows how differently we treat the editor of one of these leading journals from what we do when we catch a poor correspondent who only gets $25,000 to turn over to the editor of a newspaper.

Now, then, sir, the privileges of the House are, it seems to me, no greater than those of a court of justice. And when a witness goes to a court of justice, unless he gets a protection from that court in the shape of a writ of protection in advance, he is not protected under the law in any State of this Union against a civil arrest; and no court ever yet undertook to protect a witness against criminal arrest when summoned by a judicial tribunal of the country to answer for a crime.

Now, if we are going to say that libel is no crime, be it so. I agree it has got to be a business, but I think it has not yet had taken away from it its distinctive character of crime. Why are we called upon to interfere? Mr. Reid has his full and adequate remedy in the judicial tribunal. If the judicial tribunal of the country, if the court by which he is holden thinks that Mr. Reid was protected as a witness from arrest either civil or criminal, it can enlarge him by setting aside the arrest as would be done by the court where a witness was appearing before it under its protection.

But why is it, Mr. Speaker, that when the business of the country is suffering; why is it when there has been no movement yet to amend our tax laws by which a threatened deficit in the Treasury may be averted; why is it while a whole section of the country is in a state of anarchy and confusion that requires all of the statesmanship, all of the time of this House to deal with the great questions that are pressing upon us in that regard—why is it that under these circumstances so large a portion of our time is taken up with these mere incidentals? Why is it when our Committee on Appropriations are rightly pressing out the morning hour in order that the necessary appropriations may not fail, excluding all ordinary business of the House, why is it that the morning hour and the evening hour are day after day taken up with these questions? Why not allow the ordinary judicial tribunals of the country to deal with men's rights while we deal with making the laws for the whole country?

Now, then, to come to the exact proposition of my colleague, it is, as I heard it from some who favor it, that we instantly and without examination at once make a law upon this subject. That law cannot affect Mr. Reid. We cannot make a retroactive law.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. My colleague will allow me to correct him. He will find no such proposition in the resolution. And when he says that is the proposition I think he misapprehends it. It is simply a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; I say I heard the proposition as I came in as stated by some who favor it.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I supposed my colleague was discussing the proposition before the House. It seems he is not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am discussing the proposition before the House. I say we cannot affect Mr. Reid in regard to his arrest if it be lawful, or his arrest if it be unlawful by anything we may do; and why should the House undertake to interfere by making a law under pretense that the privileges of this House are invaded which shall interfere with the action of the judicial tribunals?

I am aware that my colleague the other day insisted that the House was, as I understood it from the RECORD, above and beyond all judicial tribunals; but I appeal from my colleague as a member of the House, to my colleague as a judge. I hold in my hand the opinion of my colleague when he was on the bench of the supreme court of Massachusetts, and when a question came up there exactly as it comes up here; and if the Clerk is in good voice, will he read those lines that are marked there?

The Clerk read as follows:

The house of representatives—

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me; begin where I marked. The paragraph begins "HOAR, Justice."

The Clerk then read as follows:

HOAR, Justice. The house of reprepresentatives is not the final judge of its own powers and privileges in cases in which the rights and liberties of the subject are concerned; but the legality of its action may be examined and determined by this court. That house is not the Legislature, but only a part of it and therefore subject in its action to the laws, in common with all other bodies, officers, and tribunals within the Commonwealth. Especially is it competent and proper for this court to consider whether its proceedings are in conformity with the constitution and laws, because, living under a written constitution, no branch or department of the government is supreme; and it is the province and duty of the judicial department to determine, in cases regularly brought before them, whether the powers of any branch of the government, and even those of the Legislature in the enactment of laws, have been exercised in conformity with the constitution, and if they have not been, to treat their acts as null and void.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want no better doctrine than that. It meets my concurrence in every way and in every form. It is one of those exact, trenchant, and clear expositions of principle which I should have expected from my colleague standing anywhere, and I want to apply it to this case. We are acting under a written Constitution here. That Constitution gives members of Congress exemption from arrest except in case of felony, because it is necessary that we should be here to do our public business, but there is no such necessity in the case of a witness summoned before us. There is no privilege given to him by the Constitution. There is no case, I think, in parliamentary law where the Parliament of England has claimed any such right.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him to have read a case in which the Parliament of England in 1835 decided as it is now proposed to decide?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What is it the gentleman wishes to have read?

Mr. RANDALL. A report from the British Parliament in 1835, where the House of Commons held that a witness was safe from arrest while under its control.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, certainly, sir; let it it be read. I am pursuing the truth and want nothing else.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the Clerk then read what I have sent up marked?

The Clerk read as follows:

The order of the day being read, for taking into consideration the matter of the complaint made to the house yesterday, that Mr. Alexander Dean, while in attendance on the select committee appointed to take into consideration the duties on timber, had been arrested by a sheriff's officer;

And Mr. Alexander Dean attending, according to order, he was called in and examined, and produced the order for his attendance on the said committee, together with his discharge from the said committee, by which it appeared that the time allowed for his return to Cork extended till the 10th day of this instant August; and then he was directed to withdraw.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What is the date of that?

The CLERK. Eighteen hundred and thirty-five.

Mr. RANDALL. They gave the man time to get home.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If I understand that case it is a different case from this. That man was in attendance on the House, and they wanted him for their purposes and took him out of arrest for their purposes under that order; but as I understand it in this case Mr. Reid had gone away from the committee. They had got through with him; had cross-examined him and re-examined him and had done everything else that they chose to do with him with mildness and comfort to him and satisfaction to themselves, I doubt not. But when he had gone away from the committee, I ask where do you get the power under a written Constitution to extend this privilege to him? If we have the power to extend it to him, we have the right to extend it to everybody in every conceivable form. But my friend may say, "Why, we cannot go on with the investigation unless you take this course." Well, for myself, as to this kind of investigation that is going on, I do not see any necessity for it. I do not think anything is gained by it to anybody either in knowledge or anything else. But we can send a sub-committee to New York, and there in the cushioned seats of the sanctum of the editorial-room of the Tribune we can have Mr. Reid examined, where he will not be liable to be arrested.

What, then, is the proposition? The proposition is that we shall pass not a law but that we shall say it is one of our privileges to exempt from arrest, criminally and civilly, any man whom we choose; for if we can exempt Mr. Reid from arrest we can exempt every other man, our power being only limited by our own discretion.

Now, sir, as a citizen, looking forward from the precedents set up in this time of quiet to more troublous times, I am opposed in every form to this House undertaking to extend its privileges one inch beyond the Constitution of my country.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I did not propose to yield for the purpose of a discussion of what might be the report of the committee. I do not know that it would be becoming in me to suggest that my colleague [Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts] might perhaps frequently improve the solid of his speeches by citations from the fountains of the law.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have done so in this case.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I should have been glad if he had cited, had we been about to discuss this matter in full, such an authority as Cushing's great work on Parliamentary Law, or May on Parliamentary Law, each of which seems to me to differ somewhat from my colleague on all the propositions that he has maintained. I do not, however, propose to reply to him or to read authorities. I wish simply to call the attention of the House to his repeated misstatements of the resolution before us, after he had had his attention called to it by myself. He stated that this resolution proposed to do something. It has in it not a single proposition, except that the committee shall be appointed to inquire. As I suppose, a large proportion of the members of this House do not share my colleague's omniscience on every subject, and his preparation to dispose of it ex cathedra as soon as a suggestion is made in the House. It seems to me that in making a proposition on a subject that is attracting so much public attention in the House and out of the House at the present time, it was wise that it should be investigated, inquired into, and reported upon by a committee of this House. I now move the previous question.

Mr. DAWES. Permit me one moment.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. After the previous question shall have been ordered I will yield.

Mr. KELLEY. There will be no time for discussion after that.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] for five minutes, while I still hold the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to impress upon the House the fact that the question now before us does not relate to the gentleman who was arrested yesterday so much as it does to the rights of this House. I remember an occasion when the question of the right of a witness to return to her home unaffected by a warrant of arrest came wellnigh making me the instrument of the conversion of one of the court-rooms of Pennsylvania into a scene of fearful bloodshed, and probably of bringing on war between the State of Pennsylvania and the United States Government. There were four humble black men in the prisoner's dock charged with the offense of assault and battery, and with the larceny of certain female apparel belonging to a gentleman of North Carolina by the name of Wheeler, who had then recently been commissioned by this Government as its minister to Nicaragua. The property they were said to have stolen from him was the clothes worn by a slave who after her escape had assumed the name of Jane Johnson. The defendants had entered the plea of not guilty. She alone could tell the facts upon which the liberty or the imprisonment of those four men depended, and they had caused her to be subpœnaed. Her immunity from arrest was not a question of the rights of the court or witness, but was a question vital to the liberty of those four humble citizens then without political power.

The United States Government through the district attorney attempted to deprive them of that right. The district attorney of the United States came to the court-room and sat within the bar beside the local prosecuting attorney. At each of the doors of the court-room stood a deputy marshal or a marshal of the United States holding a warrant for the arrest of the witness, Jane Johnson, as a fugitive slave. She had notice from her friends that the law, through the court, would protect her while coming to the court, while at the court, and while returning from the court. Representing the State of Pennsylvania as one of her judges, I, on the evening preceding the trial, interrogated the officers of the court as to who among them shrank from laying down his life or taking the life of another in vindication of the law of Pennsylvania within its court-room or upon its threshold. Two of them were excused and others substituted for them. I also conferred with the then district attorney, William B. Mann, esq., and received his co-operation. The trial came on. In the body of the court-room sat fifty armed men, ready at the risk of their lives to vindicate the majesty of Pennsylvania's law by securing the immunity from arrest of that alleged fugitive slave.

Yesterday, sir, the privileges of this House were assailed in the person of a witness it had caused to be subpœnaed; and I care not how much the individual in whose person they are assailed may have maligned others or myself, I shall stand up for the privileges of the House, as I then was ready to stand up for the duty of the court of Pennsylvania to maintain the privileges of the people whose rights and liberties were assailed by the threatened arrest of a witness whose testimony was believed to be essential to their case.

Now, sir, what was the result on that occasion? By the arrangement of Mr. Mann, three carriages stood in front of the court-room door with drivers upon the boxes, and with companions not chary of exhibiting the weapons with which they were armed. The woman came to court attended by Lucretia Mott and Sarah Pugh, two elderly Quaker ladies. She did testify, and when her testimony closed she sat herself between those two women. The district attorney of the United States, my personal friend, said to me——

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I do not know that I can yield further.

Mr. KELLEY. One moment, if you please. The United States district attorney said to me with profane emphasis, "She must be taken, if I take her." To which with equal emphasis I replied, "If she is taken by your hand, you die by my hand; and if by your marshals, they will die by my agents and my orders." She went from the court-room, and Minister Wheeler never recovered his property. As, sir, I maintained that right then, I trust this House will not refuse to inquire by a committee whether there should not be express law by which it may maintain the freedom from arrest of those it summons as witnesses.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I now yield a moment to my colleague, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to thrust myself in to disturb the harmony, or interfere with this delightful episode between my two colleagues, the first of the kind that I have had the pleasure to enjoy, but somewhat to express my regret that the Committee on Ways and Means has lost the admiration of my colleague on my right, [Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, they have not.

Mr. DAWES. Because of the unfortunate circumstance that he has fallen into an error of fact unusual to him. The Committee on Ways and Means did not examine this witness in secret; they never took a syllable of testimony from him in secret.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, I believed the newspapers; I beg my colleague's pardon.

Mr. DAWES. My colleague is usually accurate; but on this occasion he has unfortunately fallen into an error. Whatever testimony this witness gave before the committee was given in public.

While I am up I wish to add that although I have no occasion myself to entertain any very kindly feelings toward this witness—while he, in the opinion of the committee, volunteered to do members of the committee a grievous wrong in his testimony without the slightest occasion or foundation—yet I desire myself, if there be no law covering such a case as this, to urge upon the House the necessity of such a law. If a witness cannot be protected in attendance upon committees of this House, and in coming and returning, we shall not be able to bring witnesses here.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Does my colleague claim that any witness ought to be protected from criminal arrest?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly not from any such criminal arrest as for felony or breach of the peace; and I do not care to discuss whether a libel would be reckoned in that class.

I think there is no man in public life who has suffered more at the hands of an unbridled and unlicensed press than I have; but when I shall feel myself called upon to appeal to the law rather than to my own life and character for vindication against the false charges that may be made in the press, I shall feel that I have sunk so low that my character would not be worth any such resuscitation as the law could bring to it, and I should consider it quite a work of supererogation to take any trouble about it.

I desire to vindicate the Committee on Ways and Means from either any participation in or any countenance of this attempt to reach in this way one of these witnessess whom they have been instrumental in bringing within the reach of process here. I think I speak for the committee in saying that one and all they not only look upon this proceeding as unlawful, but, if there were no law about it, as unwise and impolitic as it could possibly be; and that therefore it should be at once abandoned as unwisely and wrongfully begun and as certain to bring upon its authors, whoever they are, discomfiture and contumely rather than redress.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will my colleague allow me to suppose a case? Irwin is now confined as a witness to be held till the 4th of March. Suppose there were a note of hand of his outstanding which would be outlawed between now and the 4th of March; is he to be exempt from any civil process so that it may be outlawed?

Mr. DAWES. O, no.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the vote is taken I ask consent to call attention to the following authorities bearing upon this question:

As yet the personal privilege of members and the ancient privilege of their servants have alone been noticed. These were founded upon the necessity of enabling members freely to attend to their duties in Parliament. Upon the same ground a similar privilege of freedom from arrest and molestation is attached to all witnesses summoned to attend before either House of Parliament or before parliamentary committees, and to others in personal attendance upon the business of Parliament, in coming, staying, and returning. (May's Parliamentary Practice, 136.)

In order to enable persons whose testimony is wanted before either house of Parliament or a committee to give their attendance and to testify fully and freely to all matters and things within their knowledge, certain privileges analogous to those of members are attributed to them. These privileges are of three kinds: First, freedom from arrest in coming, staying, and returning; second, protection against the consequences of the disclosures which they may make in their evidence; and third, protection against personal violence or threatened injury in consequence of their being witnesses. (Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, 395.)

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I believe I cannot give way further for a discussion of the merits of proposed legislation upon a mere resolution of inquiry. I did not even stop to reply to my colleague's statement of what I said the other day in the House, which he so much misrepresented. I now move the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, there were—ayes 44, noes 79; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. E. R. HOAR and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 102.

So the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question on agreeing to the resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 45, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bromberg, Brown, Bullinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Cain, Caldwell, Cannon, Chittenden, John B. Ambler Smith, Speer, St. John, Stowell, Sypher, Townsend, Walls, Wheeler, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—56.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. E. R. HOAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following as the committee under the resolution just passed: Mr. E. R. HOAR of Massachusetts, Mr. R. S. HALE of New York, Mr. GODLOVE S. ORTH of Indiana, Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. MILTON SAYLER of Ohio.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—PACIFIC MAIL.

Mr. HAYS. When several members made personal explanations this morning concerning certain charges in the New York Tribune on the subject of the Pacific Mail subsidy, I was absent from the Hall. I deem it a duty to myself as well as to the members of this Congress and my constituents to make an explanation, and that explanation consists is this, that never since I have been a member of Congress have I had a thousand-dollar bill to my knowledge, and therefore could not have one broken up at the Sergeant-at-Arms's room, nor could I have deposited one there. As to the bill itself, I voted for it because I deemed it a proper measure, and would vote for it again if it were before the House.

RECUSANT WITNESS—CHARLES A. WETMORE.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to submit the following, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the subject-matter of the employment of money to procure legislation by Congress in aid of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, submit in part the following report:

That in pursuance of the power conferred upon them by the House "to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths in any matter from time to time pending and under examination before said committee," they caused one Charles A. Wetmore, of San Francisco, to be summoned before them for the purpose of giving testimony, and the said Wetmore, after having been duly sworn, did, on the 19th day of January, testify among other things as follows:

CHARLES A. WETMORE, being duly sworn, and being under examination before the Committee on Ways and Means, the following proceedings took place:

By Mr. BECK:

Question. What reason, if any, was given to you as to why I would not examine Mr. SCHUMAKER?

Answer. Because he was a democrat.

Q. Was that the only reason?

A. Yes.

Q. I did not know but that somebody might have told you that I had had part of the money?

A. No.

Q. You speak in your dispatch of "strange rumors being afloat regarding Mr. BECK and the Pacific Mail subsidy;" what are they?

A. I expect that part of that statement arose from very strange rumors which I had heard, that you would not pursue the matter now that SCHUMAKER was involved in it.

Q. That I would "weaken on" a democrat?

A. Yes; the rumor, I think, came to me that Mr. Fant had sent somebody to you; and there was some reference made to checks having been traced, or something of that kind.

Q. Checks traced where?

A. To you.

Q. Who told you that?

A. I do not know that there was more than one check.

Q. Who told it to you?

A. The statement came to me from a party whom I do not recollect.

Mr. BECK. I want the man's name?

The WITNESS. I think it can be verified through Mr. Fant.

Mr. BECK. Give me the man's name?

The WITNESS. It was not stated to me as a fact, and I did not publish it as a fact, and I do not state it now as a fact.

Mr. BECK. I want the author of the rumor; give the name of the man who told you.

The WITNESS. I appeal to the committee. I have not charged anything here.

The CHAIRMAN. No matter about that. Answer the question.

Mr. BECK. If you have not charged anything directly, you have done it by indirection. It is a flat lie, which you should be glad to clear yourself of by telling its author.

The WITNESS. I have not stated it.

Mr. BECK. Tell us who told you what you did hear.

The WITNESS. The information came to me from a friend of mine.

The CHAIRMAN. You know your friends. Give the name.

The WITNESS. It is impossible for me without seeing him first, as it was in the nature of confidence.

Mr. BECK. There can be no confidence in such a matter.

Mr. NIBLACK. I insist upon the question being answered speedily.

The CHAIRMAN, (to witness.) Will you answer, or do you decline to answer?

The WITNESS. I shall have to decline to answer until I see the party.

Mr. BECK. I put the question to you again. I have already put it in a form which I thought would certainly require an answer from any one calling himself a gentleman, when I said that it was a baseless, malicious lie. Now, I again put the question to you. Tell us the name.

The WITNESS. If the committee will give me till to-morrow I will ask the party for permission to state his name.

Mr. BECK. The committee will not give you with my consent one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us understand. Do you decline to answer the question?

The WITNESS. I must decline until I can see the party.

The committee are of opinion, and report, that it is necessary for the efficient prosecution of the inquiry ordered by the House that said questions should be answered, and that there is no sufficient reason why the witness should not answer the same, and that his refusal is in contempt of this House.

The committee recommend the adoption of the accompanying order:

Ordered, That the Speaker issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House, or his deputy, commanding him to take into custody forthwith, wherever to be found, the body of Charles A. Wetmore, and him bring to the bar of the House, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time keep the said Wetmore in custody to await the further order of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I will not detain the House but a moment. The difficulties which the committee encounter in prosecuting the inquiry under the order of the House have seemed to take the form of an organized attack upon the character of individual members of the committee. Indeed, it is avowed in certain quarters unless we desist from pursuing certain inquiries the character of members of the committee will be attacked. The committee therefore feel called upon to ask the House to ferret out all of these accusations. In this instance this witness testifies that he has been informed a check has been traced into the hands of a member of the committee. The House does not need any vindication of that member of the committee, but the public may be misled in the matter unless this charge be ferreted out. The House can very readily see, unless the Committee on Ways and Means places itself, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion, it might as well be discharged from further action on this subject.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Do I understand my colleague to say that this witness is in contempt for not answering to the charge that what he said was "a baseless, malicious lie?"

Mr. DAWES. He has refused to answer who gave him the information he said he had, that a check was traced into the hands of a member of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to have an answer whether he is to be arrested because he did not answer the question whether he did not know it was "a malicious lie."

Mr. DAWES. My colleague will see that a member of the committee did respond in that way. The question was put independently of that response, and this witness refused to answer from whom he received the information.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, the House has heard a portion of the examination of Mr. Wetmore and the order the committee desire from the House. I am of course especially anxious that he should be brought to the bar of the House and required to answer the question put to him. In order that the House may understand exactly the nature of the question put to him, I wish to call attention to a few extracts from his dispatch dated Washington, January 4, 1875, to the Daily Alta California, San Francisco, in which, among other things, he says:

Leading members of the committee, particularly DAWES and BECK and others, who at first were very severe in denouncing Irwin and in calling for an investigation, have become singularly silent or slow in the pursuit of news. Papers which denounced Irwin as a thief and charged him with pocketing the money which was spent in Washington have all ceased, and, strange to say, Irwin is to-day scarcely criticised.

Developments of the investigation have produced an ominous calm, and a sudden disposition to check further inquiry is noticeable.

And so on. Then comes this:

A strange rumor is afloat regarding BECK and the Pacific Mail subsidy. Altogether Irwin is the only self-collected man in this dirty business, and to-night he is practically master of the situation.

Supposing that a man who would write an article like that had some information on which he could base it, the committee summoned him before it this morning; and when the question read in the hearing of the House was put to him—only a part of the examination having been read here—it turned out that he was utterly unable to state a single fact or give any information as to any act of myself or any member of the committee, or any failure of any member to call out anything which would elucidate all the facts bearing upon this investigation, or to justify in any form any of the statements made by him. I then examined him, as the House has heard. The first excuse he made was that I was not prosecuting the case earnestly, because Mr. SCHUMAKER was a democrat. Now, sir, everybody knows, or can know, that from the beginning to the end of the investigation with which we were charged I was present, asking every question that could be thought of, and trying to get to the bottom of this matter. I have done so from the beginning of these proceedings until now, and I will continue to do so to the end. I put a question to him, as the House will observe, about one of those "strange rumors" so far as it affected myself. He had said that, among other things, there was a rumor that money had been traced to me—not a fact, but a rumor. I asked him, "Who told you so?" His reply was, "I decline to answer until I see my friend." I insisted on an answer and the committee insisted. He refused to answer, and we have brought him to the bar of the House.

It occurs to me that it is not only due to me but due to the House and to every member of it that he shall be required to answer the question promptly, so that we may get the whole truth in this matter. If I have ever in any form, in that subsidy or in anything else during the eight years of my service here, received a bribe or done anything unworthy of a member of the House, let me be expelled. I characterized the charge in the committee as I thought it deserved, using language which, although perhaps not quite parliamentary, I knew to be just, and I thought would elicit an answer. I said there, and I repeat here, that the statement, come from what source it might, that I have either received money or done anything else unworthy of my position as a member of the House, was a baseless, malicious lie. I want to call such a statement by its right name. And I want to say—because the man may refuse to answer at the bar—to this House that in all that Pacific Mail subsidy matter, from beginning to end, I not only acted according to my own convictions by voting steadily against it, but I expressed those convictions freely on this floor. When the matter was pending here many gentlemen came to see me. Mr. Irwin saw me. Mr. Stockwell saw me, introduced by a leading member on this side of the House. Mr. Garrison spoke to me. Several of them laid papers before me, which I carefully studied so as to be able to understand the merits of the question, and do full, fair, and impartial justice to all.

I have made it a habit since I have been here to see all men who have legitimate business and apply to me to hear what they have to say, and to treat every man courteously as I think a Representative ought, and to ascertain if there was merit in their case. I looked all over this matter. But as early as the 15th of March, when this question first came up—and I want gentlemen to have an opportunity to turn to the Globe, so as to understand what were the facts in the case if the witness does not finally answer—when the proposition first came before the House, after mature reflection and consideration I made as vigorous a speech as I knew how, occupying two columns and a half of the Globe, against the whole subsidy. That speech will be found in the Globe, volume 88, page 1657. So earnestly did I speak against it, that I was taken to task for what I had said by Mr. Bingham, of Ohio, in a speech which he afterward made. Not content with that, as the discussion still further progressed—my friend from Indiana, then a member of the House and now sitting by me, Mr. Kerr, and other gentlemen on this side were making speeches against it—I made another speech, quite an elaborate one considering the time that was allowed me, which will be found in volume 89 of the Globe, page 1815, in which I again opposed the subsidy and showed it was the entering-wedge to a great series of unjust and oppressive subsidies. I tried to show that it was bad policy, and said all a man of no more ability than I possess could say against the measure. No man did more against it than I did. I was taken to task for that speech also, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] and others. And when the final vote came to be taken—the vote of the House standing 87 to 92—I was found voting against it.

The bill went to the Senate. We had defeated the proposition for the Pacific Mail subsidy in the House, but the bill came back to us from the Senate again with the subsidy adopted there. Further discussion was had. When the yeas and nays were called upon it, it passed by a vote of 110 to 87, and I am found recorded as voting in the call of the yeas and nays against it. A motion was afterward made by a member from New York to reconsider the vote whereby the Brazilian subsidy was lost. I rose again; and in order that the House may understand my position I want to read a few lines from what I said on that occasion:

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I think that a personal explanation ought not to go to the length the gentleman is going in giving speeches made by him in a former Congress.

Mr. BECK. I shall read but a few lines to explain my position. I do not regard it as a personal explanation. I said:

It was bad enough that this House, having after three days' discussion rejected by a vote of 92 to 87 the subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship line, should turn round and in less than two weeks, by a vote of 109 to 88, vote that money away from the people. Men who thus changed their votes had doubtless good reasons for doing so, though none, so far as I know, gave the reasons. But the fact stands recorded that the House, after having rejected that proposition by a vote of 92 to 87, agreed to it in less than two weeks afterward by a vote of 109 to 88. That fact also stands recorded that five days ago, by a vote of 112 to 64, the House rejected this proposed subsidy for this Brazilian line; yet now, forsooth, we are expected to pass it, and I hope the country will demand the reasons of those who change and vote for this proposition now, if they fail to give reasons satisfactory to the House.—Congressional Globe, volume 91, page 3872.

Men who are corrupt, or who do not feel fully conscious of their own integrity, are not apt to speak in that way. Again, on the day afterward, as will be seen by reference to page 3878 of volume 91 of the Globe, in answer to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] I made as earnest a speech as I could against this and all other subsidies.

Mr. Speaker, I make this statement for the purpose of showing the importance to me in the face of such a record of having these questions answered. I have already denounced the statement of the witness as false, and I again denounce all charges, suggestions, or intimations that I have accepted bribes on this or any other question for my action on this floor during my eight years of service in the most emphatic language that parliamentary rules will allow. I think, sir, the House owes it to itself as well as me to see who has been making charges of that sort in the face of such a record as I have shown on the question.

I know that the Republican of this morning has an editorial making all sorts of insinuations against me, in which the editor says:

It is observable in the testimony of H. G. Fant before the Committee on Ways and Means that he testifies he employed one G. W. Wiley to see Congressman JAMES BECK, of Kentucky, as to his course on the Pacific Mail subsidy. It is true that Mr. BECK claims to have voted and spoken against the subsidy. In a republican House of two-thirds majority, might not that have been the very thing wanted of Mr. BECK to insure the passage of the bill? Why have not the committee called Mr. G. W. Wiley? Why was Mr. Wiley, a New Yorker, engaged with the house of Harney & Searl, brokers, 67 Exchange Place, New York, sent to Mr. BECK? May it not appear that a distinguished democratic Senator from Missouri received, say, $30,000 through calls on the Pacific Mail through Stockwell, paid through Harney & Searl? May not an examination of Harney & Searl's books, Stockwell and his books, show to whom that was paid, and how it was divided? Let this branch of the subject be investigated by the present Congress.

In the first place allow me to observe that in the last House there was less than twenty-five republican majority, if I recollect aright, and in the second that it is the first time that I ever knew that thieves employed men honestly to do their duty by voting against their schemes of plunder. This is a specimen of the charges made, but they go before the country, and if the House does not require this man to answer I will stand before the American people suspected, at least by those who do not know me. I intend if I can to stand by my rights and the rights of members here, and I ask the House to stand by me or any other gentleman in having all the facts developed and let the truth come out. That is all I desire to say. I am not speaking to a personal explanation, excepting so far as it may be called so by its happening to be me instead of some other member who is involved, in asking the House to require the witness to answer these questions. It is the right of the House and each member of it that the facts should come out. I am vindicating not alone my personal rights; I am but illustrating the rights of the House by my individual case. I repeat I did not rise to any personal explanation. I do not think that I ever have but once risen to a matter purely personal to myself during my service here. Every member of the House is as much interested in this matter as myself. I do not say that this witness may not get some man to swear to a lie. I do not know how that may be. I do not know to whom money was paid. I do not know but that men who had money in their pockets may have seen me and endeavored to influence me, but I do assert that no man ever did and that no man ever shall with impunity, either directly or indirectly, suggest to me while I am in official station that my vote can be controlled by money or money's worth. It never has been and it never will be.

Mr. DAWES. I now move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POTOMAC AND MOUNT PLEASANT RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. COTTON. I call for the regular order of business.

The House resumed as the regular order of business the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4450) reported yesterday by Mr. HENDEE from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to incorporate the Potomac and Mount Pleasant Railroad Company.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Was the previous question seconded on this bill yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The pending question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. The Clerk was reading the bill when interrupted by the adjournment of the House. The reading of the bill will now be concluded.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. POTTER. I notice that——

Mr. ELDREDGE. Will the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. POTTER. The gentleman from Vermont, to whose attention I have called a section of this bill, has drawn up an amendment which seems to be proper; because, as I read the bill, the franchise might go indefinitely all over the United States. Now the committee did not mean that, but that the road should stop out here at some point with which I am not acquainted.

Mr. HENDEE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] has suggested an amendment which is acceptable, and I offer it. I move to amend by inserting after the words "Seventh street road" on page 2, in line 18, these words: "where the franchise hereby granted is to terminate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I offer as an amendment certain sections of a bill which has been considered by the committee, and I think it will save the time of the House to add them to this bill. It is to incorporate a horse railroad from High street in Georgetown to Tennallytown, running out into the country.

Mr. HENDEE. I only yield to have the House understand what the amendment is.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is the same that the committee have acted upon.

Mr. HENDEE. I do not want it so considered as to prejudice the bill before the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not think it will have that effect; if so, I will withdraw it.

Mr. HENDEE. I have no objection to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] making a statement as to what the amendment is.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I have stated that it is a bill which has been fully considered by the committee, and I have been instructed to report it to the House. I think it would save the time of the House to put it on as an amendment to this bill. I presume there will be no objection to it, because it is for a road running from High street in Georgetown out into the country to a little place called Tennallytown. That is the whole of it, all there is in it.

Mr. HENDEE. I will yield to have the amendment offered.

The amendment was received and read, being the ordinary form of an act of incorporation.

Mr. HENDEE. I call the previous question upon the bill and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment moved by Mr. ELDREDGE; and being taken, it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the title be so amended as to include the two railroads, so as to conform to the bill as it has been passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COTTON. And I ask that the Clerk be allowed to renumber the sections of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Of course that will be done.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 3575, to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill No. 588, approving the action taken by the Secretary of War, under the act approved July 15, 1870, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees, on the part of the Senate, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. WADLEIGH, and Mr. RANSOM.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Do not cut out the morning hour.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The morning hour has already gone.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read an extract from the Journal of the House of December 22, 1874.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the House No. 2188, for the relief of persons to whom the governors of the Northwestern and Indian Territories confirmed land, and that the same be made a special order for the third Tuesday of January next.

The SPEAKER. That order would not prevent the House going into Committee of the Whole by a majority vote.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not say "to the exclusion of all other orders."

The SPEAKER. It does not. It is a special order, and holds its place from day to day. If the House does not go into Committee of the Whole, this will immediately come up; but it does not prevent the House from going into Committee of the Whole on public business.

SAINT JOSEPH HARBOR AND RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole,

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, requested to furnish this House with a report of the condition of the Saint Joseph Harbor and River, and what appropriation, if any, is necessary in the interest of commerce to carry on and perfect the improvements at that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. This resolution ought to go to the Committee on Commerce. I object, unless it has that reference.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House two thousand copies of the report of the Committee on Education and Labor in regard to the management of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts which have been endowed by the United States.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a protest of the Chickasaw Indians against the establishment of the Territory of Oklahoma; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

TROOPS IN ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House of December 14, 1874, transmitting a detailed statement showing the number of United States troops stationed in Alabama on November 3, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BALANCES OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the act of June 30, 1872, a statement of such balances of appropriations carried to the surplus fund under that act as are required to be reappropriated for the service of the fiscal year 1872 and prior years; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, certain claims for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the President of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, transmitting, in compliance with the act incorporating the company, a report of its transactions during the year ending December 31, 1874; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRACTS BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with the act of April 21, 1808, a statement of contracts made by the various Bureaus of the War Department on behalf of the United States during the year 1874; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL REPORTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with the act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department, certain reports; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF GALVESTON HARBOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to an appropriation for the improvement of Galveston Harbor, Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the act of June 23, 1874, for making a survey of the mouth of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN SERVICE IN OREGON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the Indian service in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OSAGE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an estimate of appropriation to pay to Osage Indians interest on net avails of land sold under the treaty of 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to an appropriation for Rock Island arsenal for 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INCIDENTAL INDIAN EXPENSES IN OREGON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill for incidental expenses in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RETENTION OF MILITARY PRISONERS.

FORT VANCOUVER MILITARY RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the claim of the Roman Catholic mission known as the mission of Saint James, to the military reservation at Fort Vancouver, Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN SERVICE IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of appropriations for the Indian service in California; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN WAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report showing the number of regulars and volunteers employed during the war with Mexico, and the casualties incident thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN SERVICE IN NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the Indian service in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CATTLE TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Agriculture, submitted a report on cattle transportation; which was recommitted, and ordered to be printed.

PICTURE OF GENERAL GEORGE H. THOMAS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be directed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing Miss Ransom's picture of General George H. Thomas on the battle-field of Chickamauga.

Mr. POTTER. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is only to inquire into the propriety of purchasing the picture.

Mr. POTTER. I will not consent to the purchase of any picture stuck up in the Capitol by the artist without the order of the House, and I will take every proper measure to prevent it. I do object.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an exceptional case.

COTTON DIVISION, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Whereas under the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property, and for the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts within the United States," the proceeds of a large amount of captured and abandoned property was covered into the Treasury of the United States, a large proportion of which was seized by the agents of the Treasury Department after the 30th day of June, 1865, the total amount received from these sources being over $20,000,000, and that which was seized after the 30th day of June, 1865, was, by the fifth section of the act of May, 1872, directed to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the lawful owners thereof; and whereas it appears by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made to the present session of Congress, that since the passage of said last-mentioned act there has been paid to claimants under said act but the small sum of $133,018.27; and whereas it further appears that under various acts and resolutions of Congress the amount of $260,000 has been appropriated to defend certain "cotton suits" against the United States, and it does not appear how or in what manner the sum of $260,000 has been used; and whereas it appears that a division, called or termed a "cotton division," has been organized in the Treasury Department, with chiefs, clerks, and employés, at high salaries, amounting to over $12,000 per annum; and whereas the management and distribution of said fund, from its large amount and other considerations, requires that it should be under the supervision of men of unquestioned character and intelligence: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform this House—

First. By what authority of law said division of the Treasury Department known as the cotton division was formed, and clerks and their pay assigned, and what amount of salaries is paid on this account per annum.

Second. By what authority of law J. S. Frazer is employed to adjudicate cotton claims at an annual salary of $10,000 per annum; and also what time the said Frazer has been so employed, and under what appropriations he received his compensation.

Third. To whom, and for what services, and when and where rendered, has the appropriation of $260,000, or any part thereof, been paid.

Fourth. Whether the chief clerk of said cotton division is not M. L. Noerr, who, previous to his appointment in said division, was in the employment of the detective, Pinkerton; and whether the second clerk in position in said division is not William Fessenden, and the same individual who held a position in the Army of the United States as paymaster, and was dismissed therefrom for embezzlement of a large sum of money; and do not these parties have charge of all records of the United States pertaining to cotton claims.

INCREASE OF PENSION.

Mr. COMINGO, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4453) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase pensions in certain cases," approved June 18, 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to reconsider all the votes taken this morning; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the communication of the attending and consulting physicians of R. B. Irwin, in reference to his place of confinement, to submit a report, together with certain testimony they have taken, and ask the papers be printed in the RECORD, so that every gentleman may read them to-morrow. I am also instructed by the committee to state that they are not at this moment prepared to recommend any change of his place of confinement.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives:

We, the undersigned, attending and consulting physicians in the case of Colonel R. B. Irwin, having been informed by telegram from his attending physician in the city of San Francisco, Dr. V. J. Fourgeaud, that said patient was severely injured by a fall from his carriage in the city of San Francisco, on or about the 28th of January, 1872, by striking his head against the iron rail of a street railway, resulting in a fracture of the malar bone and concussion of the brain, from which he has suffered occasionally severe attacks of pain with cerebral and gastric disturbances; and having personally, and in each other's presence, examined the above-named person, we do hereby certify, and most respectfully represent to the House of Representatives, that the said Colonel Richard B. Irwin is now in such a physical condition in consequence of the said injuries that the execution of the order of the House of Representatives dated January 6, 1875, in view of the surroundings and consequent physical discomforts, together with the moral effects on his morbidly sensitive and impressible nervous system resulting therefrom, would, in our judgment, be attended with results pernicious to his health, the extent of which we are not prepared to predict.

W. P. JOHNSTON, M. D.,
Attending Physician.
ALEX. T. Y. GARNETT, M. D.,
Consulting Physician.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1875.

WASHINGTON, January 11, 1875.

J. K. BARNES, Surgeon-General of the Army, having been sworn, testified as follows:

In compliance with a communication from this committee, I visited the jail this morning, inspected the room occupied by Mr. R. B. Irwin, and examined into his case, his present condition and the history of the injury from which he is now suffering. I find that the room is very damp; it is a fire-proof or jail-proof room, arched over with brick, with a low ceiling, with but one window that can be opened, and it is heated by a small cast-iron stove. During the half hour that I staid there I felt very perceptibly the dampness in the room. His accommodations are right in the room, his commode, washstand, &c., and the whole of that floor has a jail atmosphere. We entered the general reception-room and passed through a small room where there were several persons engaged in writing, and through a door which entered into the room where the prisoner now is. I should consider it dangerous for a sick man to remain there any length of time.

Question. For a man in the condition of Mr. Irwin?

Answer. Yes, sir; for a man in his condition I should consider it dangerous. The history of his injury I had from him, and it confirms the statement previously made by his medical attendant. He received two years ago, by being thrown from his carriage, a concussion of the brain, and at periods since then, ranging about six weeks apart, even when taking the best care of himself, he has an attack which comes on with pressure upon the left side of the forehead, extending down as far as the broken bone, followed by a sense of burning heat in the old injury, and then chilliness and vomiting—nausea. That sometimes troubles him for two or three days. It is in fact a repetition at these periods of the symptoms of concussion of the brain. Mental excitement, overwork, and agitation being on the same symptoms.

Q. You speak of his own account of his injury confirming the statement previously made to you by his medical attendant.

A. Not made to me; the statement that I saw in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have not had any consultation with his medical attendant. I did not know when I went to see Mr. Irwin this morning that I had ever seen him before, but he reminded me that I went to see him two or three times in 1862, when he came up from the Army very ill.

By Mr. SHELDON:

Q. He was on duty in the Department of the Gulf, was he not?

A. He went afterward to the Department of the Gulf; he was adjutant-general. The man is a very different man to-day; his whole nervous system is shattered; he is nothing like so vigorous a man, either mentally or physically, as he was when I saw him before.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. When did you first know that you were going to visit Mr. Irwin?

A. When the Sergeant-at-Arms called at my office this morning. I then passed up and called for Surgeon-General Beale, and we went to the jail.

Q. That was your first information on the subject?
A. My first information.
Q. You had no information as to his injury except what he told you?
A. No, sir; only what I saw.
Q. You are satisfied that his statement is correct?
A. I am satisfied, sir, that, so far as his health is concerned, his statement is entirely correct.

By Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS:

Q. Have you examined the room in this building which is sometimes used for the detention of witnesses?
A. No, sir; I never have seen the room.
Q. Did you examine any other room in the jail than that which is occupied by him?
A. No, sir; simply that and its outlook. I did not go into the other parts of the jail at all.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Is that room on the second story?
A. No, sir; on the ground floor; and we were told that there is no cellar beneath it.

JOSEPH BEALE, Surgeon-General of the Navy, sworn and examined.

Question. Did you, at the request of this committee, accompany General Barnes to visit Mr. Irwin in the jail?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Q. State the result of the visit.
A. Well, sir, I concur substantially in all the statements of fact made by the Surgeon-General of the Army in regard to the condition in which we found Mr. Irwin and his surroundings—the room, &c.; and I would beg leave to state, as the result of my inquiries, that while I am not exactly prepared to say it will be dangerous to keep him in that room, I look upon it as unsafe to keep him there. I do not regard the room as a proper place for a man in his condition to be incarcerated in. He is in a very nervous condition, indeed quite excitable, and his general tone, I think, is considerably below par; he is suffering from the effects of an injury received two years ago.
Q. Did you examine any other room in the jail?
A. No, sir. I would like to state further, that my knowledge of the case is derived altogether from the statements of Mr. Irwin in regard to his injury and his former condition, and, of course, from what I ascertained by personal examination myself. I know nothing whatever in regard to the truth of his statement in regard to the injury that he received, though his condition is what I would expect under the circumstances if he had received such an injury, and I have no doubt at all that his statement is strictly correct.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Do you attribute any portion of his physical condition to the nervous excitement attendant upon arrest and imprisonment?
A. I think it is very likely that that has something to do with it; I have no doubt it has.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If it should appear to you that the same symptoms which you find in Mr. Irwin now attended him wherever he was—attended him before he went into the jail—would it modify your opinion as to the propriety of his remaining there?
A. No, sir, I think not; because I look upon the effect of confinement in that room as rather cumulative; the room is a very bad one, and badly ventilated, and although he may not suffer more just at this moment than he would if he were in better quarters, yet I should apprehend increased suffering from a prolonged incarceration in that room.
Q. If a dry room, properly heated and ventilated, in the jail, could be furnished him, what is your opinion as to his being as safely incarcerated there as anywhere else?
A. I would not like to answer that question in the affirmative. I hardly think it would be as safe. I have no doubt at all as a professional man that that is not a proper place of confinement as the room now is.
Q. I did not ask you just that. I would like to know, if it were a dry and airy room, properly heated, what would be the danger to him there that he would not experience if he were confined in any other room?
A. Well, I could not say that there would be more danger, but I suppose that the simple fact of confinement is one of the elements which enter into the problem of the connection of the confinement with his health.
Q. But if the room were dry, airy, and properly heated, you do not think there would be any more danger in confining him there than in any other place?
A. I think there would, sir; because confinement in a prison would operate upon the nervous system differently from confinement in a hotel or in one's own private quarters.
Q. Is your opinion modified or controlled at all by the effect of confinement in a prison as such?
A. It is, to a certain extent. That would operate upon the nervous system to a certain extent, but to what extent it operates in his case I cannot say. I never saw this gentleman before, and knew nothing of his case until I went into his room; but to my mind he is a man in a very nervous condition, and one upon whom confinement would operate very unfavorably, and possibly seriously.
Q. Will you, if you can, make unprofessional men understand exactly whether there is any difference between confining him there and in a room anywhere else which is equally comfortable?
A. Well, it seems to me that that would hardly be a matter for a professional man to decide more than for any other person. The fact is that confinement in a prison, operating upon a highly nervous temperament, would, in the nature of things, have a different effect upon a man from, for instance, confinement in his own home, where he would have all the comforts of a home about him, intercourse with his friends, &c. I think the mere fact of being confined in a prison would operate upon a man of nervous temperament more unfavorably, though of course the restraint is no greater in one case than in the other.
Q. However suitable his quarters may be, you think the fact that he is confined in a prison would operate unfavorably?
A. I think that would weigh in the case. But, independently of that, I consider the room where he is now not a proper place for him. The two points to which our attention was called by the communication of the committee were the safety and the propriety of his confinement in that particular place—we were requested to examine and see whether it was "safe or proper."
Q. You understood "safety" there not to apply to security?
A. I understood it to apply to his physical and mental condition.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. How is the room heated?
A. He has a coal stove in the room.
Q. A close coal stove?
A. It was an open fire, but the stove shuts up I think in front.
Q. Is the room on the first or second floor?
A. It is on the ground floor, and I understood there was no cellar under it, and then there is an elevation of the ground to the west or northwest which would have a tendency to make this particular room damper than it would be under other circumstances; the water tends to run in that direction.
Q. His bed is in the room?
A. His bed was in the room in one corner, and the window adjoining it was raised four or five inches, although there was quite a cold wind pouring in.
Q. Had the room or any portion of it been freshly plastered?
A. I do not know that. I do not think it had been; the covering of the walls presented the appearance of having been quite recent, though I may be mistaken as to that, but at all events I do not think it was anything more than a coat of whitewash.
Q. What covering was on the floor?
A. There was a carpet on the floor which appeared to have straw or something of that nature under it, judging from the feel as one walked over it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 19, 1875.

JOHN S. CROCKER sworn and examined:

To the CHAIRMAN:

I am warden of the jail of the District of Columbia. Richard B. Irwin occupies the room on the ground floor in the southwest corner of the jail. Mr. Ordway and myself selected it for him as the best room for him to occupy on account of his reported delicate condition of health. On coming there he and his friends were allowed to make any other selection, but they finally selected that room.
Question. Then, ultimately, the room was his own choice?
Answer. It was.
Q. Describe the room.
A. I think it is eighteen feet square. It has a large front door opening into the south yard, which is the pleasantest yard connected with the jail. There is a window at the top of the door. There is also another window on the west side of the room, and an inner door leading into a room which we occupy as an office-room.
Q. Is the room dry?
A. I so understand it.
Q. Who was occupying it before Irwin?
A. It has been occupied as the office of the warden ever since I have been warden of the jail, now some five years.
Q. Has the warden experienced any difficulty about its being damp or anything of that kind?
A. None at all.
Q. Is it in any better condition now than it was when the warden occupied it?
A. Mr. Irwin had it furnished to suit his own views of comfort. The old carpet was removed and a new one put on the floor, with matting or cotton or something of the kind under the carpet.
Q. So that there is the thickness of the carpet and of the matting above the floor?
A. Yes.
Q. How is the room heated?
A. By a large Franklin stove. Mr. Ordway had a stove placed there first, but Irwin did not like it, and it was removed and another open stove put in.
Q. What fuel is used in it?
A. Sometimes wood and sometimes coal, just as Irwin prefers.
Q. Is the room ventilated?
A. Only by means of the doors and windows and fire-place.
Q. Has there been any sickness of late years in that room?
A. Not to my knowledge. I have occupied the room myself, and have been frequently there as late as ten or eleven at night, and I never experienced any difficulty whatever in occupying it.

F. A. WOOD sworn and examined.

To Mr. KASSON:

I am a member of the Capitol Police. I have been, more or less, in attendance on Richard B. Irwin—first at the house opposite Wormley's, then at Wormley's, and then at the jail. I was attending him as a guard under directions of the Sergeant-at-Arms.
Question. Having seen him at his former residence at Wormley's, and opposite Wormley's, and at the jail, have you observed any difference in his manner of living or in his degree of health?
Answer. I do not know that I have. His table is furnished by Wormley, and consists of such things as are usually to be found on hotel bills of fare. I have heard no complaints as to any change in his health since he came to the jail.
Q. What is the character of Irwin's living?
A. I think his diet is excellent. It consists of meats and vegetables, and wines and fruits. Mr. Wormley has charge of his meals. He has his meals four times a day.
Q. Is this the last annual report of the condition of the jail? [Handing paper to witness.]
A. It is.

The report is as follows:

HOSPITAL DEPARTMENT UNITED STATES JAIL, D. C.,
Washington, November 1, 1874.

SIR: I have the satisfaction to report but one death during the past year, a case of embolism. Death occurred in a very short time, preceded by no symptoms or indication of disease, and no history could be obtained of her previous life to enable us to trace the result to an originating cause. Upon autopsy a clot of lymph, evidently not recent, was discovered in the right ventricle, part of which becoming detached, or a similar plug finding its way into the pulmonary arteries, causing death.
No epidemic has visited us this year, and we have been remarkably free from malarial disease, a few cases only occurring in those who had been exposed before entering the prison, and none among those who had been confined for some time. This exemption, while cases were occurring in various parts of the city, is fairly attributable to the locality of the jail, being unexposed to such exciting causes.
The usual number of diseases incident to the filthy habits and dissolute lives of the prisoners before entering have occurred, with, perhaps, an increase in venereal cases.
In cases of alcoholism and opium-eating, I have persevered in my usual treatment of immediate withdrawal of the poisonous agents, confining the use of alcohol to conditions of collapse. Few drugs are used, and reliance had mainly upon the bromide of potassium as a sedative, perfect quiet, and the introduction of nutritious food, with such means as insure elimination of the poison by the different emunctories. One prisoner who had been in the habit of using morphia to the extent of twelve grains daily, equivalent to four and a half ounces of laudanum, was subjected to the treatment with the happiest results. In all cases they are restored in a few days to convalescence.
Frequent examinations have satisfied me of the abundance and good quality of the food and the sufficiency of bed-clothing furnished the prisoners.
Lime has been abundantly used as a wash, and a free use made of disinfectants. These, together with an abundant use of water and the prompt removal of all offal, have preserved perfect cleanliness throughout the prison. Our exemption from serious diseases, the usual consequence of overcrowding of human beings, is fairly attributable to these sanitary measures.

It gives me great pleasure to commend the vigilance and care of the guards in the performance of their duties to the sick. Every case of disease occurring has been promptly reported to me and my orders faithfully carried out.

With great respect, I am, your obedient servant,

N. YOUNG,
Physician United States Jail, D. C.

General JOHN S. CROCKER,
Warden United States Jail, D. C.

W. P. ADAIR AND C. A. VAUN.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas the act of Congress approved June 22, 1874, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, &c., for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," provided as follows: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to expend, from the proceeds of the sale of lands of the Great and Little Osage Indians, provided to be sold by section 12 of said act of July 15, 1870, the sum of $200,000 per annum for two years, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of stock and agricultural implements, opening farms, erection of houses, and for the civilization and support of the Osages and of their tribal government;" and whereas, on page 141 of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1874, it appears that the sum of $50,000 was paid to "W. P. Adair and C. A. Vaun for services as attorneys" from the amount so appropriated:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish this House at the earliest practicable day with a full statement of the dates and duration of said services, as also with a copy of the authority under which W. P. Adair and C. A. Vaun were empowered to act as attorneys for said tribe of Osages, as required by law, and copies of all other papers relating to said payment, including the recommendation of the agent then in charge and the superintendent of Indian affairs for the central superintendency.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Where is it proposed that this resolution shall go?

Mr. RAINEY. Unless it is referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. LOUGHRIDGE was agreed to.

So the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POLAND in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose an amendment was pending offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO,] on which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] had made a point of order. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. STORM. I made the point of order that it was new legislation. And I think that our rules provide that no amendment for the appropriation of money in pursuance of a treaty can be made to an appropriation bill; and it has been the rule in Committee of the Whole to strike out any amendment that is made for an appropriation to carry out the provisions of a treaty. Those are the two points of order that I make.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The very object of the Indian appropriation bill is to carry out the arrangements under the treaties made with the Indians. This is an amendment of the same character in that respect as the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. STORM. How does the Chair rule on the other point that that is new legislation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand it to be new legislation, any more than the whole bill is new legislation. It is to carry out an arrangement made many years ago, as the amendment purports, with this tribe of Indians. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COMINGO. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION—. That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations of the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate, made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to pay to P. P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized agents of said Choctaw Nation, or to either of them, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,981,247.30, the amount of said award, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of said award until the payment thereof, as herein provided: Provided, however, That the sum of $250,000, heretofore paid in part discharge of said award, shall be deducted from the amount at the date of said part payment; and that the payment of said award to said Pitchlynn and Folsom, or either of them, as herein directed, shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of all the claims of the said nation, and of those of the individual members thereof, on account of said award: And provided further, That the said sum shall be paid by said agents under the direction and supervision of the United States Indian agent, to the claimants entitled thereto, as is provided and required by the twelfth article of said treaty of 1855: And provided further, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said award to the said delegates, as herein provided, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act in approval of this act, and shall accept the payment of the said award, as herein provided, as a full discharge and satisfaction of all the claims of the said nation, or of individual members thereof, on account of the said award.

Mr. GARFIELD. I send to the desk an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COMINGO. I will yield to have the gentleman's amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 12 and 13, after the word "them," these words, "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and insert "in bonds of the United States, bearing interest at 5 per cent., of the description authorized by the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt.'"

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say a word, but not on the general merits of the amendment at present.

Mr. COMINGO. I have not yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. GARFIELD. Did I not have the floor to offer an amendment?

Mr. COMINGO. I yielded to have the amendment read. I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment and do not propose to antagonize it. I do not know what other gentlemen on the floor may be disposed to do so far as that amendment is concerned.

I desire, however, to say a few words with reference to the amendment I have offered, either with or without the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

I would state, Mr. Chairman, that this is a claim that has been before Congress for many years, and it is a very remarkable fact that there is no one on this floor, nor do I believe there was ever any one on this floor who antagonized the claim because it was unjust. On the contrary, its justice is universally admitted. There is no one on this floor who will so far stultify himself as to say the claim is not just and one which should not have been paid long since. We had it under consideration at the last session of Congress, as the Chair will well remember, and the only difficulty that we then encountered was as to the manner in which the money should be paid.

Some gentlemen on this floor seemed to apprehend that it was a steal, and seemed to fear that some claim agent or that Peter Pitchlynn, who had been prosecuting this claim for almost half a century, would get part of this money, and therefore refused to favor the passage of the amendment to the appropriation bill. And it failed. I have, in drawing this amendment, endeavored to steer clear of this difficulty, so far as possible, and to provide the manner in which this fund should be paid out.

I would remark, Mr. Chairman, that it does not matter to me to whom this money is paid, but we should have some regard to our treaty stipulations, when we undertake to pay this money to these Indians. It has been proposed, and perhaps may be proposed on this occasion, that we shall send a special agent down there to pay this money out if it is appropriated. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not support a proposition of that sort, come from what quarter it may, and let the consequences be to the bill as they may. If the Clerk will read a part of the twelfth article of the treaty under which this arbitration was held, the committee will get to understand our duty in the premises, and the only manner in which we can with fidelity to our treaty stipulations pay this money to these Indians.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 12. In case the Senate shall award to the Choctaws the net proceeds of the lands ceded as aforesaid, the same shall be received by them in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States, whether national or individual, arising under any former treaty; and the Choctaws shall thereupon become liable and bound to pay all such individual claims as may be adjudged by the proper authorities of the tribe to be equitable and just, the settlement and payment to be made with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for the tribe; and so much of the fund awarded by the Senate to the Choctaws as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe shall on their requisition be paid over to them by the United States. But should the Senate allow a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, whether national or individual, against the United States, the same shall be accepted by the Choctaws, and they shall thereupon become liable for and bound to pay all the individual claims as aforesaid; it being expressly understood that the adjudication and decision of the Senate shall be final.

Mr. COMINGO. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the language of this treaty so far as the payment of this money is concerned. Whether the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio shall prevail or not is a question for the committee to determine. I do not think that it ought to prevail. I do not think that we ought to undertake to pay these Indians in bonds when we have promised to pay them in money; but it is for the committee to determine in what way they will pay it. It would be far better for them and far more creditable to us as members of the House that we should pay it now, either in bonds or in money, than that we should longer withhold it from them. Sir, I do feel that in deferring the payment of this money to these Indians we have done them the greatest injustice, and we have continued it from year to year; and it seems that even at the present time there are some members here who are willing longer to continue this kind of oppression, for, sir, it is nothing else. I call it oppression because we have the power to withhold the money, when if the people to whom this money is due had the power to coerce us into its payment, they would long since have coerced us into doing it or we should have paid it because we knew they had the power to coerce us into paying. It is only withheld because we have the power to do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if you look at that part of the treaty which I have read you will see that we have stipulated to pay this money to the Indians, and that it should be paid by them for individual claims against them as a nation, and that it should be paid to them under the supervision of the Indian agent of that tribe.

I will so far speak in reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio as to say that if we pay these people in bonds, as proposed, we then render it utterly impossible for the tribe or nation —because it is a nation—to pay the claims that exist against it in the manner contemplated by the treaty. It is equivalent to requiring that before they pay the debts which they owe and which it was contemplated by the treaty they should pay out of this fund, they shall carry these bonds into the market and be subject to the sacrifice entailed upon them by the sale of those bonds.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COMINGO. I will hear it.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I ask if bonds of this description are not now above par?

Mr. COMINGO. That may be true; but if they are above par, why do you not require the Government to sell them and pay the money to the Indians according to the promise made in the treaty? Why do you force on the Indians a necessity not contemplated by the treaty?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. As the amendment now stands, it requires that this money shall be paid out of the Treasury, and I think the Treasury is not in a condition to pay it.

Mr. COMINGO. Ah! if the Treasury is not in a condition to pay this money, is that a reason why we should either not pay it or force these people to take that which would be unacceptable to them? I am not perhaps authorized to use language so strong as to say that it would be unacceptable to them, but I do say that it would impose on them an unnecessary sacrifice, although the bonds might be at premium. If they would sell at premium, let the Government sell them and put the premium into the Treasury and pay the Indians the balance of the proceeds.

I trust, sir, that this amendment will be carefully considered, and that we will at this late day as an act of justice pay these people the amount due with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent., an amount which has been withheld from them so long and so unjustly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire now to offer formally, if I have the right to do so, the amendment which I send up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment to be already regularly before the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] only yielded to have it read for information.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Let it be read now.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I wish to raise a point of order on the amendment to the amendment. I did not consider that it had been offered as the gentleman from Missouri only yielded for it to be read.

Mr. COMINGO. That was all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am opposed to this amount being paid now in money or bonds, but my point of order is as to the bonds covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio that there is no authority to pay any debt in bonds or to issue any bonds in any such direction as this without legislation. That is to me evident by the proposition being put in the form of an amendment. It seems to me that the point is a very clear one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the suggestion that the part of this debt already paid has been paid in bonds. I offered this amendment for one reason, and that is that if this proposition is to pass the House and become a law, we have not the money to meet it in the Treasury of the United States. That is the answer of necessity, and it answers all other inquiries. For one I am unwilling, however just a claim may be, that we shall appropriate money which we have not in our possession and are not likely to have. I will not enter now upon a general discussion of the subject.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the gentleman state what he thinks of the justice of this claim?

Mr. GARFIELD. I will do so at the proper time.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I understand that this claim is based upon what is called an award by the Senate. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the character of that award. The claim existed, of course, a long time before that so-called award of the Senate was made. If I am correctly informed as to its history, prior to that time the House had opposed its payment; whether justly or not, I am not here now to say. The Senate had favored its payment. When the parties in interest ascertained that the House would not allow the claim and that the Senate would, a new treaty was got up, the Senate as a matter of course being the chief actor under the Constitution in making that new treaty.

Mr. COMINGO. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Very well.

Mr. COMINGO. Does the gentleman antagonize this claim now because he regards it as an unjust one and one not due to these Indians?

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not know why the gentleman, from anything that I have said, assumes that I am antagonizing this claim.

Mr. COMINGO. I supposed so.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am talking about what is said to be the award of the Senate. If the gentleman will allow me to go on for a few minutes, he will see what I am about to say.

Mr. COMINGO. If the gentleman says he is not antagonizing this claim, I will not press my question.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not say so.

Mr. COMINGO. Then will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am talking about the award of the Senate. I will yield to the gentleman to ask a question, but I will tell him in advance that I will not allow him to call my attention to anything except the point which I wish to illustrate.

Mr. COMINGO. Does the gentleman regard the award of the Senate as a finality? That is all I wish to ask.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman will see about that, for that is just what I am going to talk about—how I regard that so-called award. As I understand it, (I have not looked over the records thoroughly to see how it was,) when the House of Representatives appeared to be in opposition to this claim and the Senate in favor of it, a new treaty was got up. Before that time, as the matter stood, both Houses had to be consulted before this claim could be paid; not only the Senate but the House must be in favor of it. When the new treaty which was got up by the Senate, or at least confirmed by the Senate, came to be examined it was found to contain a provision that the Senate alone should decide the claim; they called it leaving it to the Senate as arbitrators. It should have been said, because that would have been the truthful view of the matter, that the Senate, being in favor of the claim, got up a treaty with the Indians by which they agreed that the House of Representatives should not be consulted and should have no voice or vote in the matter; that the House should be left out. As I have said, prior to that time the Constitution and the laws of the country required that the House should be consulted in paying so large a claim as this or in paying a small one either. But it was provided by that treaty that the House should be left out, should take no part in the consideration of the matter; that the Senate alone should determine how much we owed these Indians.

When the Indians who were pressing this claim, and the Senate who were in favor of it, had decided that the House should not be consulted in it, the Senate went on to determine how much should be paid. And now they come forward and say that the House must vote the money because the Government made the treaty by which the amount was fixed, that is, left it to be determined by arbitration. The fact is, when they found they could not get the House to favor it they said, we will leave it to the Senate because the Senate is in favor of it. And they put in the treaty the provision that the Senate should determine the question. That is all there is of the award of the Senate as I understand it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would ask the gentleman how the claim came before the House prior to that treaty? I have had occasion to examine the question and I do not recollect anything to justify that view of the matter.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Did not the gentleman find that it was before the House in various ways prior to that treaty?

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the gentleman to state in what ways.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The gentleman says he is familiar with it; I ask him to state.

Mr. MAYNARD. I state that I was not aware of any information to justify that statement on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Does the gentleman say that it was not before the House at different times, and in divers ways?

Mr. MAYNARD. I have made my inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Before the gentleman propounded his inquiry, I stated that I had not looked at the record myself to see whether the House had acted upon it. I had understood—I have not examined it particularly to see whether the House had acted on it or not—I had understood that it had. But I submit to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] that the nature of that treaty is as I have stated, and that prior to that treaty the House had a right to act upon the subject just as much as the Senate had. But the treaty provided that the Senate alone should decide as to the liability of the Government and the amount of the claim, and now the House is asked to come in and sustain what is called the award of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it cannot be said that the treaty under which this award was made was not properly made according to the Constitution of the United States. That treaty determined that the question of the liability of the Government should be referred to the Senate of the United States as arbitrators. The Senate in 1859, after having deducted very large amounts which I think this House to-day, if they would carefully consider, would say were unjustly deducted, came to the conclusion that $2,900,000 and more was due.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives has been called upon to pass on that treaty, and in a session soon following that award the House appropriated $500,000 in part payment of it. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of that sum has been paid. The balance was not paid because of the interruption of the war.

But, Mr. Chairman, the history of the claim is this: From the time that the award was made until the present day every committee of both Houses of Congress that has examined the question has reported in favor of its ultimate payment. At the last session of this Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs through the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] made a full and elaborate report on the subject.

Another report came also from the Committee on Appropriations, if I remember aright.

Now, sir, these Indians in 1830 ceded ten million acres of land in the State of Mississippi to the United States under a stipulation and agreement that the land should be surveyed and sold. The first clause of that treaty spoke of the transaction as a sale. The Government of the United States has never paid for the land under that arrangement. In 1869, when the Senate had this matter before them as arbitrators, there lay in the Treasury of the United States as proceeds derived from the sale of those lands more than $7,000,000. There was charged to these Indians the cost of their transportation beyond the Mississippi, although the treaty of 1830 provided that their transportation should be at the expense of the United States.

Any man who has carefully and fairly investigated this claim must ere this have come to the conclusion that no greater act of wrong or injustice was ever committed by any country upon any people than has been committed by the United States in thus long delaying the payment to these Indians of their just dues.

But, Mr. Chairman, the objection which was made at the last session of this Congress, and which I expect to hear again before this debate shall close, is that this money when paid will not go directly to the Indians to whom it belongs. I have myself a fear that such may be the fact, but that will not deter me from doing what I believe to be an act of justice.

It has been said that there is a lobby surrounding this House urging that this claim be paid; and although I have never been able to see it, I have no doubt it exists. Why, sir, the old Indian, Mr. Pitchlynn, who has been the agent of that tribe for more than twenty years, has been pressing in season and out of season, in the most proper language, the justice of this claim. He has been obliged to employ others to assist him; and the amount of compensation to which he and those who have assisted him would be entitled must be very large.

I shall advocate the payment of this claim, but I fear that I cannot do it upon the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO.] I think it should be provided in the body of the bill that before the whole body of the award is distributed a sum not exceeding a certain percentage upon the whole amount shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to the persons who have performed service and expended money in urging this claim.

The treaty of 1855 under which this award was made provided that the money should be paid to the individual claimants in the Indian country to whom it belongs. What are the facts? The individual claimants are those to whom the United States at the date of that treaty were justly and honestly indebted for breach of the conditions of the treaty of 1830 as regards them; and before the United States would do this act of justice, even before the Senate of the United States would enter into a treaty to carry it out, we made the Indian nation assume to pay out of this award (the just and honest proceeds of the sale of their own country) claims of the United States due to Indians of that nation. The Choctaw Nation by that treaty assumed the payment of these large claims of their citizens upon the United States, so that we have that nation standing to-day pledged by a treaty to pay the honest debts of the United States due to their citizens, while we are withholding from them the amount of money we honestly owe them. The amount of those claims, according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and the accompanying documents upon our tables, exceeds the sum of $4,000,000.

I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION —. That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations of the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate, made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, he being authorized to receive the same by the council of said nation, the sum of $2,981,247.30, the amount of said award, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of said award until the payment thereof as herein provided, less the sum of $250,000 heretofore paid in part satisfaction of said award, to be deducted as of the date of said part payment; the same to be paid from time to time by said Secretary, and in such sums as may be required for the purposes hereafter named, and as may seem to be safe and prudent. Said money shall be disbursed by the treasurer of said nation, with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for said tribe, in the following manner, namely: A sum not exceeding — per cent. of the whole amount of said award remaining unpaid, and the interest thereon, may be paid out by said treasurer as before provided to such persons as the council of said nation shall designate and specify in full compensation for such services as have been by them lawfully rendered to said nation and for such money as they may have lawfully expended in behalf of said nation in the prosecution of the claim of said nation: Provided, That all persons so compensated shall, on receipt of said sums, file with the United States agent of said tribe receipt in full discharge of said nation and all individual members thereof of and from all claim on account of such services or expenditure; that the balance of said award and interest remaining after the payment before provided for shall be paid by the treasurer of said nation as aforesaid to the individuals of said nation, whose claims the said nation assumed and became liable to pay by the twelfth article of said treaty, such sums as may be found and adjudged by the proper authorities of said nation to be equitable and just: Provided, however, If the amount of claims so found and adjudged to be due shall exceed said balance, then that said claimants shall be paid in equal and just proportion according to the amount of their several claims so determined: And provided further, That if any balance after the payments before provided for shall remain, the same shall be paid over to and held by the United States as a general Choctaw fund, as provided by the thirteenth article of said treaty: And provided further, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said award as herein provided, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act in approval of this act, and shall accept the payment of the said award, as herein provided, as a full discharge and satisfaction of all the claims of the said nation, or of individual members thereof, on account of the said award.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, this Choctaw claim is an "old settler." It is dangerous only in that it has some merit at bottom. That these Choctaw Indians forty years ago were dispossessed of their lands and have not received full payment for them the papers show.

The amount fixed in this amendment is taken from the Senate award. That award in my judgment is open to the objection raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] that it was made by a select tribunal, known to be in favor of the claim, without any act or co-operation on the part of the House of Representatives, which, on the contrary, had indicated its hostility. So much for the amount.

Mr. HANCOCK. Will my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations allow me to ask him what action of the House of Representatives he refers to as indicating hostility to this Choctaw claim prior to the treaty of 1855?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If I had the Congressional Globe for the different years I could point out the resolutions and other indications of hostility in the House at different times. So much, then, as to the amount of the claim.

But, Mr. Chairman, the worst thing about it as presented now, the thing the most alarming, is the manner in which this claim for this large fund of nearly $3,000,000 is to be disposed of. In season and out of season there have been men in and about Washington who have urged and clamored for the payment of this fund. When asked to whom shall it go when paid; shall it go directly to the descendants of the Indians who were ousted from their lands, the answer is no. When asked shall it go, according to the provisions of the treaty, in whole or in part to an educational fund for the tribe of Choctaws under the guarantees established by Congress, the answer is likewise in the negative. The language is always insisted upon as stated by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] in his remark, "that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay to P. P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized agents of the Choctaw Nation, or either of them, the sum of $2,981,000."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. But that is not part of my amendment.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I know it is not a part of the gentleman's amendment. I am not talking about his amendment, but showing how this claim is obtruded before Congress continually, and how it comes here now in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO.] These men undoubtedly have been made agents for the Choctaw tribe of Indians for the purpose of pushing and presenting this claim. It may be said they have been given authority to collect it. It may be argued so. I do not believe, however, their authority, as a matter of law, bears that construction; but even if it did, and this fund as fixed by treaty is to go for educational purposes for the whole tribe, or in payment of individual claimants the descendants of the Indians who lost their lands, I for one would say that not a step should be taken for the payment of this large sum until we have hedged it round so surely that the guarantees of the treaty cannot be broken, but every dollar of it shall go to the Indians themselves.

Why, sir, without saying anything personal as to these men who have been agents for this tribe for years, it is sufficient to know they have been here at the doors of Congress year in and year out, and they have been at the mercy of the lobby, which roars when a claim of quarter the magnitude of this comes before the House. I have reason to believe, and do believe as much as that I stand here, this great fund has been mortgaged over and again to interests which have no part nor parcel in the distribution of this money legitimately. I know that when it is urged here it is claimed it shall be paid in this way only, and I tell this committee, Mr. Chairman, if it is not passed in the way presented here, to pay it to Peter P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, or to one of them, the clamor which besets us forever here to pass this measure will cease, because it is not wanted to pass so the money shall go directly to the Indians themselves. I warn the House to be careful how it proceeds, and if any measure be passed here to guard it to the fullest extent, just as the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] guards it. I have no reason to believe there is any member upon this floor who has any illegitimate interest in the matter. I speak of outside influences, which have been continually besetting us. They never rest; they never cease. When the money is appropriated the mode of its payment should be carefully guarded.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. In reply to the gentleman from Maine, I will commence at the conclusion of his speech in reference to the danger of the lobby. If you were to tell a man who was not acquainted with the way you did things here, that for forty-four years the authorized and legal representatives of a weak and humble people had beset the Congress of the United States for simple justice, and session after session and year after year had been spurned with contempt from the doors of Congress, he would reply that the reason why a lobby existed, if any did exist, was because the honorable gentlemen who composed Congress were unwilling to do justice.

I say to gentlemen, upon the floor of this House, if you desire to break down this institution, called and known as the lobby, render it unnecessary that men who have honest claims against the Government should ever employ anybody to present those claims to members of this House. For forty-four yea s these people have been here through this old man, known as Governor Pitchlynn, authorized by their legislature to come here and collect and receive this money from the Government. Yet we say we cannot settle the claim for fear it will pass into the hands of some lobbyists. Is it true that the whole legislative power of this Government is paralyzed and destroyed to such an extent that justice cannot be done here for fear the lobby will get the benefit of it? I say in reference to this claim, that it is a just one. I say that no member of this House can honestly investigate it who will not come to the same conclusion. The non-payment of this money under the facts and circumstances attending it is a disgrace to the nation. If these people were powerful enough to compel payment at our hands, it would have been paid many years ago. But they are a weak people. They are humble. They are unable to assert their rights by force of arms, and the consequence has been that we by bayonets drove them from their homes in Mississippi, and secured from them by fraud—by fraud, I repeat it, we secured from them the treaty of 1830. Yet under that treaty, secured by fraud and by force, we did agree to pay them for their lands in Mississippi. From the year 1830, to this hour, they have been unpaid.

It is exceedingly unjust for my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] and my friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] to undertake to make insinuations against this claim, by asserting that it has been before this House prior to the award of 1855, and that the House refused to act upon it. The gentlemen are entirely mistaken. It was never before this House except, in so far as the House, together with the Senate, passed a law authorizing and establishing a commission to go down to Mississippi to investigate the nature and character of this claim. That commission did go there. They came back and reported. And in consequence of that report these people through their agents agreed with the Government of the United States that they would submit this whole question to the Senate.

My distinguished friend from Pennsylvania says that was wrong. Ah! wrong that this weak, humble, and, at that time, comparatively uncivilized people should submit their claim to this great body, known as the Senate of the United States. The wrong was upon the side of the Government, in defrauding the Indians into a consent to submit it there; because that Senate fraudulently and wrongfully and illegally took what justly belonged to these people, over $2,000,000, besides what is awarded to them and what is claimed here. The Senate cheated into making this award! The fathers of the Republic, Webster, Calhoun, Sebastian, and those other men on whom we look with reverence as men of ability and fidelity, were cheated by these Indians in making this award! And a distinguished member of this House gets up and urges that as an objection to this claim. With what grace it comes from leading gentlemen in this House to assert that the Senate were deceived by the Indians in making this award!

The Senate, after having all these things before them, made this award, and found, after making these illegal deductions, we had agreed in the treaty of 1830 that we would remove these people and pay the cost of removal. We did remove them, and we charged them $800,000 for it. We agreed that we would furnish them cattle. We did furnish them cattle, and we took it out of the price of their lands that we undertook to steal from them. We agreed that we would pay pensions to the Indians who had been in the war on the side of the Government. We did pay the pensions, but we deducted them from the price of their own lands. We drove these people from the State of Mississippi, and after we had driven them from there and taken their lands by force, we went on and surveyed the lands that they might be open for settlement, and then compelled the people whom we had driven off the lands to pay the cost of surveying. And we call that justice, and we say there is not wisdom enough in this House to steer clear of Charybdis on the one side, in the shape of old man Pitchlynn, and Scylla on the other, in the shape of this miserable lobby; so we will not allow this claim. It is simply ridiculous to go behind the Senate award. Why, sir, you have recognized it; you have passed upon its validity by an act of Congress appropriating $500,000 to satisfy it, and you have paid $250,000 of that $500,000. I say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] if this proposition is not safe let us go to work to make it safe. But, in Heaven's name and in the name of all that is just and righteous, do not let us delay longer the payment of a claim that has been due from this Government now for forty-five years.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Will my colleague on the committee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does not the gentleman believe that it would be safer to guard this fund in some such manner as is proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs? What is his view on that question?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I will reply to that question, and I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to it as it relates to another point in his remarks. He intimated in his remarks that this fund ought to be held under the treaty as a trust fund. There are two sections of this treaty. The one provides that after the satisfaction of all the individual claims due to the Indians against the Choctaw Nation, the remainder of the money shall be placed in the Treasury in trust, upon which the interest shall be paid.

Well, sir, at the last session of Congress we instructed and directed the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the amount of these individual claims for which the tribe was liable. The Secretary has made his report, and instead of there being anything left after the payment of those claims, it is ascertained that they will exhaust this amount and that much more will be required; that they amounted to nearly $5,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I am obliged to the gentleman.

Under the treaty of 1855, therefore, we cannot put this money into the Treasury as a trust fund unless we violate the provisions of that treaty. I admit that it is not difficult for us to do that after our experience in these treaty violations in this country, but if the liabilities of the tribe to the individual Indians exhaust this amount of money, then it must be paid to the tribe or somebody representing the tribe.

Now I will say, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Maine, that if I understand properly the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, it contemplates the payment of this money to the treasurer of the tribe. If there be anything in the objection urged by the gentleman from Maine, that it is not so safe in all respects as the method proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] with some amendments which might be and ought to be submitted before it passes, I will tell you why. This tribe of Indians have ever since the year 1853 appointed agents to collect this money. Those agents are Mr. Pitchlynn and Mr. Folsom. They reiterated their authority to these men no longer ago than last October, because in their council they passed a resolution reiterating what had been done time and again by that legislative body, and certifying that they have full confidence in these men. The treasurer of the tribe, unless there is some special regulation in relation to the matter, would not be authorized to receive this money. I have no objection to giving it to anybody who will safely conduct it to the Indians. I agree with the gentleman from Maine, that the Indians, and the Indians alone, are the men entitled to this money. I believe that Mr. Pitchlynn is an honest man. He may be overreached by designing men who want to get some of this money, but I am certain that he is honest, and that so far as in him lies this money will be honestly returned to his tribe.

Now, there are but two questions in this case. In the first place, is the claim just? Is it honest? I have never, either on the floor of this House or elsewhere, heard anybody charge that this was not an honest claim. The gentleman from Maine says it is "an old settler." Well, if it is "an old settler," so much the more disgrace to the Government of our country. As an honest Government it ought to pay just claims which it owes its citizens. It is a distressing spectacle to find a helpless people beseeching the Congress of the nation and the Departments of the Government to do them justice, and it is seldom they get what they ask for in such cases.

If this amendment is not in proper shape so as to dispose of this money, let us put it in proper shape so that it will be disposed of, and that it may be said that we have acted honestly and fairly in the matter. I started on the investigation of this case as a member of the Committee on Appropriations last session with perhaps some of the same sentiments that are entertained by my friend from Maine. I knew it was an old claim, and I thought that if it had been just it would have been paid long ago; but I looked at the treaty and at the way in which these people had been treated, and I say to the gentleman that if he or any other member here had given the subject the same attention I have he would have come to but one conclusion, and that is that this is an honest claim, and the only trouble is that we cheated these people out of millions of dollars that justly belonged to them under the treaty which we had made with them. It will not do for gentlemen to plant themselves in the position here that at some time or other some man in this House may have questioned this claim, and that therefore we ought not to pass it, when four committees of the House of Representatives and three committees of the Senate at different times have had the subject before them and have unanimously agreed to the justice of the claim.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, under the treaty of 1830 between the Choctaw tribe of Indians and the United States, the Choctaws claim that they were justly entitled to the sum of money which the United States had realized from the sale of the lands that had been ceded by that treaty in the State of Mississippi. Several members of the tribe or nation claimed also that they were entitled to money by way of damages sustained by reason of having been denied the reservations that were provided for them under the treaty of 1830; others, who had settled under that treaty in the State of Mississippi and remained there five years, by virtue of which settlement under the treaty stipulations they should have a fee-simple title to the lands, insisted that they were entitled to be compensated, because the United States had sold the lands and they had lost both the title and their improvements. And a number of the individual members of the Choctaw tribe made a further claim for damages on account of loss of stock and the failure of the Government to comply with its treaty stipulation to remove them from their homes in Mississippi to the lands which they had acquired in what is now the State of Arkansas. These claims all together aggregated in amount some four or five million dollars.

In 1855 a treaty was concluded between the Choctaws and the United States, by which it was agreed that these various claims, both of the tribe and of the individual members of the tribe, should be submitted to the Senate sitting as a board of arbitration. By the eleventh section of that treaty of 1855 it is provided that the award of the Senate shall be either for a sum in gross or for the net proceeds of the sale of the lands; and that in either event that award shall be in full of all demands against the Government of the United States, either by the tribe as a tribe or by the individuals of the tribe, and that the tribe should thereafter be responsible for the settlement of the claims of these individuals. By the twelfth section or article of that treaty, if I recollect aright, it was provided that if there should be any excess, over and above the amount necessary to pay the claims of the individuals of the tribe, it should be set apart as a trust fund for educational and other purposes.

Under this treaty of 1855, to which I have sufficiently referred to enable members to understand substantially the subject now under consideration, there was no award made by the Senate until March 9, 1859. At that time the Senate, after deducting from the amount claimed all the swamp lands and the lands donated to the State of Mississippi for educational purposes, railroads, and internal improvements, charging the Indians with the expense of surveying the lands, and deducting the 5 per cent. of the sales of the land which was granted to the State, withholding also compensation for the lands not yet sold, and charging also some $800,000 for the expense of removing the Indians—the Senate found that there was still due these Indians some $2,900,000.

No action under this award was taken until the following Congress, when there was an act passed authorizing the payment of $500,000 of the amount awarded by the Senate as due. Of that sum $250,000 was paid; but, the rebellion coming on, the other $250,000 was withheld owing to the unsettled and disturbed condition of the country.

This is a brief but distinct history of this case; so brief perhaps that all may not understand the full merits of the case I have endeavored to present. There has been no legislation since the appropriation of $500,000. The balance of the award remains unpaid, so far as there has been any legislation by Congress from that time to the present.

The question now before this committee is whether this award shall be paid or not. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] says that he does not want to pay this award any way at this time; he says that it is an old claim, an old settler; and he intimates as one objection to it that the House has been excluded from participation in the determination of the rights of these Indians, which was the right of the House prior to the treaty of 1855.

I thought it due to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, to ask him where he got his information that the House had anything to do with this matter prior to 1855. I have endeavored to familiarize myself pretty thoroughly with the history of this case, and I have failed to find anything of the kind. I do not think that the gentleman intended any aspersion upon the committee, but he must have been so informed, or the fact probably existed, but has escaped my research, which perhaps has not been sufficiently careful. It is difficult for me to imagine in what way this question could have come before the House prior to the treaty of 1855.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am not certain that it was before the House.

Mr. HANCOCK. Well, I am sure if it ever was before the House I never heard of it until it was mentioned to-day by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.] Nor do I believe there was any purpose to infringe upon the rights of the House by the action taken by the Senate. There certainly can be no legal or constitutional reason assigned why the United States should not have entered into this treaty through the action of the Senate. That was the proper department of the Government to consider a subject of that character.

It would seem that the only question remaining for us to determine is whether the Government is bound to carry out its treaty stipulations with these Indians. If the award of the Senate constitutes an arbitration, then it is one which not only have we not met, but which we have put off the definite determination of by resorting to every artifice that special pleading could devise. It is true that the sum awarded may be a large one. But the amount of property we have received and acquired from these Indians is certainly far beyond in value the amount now proposed to be paid to them. Except the commutation in favor of those who received reservations, up to this time we have never paid these Indians one single dollar for their lands in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did we not give them the land to which they were removed?

Mr. HANCOCK. No, sir. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] had examined this question with the care which he usually bestows upon questions, especially those which may involve the expenditure of money, he would have found that that reservation was ceded to them under the treaty of 1820 for the lands obtained from them in Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee. Not a foot of this land went in consideration of the cession that was made to them of the territory upon which they now are, nor anything else except the commutation which was given to those who had acquired reservations in the State of Mississippi and were afterward compelled to give them up.

I am willing to accept, so far as I am concerned, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to pay this amount in bonds. I believe that in justice, in right, in equity and fair dealing, in strict honesty, and in the observance of that rule which we would require from any of the large and great powers toward ourselves and which we would readily accord to them, this claim ought to be paid in coin. But as there are differences of opinions and disagreements as to whether it should be paid at all now, though all admit that it should be paid, a portion of the committee have expressed a desire that it may be paid in bonds; and I think we had better dispose of it in that way. Therefore I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor merely for the purpose of explaining in a few words the nature of my amendment. Wherever I have inquired since this claim came to my knowledge, to whomsoever I have spoken, I have been universally told that the claim is honest and just and ought to be paid, but that the only objection to it is that the lobby may get a portion of the money.

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not know any lobby.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Now, sir, sympathizing with that feeling, I have desired to limit the amount which may possibly go for the payment of the expenses of the presentation of this claim before Congress. Therefore I have provided in my amendment that only a certain percentage (which this House can fix) shall be spent in that way, and that the balance shall be expended according to the terms of the treaty.

Mr. HANCOCK. How much will be left under the terms of the treaty, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, to whom we referred the subject last session?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. The gentleman misapprehends me. I say that the Indian nation should be allowed to pay out of the proceeds of this claim the expenses they have incurred in presenting their claim before Congress; that if they have employed agents here who have honestly worked in their behalf, they should be allowed to pay certain sums for those services. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri might possibly allow the whole of the money to go in that way; but my amendment provides that a sum not exceeding a percentage which I have left blank (preferring to leave the amount for the consideration of the House) may first be paid; then the amendment provides that the balance of the claim shall be paid—how? Exactly according to the treaty; first in the liquidation of those claims which the United States Government at the date of the treaty owed to the individual Indians and which the Indian nation assumed to pay. Those claims are to be ascertained as the Choctaw Nation may determine. I have already stated that in 1855 the legislative body of the Choctaw Nation created a court of claims, a well-conceived and well-organized arrangement, by which those claims might be judicially determined. The amendment which I propose provides that after the payment of the necessary expenses, the balance of the money shall be paid according to the treaty, under the superintendence and direction of the agent of Indian affairs for that country, to the individual claimants. Then the treaty goes on to provide that if there is any balance of the claim, it shall go into a general Choctaw fund, to be kept in the Treasury of the United States, the interest of which shall be paid to the Choctaw Nation. This is exactly the nature and character of my amendment.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I understood the gentleman's amendment to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay this money out at his discretion. It gives him his own time to pay it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. No, sir. The amendment provides that the money shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. When?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. As often and as fast as the treasurer of the nation is ready to carry out the payments required by this measure. The treaty provides that it shall be paid to the nation and distributed under the direction and superintendence of the Choctaw Nation. The money is to be paid to the treasurer of the tribe.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. But the gentleman's amendment, as I understand, leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury when to pay it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Let that clause of the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to pay out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, he being authorized to receive the same by the council of said nation, the sum of $2,981,247.30. * * * Said money shall be disbursed by the treasurer of said nation, with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for said tribe.

Mr. SHANKS. Mr. Chairman, I am not wedded to any particular mode of paying this debt, but I am as anxious as it is proper for a Representative to be that the debt should be paid. I am willing to accept any amendment or vote for any measure that secures beyond the possibility of a doubt that this money shall go to those to whom it belongs. But I have been upon this floor long enough to hear that excuse made about as often as it ought to be made. I have heard men stand here and talk against the payment of this claim on the ground that the money would not go to the parties entitled to it; and after months had rolled around I have heard these men repeat the same thing without their ever attempting to invent an honest mode of protecting these people from the ravages—of whom? Not of other Indians, but of civilized, Christian men, a part of our population.

Now, Mr. Speaker, who is Peter P. Pitchlynn, that his name should be used here as having prosecuted this claim for so many years? Peter P. Pitchlynn is himself an Indian; he belongs to the Choctaws. He is an educated man, and at one time was chief of the Choctaws, He writes his own appeals to Congress, and they will compare favorably with the utterances of any man in this body on any subject whatever. He is an old man, I have known him for years, who has honestly come before Congress to present the just claim of his people. He has always appeared here modestly, asking only for what was right. In behalf of the Choctaws he has simply asked for justice. Nor do you find that old man complaining now in bitter terms because of delay on the part of Congress in the payment of this fund. You do not find him here as a lobbyist. You do not find him in bad company. I tell you, sir, there is not a man on this floor who need hesitate to be found here or elsewhere in the company of Peter P. Pitchlynn of the Choctaw Nation.

Now, upon what ground has he the right to appear here? The very best of grounds. He is here as the representative of his people and by their choice. His name is written first to the treaty of 1855 providing for the settlement of this claim. Two years before, by act of the Choctaw council, approved November 9, 1853, he was appointed, he and other parties signing this treaty, to collect the claim. The claim itself originated as far back as 1830. From 1853 up to this time P. P. Pitchlynn and those associated with him have been at the bar of this House asking for the payment of this fund which under the treaty was agreed to be paid to them. Shame then upon the men of this House, shame then upon the men who have stood here knowing all these facts, and yet have not had the manhood to rise up and speak the truth in behalf of this Choctaw people, and their agent who has appeared here honestly urging upon Congress to pay this debt.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] says that this matter was taken out of the hands of the House of Representatives under treaty made with these Indians and referred to the Senate alone. There is no such thing in the treaty, and of course there was provided no such thing as the reference of this matter to the Senate alone. There is in the eleventh article of the treaty a provision by which the Senate of the United States is made the umpire between the Choctaws and the United States so far as to determine in what way this money should be paid. There were two propositions laid down by the treaty, one that the Indians should be allowed a sum in gross in payment of their claim for land taken, and the other that they should be allowed the net proceeds of the sale of their lands. The Government of the United States, under the treaty of 1830, had taken some ten million acres of land lying along the Mississippi River, covering the whole water front, and valuable to our people. That provision of the treaty submitted to the Senate as umpire these two propositions, whether these Choctaw Indians should have their money in gross or should have the net proceeds arising from the sale of their lands. The Senate decided they should have the net proceeds. In order to learn the amount of lands taken from the Indians, application was made to the Interior Department for information. The Secretary of the Interior submitted a report showing the number of acres and also the amount at the price fixed of $1.25 per acre. The report showed the amount of lands sold and the amount remaining unsold. The price for the latter was reduced to twelve and one-half cents per acre. Out of the total amount were deducted the lands granted in aid of railroads passing through the very country from which the Choctaws had been driven. There were also deducted lands given to educate the white people. There were various other items deducted.

What then was left? There was left the amount of this award. What was done after the Senate confirmed this treaty, after it had directed the Secretary of War to make report on these matters, and report was made and acted on, after deducting the various items to which I have referred—what then was done? Why, sir, almost immediately the Senate and House passed a bill appropriating $500,000 in part payment of the award. By so doing they affirmed and indorsed the contract already entered into. They admitted the liability on the part of Congress to pay the balance.

Therefore P. P. Pitchlynn has been here rightly and honestly urging the payment of the balance of the fund due to the Choctaw Indians. That is all he asks now. If this can be made safer than by the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO,] let it be done. I have no controversy on that point. I suggested a provision that the Choctaws should first direct by law to whom this money should be paid. I desired that that should be entered of record as a receipt to last for all time in the settlement of this matter. I believe these propositions will be safe. So far as the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation is concerned, I do not suppose he is called upon to sign a bond which would make him responsible for the safe-keeping of two or three million dollars. Therefore any default of that treasurer must lie at our own doors in the end. I insist, however, if I have a moment to spare, and I shall insist here now and forever, that this debt shall be honestly paid through P. P. Pitchlynn or anybody else who may be appointed by the Choctaw Nation to receive it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. If the award made in the Senate in 1859 is conclusive, the only question presented here is when we shall pay this money. But I do not so understand the law governing the proceedings of this House. I think if there is any established doctrine here upon this subject, as established by measures on the part of the House which often become necessary, the House must exercise its own judgment as to the results of the award made by the Senate.

Coming back to the foundation of this claim, I ask that the following section of the treaty of 1830 may be read; for the whole case seems to turn upon that, as I understand it.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The United States shall cause the lands hereby ceded to be surveyed, and surveyors may enter the Choctaw country for that purpose, conducting themselves properly and disturbing or interrupting none of the Choctaw people. But no person is to be permitted to settle within the nation, or the lands to be sold, before the Choctaws shall remove. And for the payment of the several amounts secured in this treaty the lands hereby ceded are to remain a fund pledged to that purpose until the debt shall be provided for and arranged. And further, it is agreed that in the construction of the treaty, wherever well-founded doubt shall arise, it shall be construed most favorably toward the Choctaws.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this claim, by that treaty of 1830 the United States agreed to pay certain annuities to this tribe of Indians amounting to $20,000 a year for the period of twenty years. They agreed to make certain other provisions in their behalf in consideration of the cession of their lands to the State of Mississippi, over which the State of Mississippi had extended its jurisdiction, rendering it practically impossible for this Indian tribe to remain there. Now, sir, I understand—and if I am laboring under a misapprehension of the effect of this eighteenth article I hope the gentlemen who have discussed this subject will point it out—I understand that the only effect of this eighteenth article is this: that while the Indians remained there the Government might come upon the lands and survey them; that the Government should not dispose of the lands until the removal of the Indians; and that the lands should be held as a fund on which the sums to be paid by the United States under the treaty should be a charge. I will read that portion of the article:

> And for the payment of the several amounts secured in this treaty the lands hereby ceded are to remain a fund pledged to that purpose until the debt shall be provided for and arranged.

There is nothing here, sir, that looks like a retention of those lands or of the proceeds of them for the benefit of this Indian tribe. On the contrary, the language seems to clearly imply that these lands were absolutely ceded, not taken possession of by the Government of the United States until after the Indians were removed; and also that upon them should be charged the payment of the sums of money which the Government had agreed to pay by the terms of this treaty.

Now, sir, within a very short time after this award was made by the Senate, in March, 1859, I heard the subject discussed here on this floor by gentlemen then exceedingly familiar with the whole history of these events. I must say, sir, that the opinion was then expressed that for twenty years and upward this claim was never asserted by this tribe of Indians; that after a lapse of over twenty years, for the first time, it was insisted that there was ambiguity in the language of this eighteenth article, and that the meaning of the eighteenth article was that the tribe was to have the benefit of the proceeds of those lands. Now, sir, if it was true that this long period elapsed before this averment was made, that there was a misapprehension, that there was a misinterpretation of this article, that fact ought to be taken into consideration. But I submit, sir, that by the terms of this article this tribe was not entitled to the benefit of the proceeds of the land; but the lands were simply to be held chargeable with the payment of the sums of money which the Government had agreed to pay to the tribe by virtue of this treaty of 1830. And, sir, when this subject was discussed fifteen years ago it was discussed on that same point alone, and all these other points now discussed were then unknown.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Before the gentleman from Indiana takes his seat I would like to ask him a question. Does he believe that the Senate of the United States, having all the facts before them and having the previous treaties before them, were deceived into making this award in 1855 by those Indians?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that this is a question on which the House was compelled to pass its judgment as to whether that award was properly made or not, and I must say here that the impression made upon my mind at the time this subject was first discussed in the House, and the impression I have received from that time to this from casual examinations, was that the conclusion reached by the Senate was not the correct conclusion; that the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1830 did not bear the interpretation the Senate put upon it.

Mr. GARFIELD obtained the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts want the committee to rise for the purpose of proceeding to other business or to adjourn?

Mr. DAWES. There is a question which I desire to bring before the House.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Very well.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DAWES, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POLAND reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONTUMACIOUS WITNESS—CHARLES A. WETMORE.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody Charles A. Wetmore, alleged to be in contempt of the privileges of the House.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, the Sergeant-at-Arms, in obedience to the order of the House, is at the bar of the House with Charles A. Wetmore, that he may show cause why he should not be committed for contempt.

The SPEAKER. Charles A. Wetmore, you are now at the bar of the House for an alleged contempt of its authority, in that you have declined to answer a question propounded to you by the Committee on Ways and Means, authorized to do so in an investigation now being prosecuted by them under the order of the House. Are you prepared to answer the question?

CHARLES A. WETMORE. No, sir; I simply request time until to-morrow to determine whether I can rightfully answer the question without a breach of confidence, as I proposed to the committee.

The SPEAKER. You are at liberty to give any excuse you have to offer for your refusal to answer.

CHARLES A. WETMORE. Mr. Speaker, I have written out a little statement. It is simply a request on my part, with the reasons therefor, for a postponement until to-morrow, when I may be afforded a better opportunity with justice to myself to answer to this charge of contempt.

I am before the bar of this House to answer why I should not be committed for contempt. The cause of my appearance here is simply stated. On the 4th instant, late at night, I sent a special dispatch to the Alta California, among the statements being one that "A strange rumor is afloat concerning BECK and his connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy." Mr. BECK demanded an explanation of this sentence, which, however, did not in any way cause circulation of any particular rumor. Being pressed to answer, I mentioned, among others, a rumor which was confidentially related to me by a friend, to the effect that a check from Mr. Fant had been traced to Mr. BECK; but this rumor I had never published, not deeming it worthy of publication unless corroborated in some way; neither do I now assert or charge the same, or affect to believe it. When demanded the name of the party who had related the rumor to me, I asked time until to-morrow, so that I might obtain permission, or furnish the committee with evidence as to the origin of the rumor, which was related to me only as hearsay evidence and not with intention to make it public. This time the committee refused to grant, notwithstanding in all other cases it had been usual to grant it.

I am compelled to ask the indulgence of this House for time until to-morrow to make answer to the charge of contempt. I am, so far, the only witness so summarily brought here under like circumstances, and require a little time to prepare an answer, so that I may not be forced before public notice without an opportunity to make such a statement as I have never been called upon for before. I listened to a portion of the report of the committee relating my evidence to-day, and heard several very important answers which might misrepresent what I did say, if suffered to go out to the public without correction. I would respectfully request an opportunity to read this evidence in full and to have it corrected before I am required to answer to this charge of contempt. I have no ill-will to any member of the committee and would like to have a fair chance to make my own statement, and I think I can probably to-morrow fully satisfy the committee, and especially Mr. BECK, that I have not desired to keep any important information from them. I therefore respectfully ask this House to give me until to-morrow to make answer.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the customary resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles A. Wetmore having been heard by the House of Representatives, pursuant to an order heretofore made requiring him to show cause why he should not answer the question propounded to him by the committee and by the Speaker of this House, in obedience to its order, has failed to show sufficient cause why he should not answer the same; and that the said Charles A. Wetmore be considered in contempt of the House for the failure to make answer thereto.

Mr. DAWES. I only desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is but a single question which this witness is required to answer. It does not need any time for investigation or for consultation of books and papers or conference with any individuals. It is not a confidential communication in any legal sense. It is not a communication that any body has the right to make confidential. It is of a character that this House is entitled to the answer and entitled to it as much to-day as to-morrow. There is only one question for this witness to answer, and that is: Will you give up the name of the person who has charged not only a member of this House, but a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, now engaged in this investigation, with having received a portion of this money in the form of a check? If it were a case which required the examination of papers or conference with parties to be able to submit to this House an extended narrative or any testimony other than yea or nay, I would myself feel as if it was not unreasonable to grant him until to-morrow; but this is unlike any other case that has been brought before the House, both in the character of the question and in the scope of the application of the question.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. DAWES. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I would ask him whether the same privilege has not been accorded to numerous other witnesses who have been examined before his committee as is asked by this witness?

Mr. DAWES. There has been no such case before the committee, as I was remarking when the gentleman interrupted me.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Is there any special reason why the indulgence should not be accorded to this witness that has been accorded to numerous other witnesses who have been examined by the committee?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly; if it was a case like that of the other witnesses it would be fair to grant this privilege, and if the House sees anything about this case that renders it necessary that this witness should take till to-morrow to reflect on the propriety of answering the question, then of course the House will give him time. I represent simply the committee in submitting this case to the House. I have certainly no desire to press the witness unduly.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I move, then, that the request of the witness be complied with. He only asks time till to-morrow to determine whether he will or will not answer this question. He may desire to consult counsel. From the statements made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] I understand that that indulgence has been accorded to all the other witnesses asking it, and I see no reason, nor does the gentleman himself give any reason, why this witness should be treated any more harshly than any other witness before the committee.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOUGHTON] is the same as that of a motion to postpone the further consideration of the pending resolution until to-morrow.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I will move to postpone the further consideration of this resolution until to-morrow.

The question was taken on the motion to postpone, and upon a division there were—ayes 87, noes 80.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. CALDWELL called for the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being upon a division 35 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. COX. Before the roll-call is commenced permit me to make a parliamentary inquiry. The Sergeant-at-Arms requests me to ask the Chair what will become of the witness, should the motion to postpone be agreed to?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would infer that in the mean time the witness would be at liberty; or perhaps, under the previous order of the House, he might still be retained in custody.

Mr. COX. I would like to have that ascertained, for our votes may depend upon the decision of that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the resolution the House adopted to-day in relation to this witness.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker issue his warrant directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms attending this House or his deputy, commanding him to take into custody forthwith wherever to be found the body of Charles A. Wetmore, and him bring to the bar of the House to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt; and in the mean time keep the said Wetmore in custody to await the further order of the House.

The SPEAKER. Under that resolution, if the further consideration of the pending resolution should be postponed until to-morrow, the witness would remain in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms; he would be precisely in the same condition he was in before being brought in here now. The question is upon postponing the further consideration of the pending resolution until to-morrow, and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. An adjournment would in effect be precisely the same, as regards this resolution, as the postponement of its further consideration until to-morrow.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 125, noes 34.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. CALDWELL called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 20, noes 108.

So (one-fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and there were 29 in the affirmative—one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were ordered; and Mr. COBB of Kansas, and Mr. CALDWELL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 111, noes 43.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BUCKNER: A paper for the establishment of a post-route from Shamrock to Auxvasse, Missouri, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BURCHARD: Petitions of citizens of Illinois, that the western terminus of the proposed canal from Hennepin to the Mississippi River be located above the Rock Island rapids, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. CAIN: The petition of Thomas B. Helm, of Cheneyville, Louisiana, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The petition of Caroline E. Thomas, to be compensated for services as nurse and matron during the Mexican war, to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the petition of F. H. Johnson and others, of the District of Columbia, for relief, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. COTTON: Petitions of citizens of Lyons, Iowa, that the western terminus of the proposed canal from Hennepin to the Mississippi River be located above the Rock Island rapids, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. COX: The remonstrance of 100 dealers in and importers of foreign wines in New York City against an increase of duties on low-grade wines to forty cents per gallon, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of 507 members of the Woman's National Temperance Union, of Painesville, Ohio, for the passage of such laws as will restrict the importation, manufacture, and use of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia and the Territories to medical and mechanical uses, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRISON: Additional papers in the case of Lucy Smith, administratrix of Adam Smith, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PACKARD: The petition of the Saint Joseph Valley District Medical Society, in behalf of the Medical Corps of the Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SAWYER: Petitions of F. B. Peck and 20 citizens of Winnebago County, Wisconsin; of A. D. Foote and 174 citizens of Berlin, Wisconsin; of J. L. Bridge and 80 citizens of Wanshara, Wisconsin; and of George E. Hoskinson and 24 citizens of Brown County, Wisconsin, for enlarged appropriations of money for the more rapid improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of William M. Burnett, late chaplain Third Tennessee Cavalry, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 20, 1875.

Prayer by Rev. E. D. OWEN, D. D., of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 4445) to incorporate the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4444) to amend an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874;

A bill (H. R. No. 4447) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1869;

A bill (H. R. No. 4449) to amend an act entitled "An act to revive with amendments an act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, approved July 7, 1838"; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4448) making an appropriation for the new school-building in the city of Georgetown, District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. No. 4443) in regard to the visit of His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the memorial of the conservative members of the Legislature of Louisiana, signed by Louis A. Wiltz, speaker, and by 61 others, members of the Legislature, and the clerk, setting forth the facts of the attempted organization of the house of representatives of Louisiana on the 4th instant, and the alleged interference by the military authority of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not hear what the prayer of the memorial was from the conservative members of the Louisiana Legislature. I understand an order was made to print it. I suppose the questions arising out of the affairs in that State have been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and this memorial should go there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask leave to present the joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, relating to the expulsion of officers and members of the Louisiana Legislature, and ask that it be read, laid on the table, and printed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the recent expulsion of the members and officers of the Louisiana house of representatives by an armed force of United States soldiers, after the body had been duly organized in a manner similar to that which the courts of the State had pronounced lawful and proper, was an outrage utterly defenseless in its atrocity, and calls for the severest censure and punishment on all its actors, aiders, and abettors.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to furnish a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the governors of the several States.

GEORGE L. CONVERSE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
ALPHONSO HART,
President of the Senate.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply want to state that I have also received a copy of the same resolutions from the Legislature of Ohio, and also a copy of a protest signed by forty-three republican members of the house, and which was entered upon the journals of the house.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to do more than simply state the fact. I do not know that a protest of this kind would be received in the form of a memorial—the protest of the minority of a legislative body against the resolutions which have been submitted. Perhaps the mere statement of the fact is all that I am entitled to make in regard to the protest sent to me by these members.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Joseph C. Irwin and William Phillips, praying compensation for eighty cavalry horses furnished the United States at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1871 and 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WEST presented a communication from Hon. Michael Hahn, speaker of the house of representatives of Louisiana, signed also by William Vigers, clerk, and the republican members of that body, containing a statement of the revolutionary proceedings which transpired in the hall of that body on Monday, January 4, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a memorial of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that the authorities of the District be authorized and directed to divert to the Southern Maryland Railroad Company the subscription made to the Piedmont and Potomac Railroad Company, accompanied by a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of a board of naval officers under resolution of Congress, and a letter from the president of the company; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the memorial of the stockholders and officers of the Washington Market Company, in favor of such legislation as will relieve the company from present pecuniary embarrassment; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the 11th day of this month the petition of J. M. Irwin, of Ohio, praying to be reimbursed for the amount of money paid for two pieces of property purchased by him near Memphis, Tennessee, and sold by the United States authorities for direct taxes, was presented. By mistake that petition was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have the consent of the chairman of that committee to move that it be taken from that committee and referred to the Committee on Finance. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I see in the proceedings of yesterday that the bill (S. No. 1063) to amend and re-enact section 44 of an act to reduce internal taxes, approved June 6, 1872, was reported adversely from the Committee on Finance and postponed indefinitely. I did not happen to be in my seat at the time. I desire that bill to go on the Calendar. I therefore move to reconsider the vote indefinitely postponing the bill with a view of placing it on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the bill about?

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is in regard to the limitation of suits against the United States for the recovery of taxes wrongfully assessed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator wish to call the attention of the Senate to it?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I simply desire to have it put on the Calendar, nothing else.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves that the vote by which the bill indicated by him was postponed indefinitely be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of the reimbursement to A. B. Gilbert, or the restoration to title therefor, for the value of eighty acres of land in what is known as the New Helvetia or Sutter grant, claimed to have been pre-empted by him and of which he was dispossessed by the Pacific Railroad Company, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1076) to facilitate the disposition of cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes, to report the same favorably with two amendments. I will say that these amendments are tentative, so to speak, and the committee may, before the bill is called, make some modifications in them.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the day before yesterday I had the honor to report from the Committee on the Judiciary on the memorial of Courtland Parker, administrator of George W. Anderson, deceased, accompanied by a bill providing for the payment of a certain sum of money. At that time it was intended to submit a written report, but it was not then prepared. I ask leave to present the report at this time as of that date, and I move that it may be printed to accompany the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Captain H. S. Hawkins, Sixth United States Infantry, asking reimbursement for property lost on the Missouri River by reason of the sinking of the steamer Miner at Yankton, Dakota, in May, 1872, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1020) for the relief of John Fletcher, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 969) for the relief of Ferdinand Monti, a wagon-master in the Mexican war, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 117) for the relief of Samuel Houston, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to,

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation for a military prison at Fort Leavenworth, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to, the Committee on Military Affairs expressing an opinion favorable to the proposed appropriation.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) construing the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution amendatory of joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army, approved July 26, 1866," approved July 11, 1870, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1050) to fix the date of entry into the military service of Colonel and Brevet Major-General Benjamin H. Grierson, United States Army, and to correct his record on the Army Register, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3477) for the relief of Nelson Tiffany, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1079) for the relief of William M. Kendall, of Plymouth, in the State of Indiana, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1107) for the relief of C. H. Frederick, late a lieutenant-colonel in the Ninth Missouri Infantry, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1135) for the relief of Francisco V. De Coster, of Litchfield, Meeker County, Minnesota, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 835) for relief and reappointment of Captain Thomas B. Hunt, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 694) to compensate Colonel D. R. Haggard for six months' service as colonel of the Fifth Kentucky United States Cavalry Volunteers, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2703) for the relief of Ingalls B. Andrews, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1105) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of savings institutions having no capital stock and doing business solely for the benefit of depositors," approved June 22, 1874, reported adversely thereon and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James L. Baldwin, of Logansport, Indiana, praying that certain internal-revenue taxes assessed against him in the months of June and July, 1872, may be refunded, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SCOTT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1162) for the relief of Mrs. Susannah P. Swoope, assignee of the heirs of William Irvin, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1163) for the relief of Mrs. Ann P. Derrick, widow of W. S. Derrick, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1164) to adjust the claim of the owners of lands within the limits of the Klamath Indian reservation in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1165) to protect each State of the Union against invasion, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not see why it should.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a bill about warlike operations, apparently.

Mr. CLAYTON. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better go to the Military Committee. It is a bill to protect a State against invasion. It is purely a military matter and ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I make that motion.

Mr. CLAYTON. I accept the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, judging from its title.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1166) granting the right of way over the public lands for the construction of a wagon-road in Salt Lake County, Utah Territory; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALCORN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1167) for the relief of Robertson Topp and William L. Vance; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1168) regulating contracts for services in rejected and contested pension claims; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. I introduce this bill by request without committing myself to the principles involved or the provisions of the bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1169) to aid the American Printing House for the Blind and University for the Blind in providing suitable buildings; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1170) to aid in the construction of the Southern Maryland Railroad, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say that I introduce this bill with no knowledge of it, and present it without committing myself to it in any manner.

Mr. JOHNSTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1171) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at Memphis, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1172) to authorize the payment of prize-money to the captors of the steamboat New Era Number Five and cargo; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for printing additional copies of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in relation to the election of President and Vice-President, to report it back without amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That three thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the amendment of the Constitution in respect to the election of President and Vice-President be printed for the use of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no resolutions, the Chair will call, under the rule of the Senate during the remaining hour, upon the Committee on Commerce for business.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 528) to protect the navigable waters of the United States from injury and obstruction.

Mr. PRATT. Is that motion in harmony with the resolution adopted on Saturday last, requiring the calling of the committees after the business of the morning hour was over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Commerce has been called, and the Senator from Alabama submits the motion as a member of that committee.

Mr. SCOTT. My recollection is that that is a bill in which the Senator from New Jersey now absent [Mr. STOCKTON] took very considerable interest, and I think he was opposed to its provisions. In his absence, I would suggest to the acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce whether it should be called up.

Mr. SPENCER. That being the case, I will pass the bill over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GROSS OF MATCHES.

Mr. SPENCER. The next bill on the Calendar reported by the Committee on Commerce is the bill (S. No. 728) to define a gross of matches, to provide for uniform packages, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That bill is I suppose a bill that by inadvertence was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It is a bill to define a gross of matches, purely a question of internal taxes, and the very subject-matter is now before the Committee on Finance. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] reported upon it at the last session. I do not think it ought to be acted on here. It is evidently a case of a misreference, because there is no connection between the subject-matter and the duties of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the bill read. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. SPENCER. As there is objection, I will let the bill pass over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be laid aside.

INTRODUCTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. SPENCER. The next bill on the Calendar reported by the Committee on Commerce is the bill (H. R. No. 2887) to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce reported an amendment to the bill in section 6, line 2, after the words "apply to" to insert "or interfere with;" so as to read:

That the provisions of this act shall not be so construed as to apply to or interfere with the health regulations and quarantine measures maintained by States or municipalities.

Mr. THURMAN. That bill raises some very important questions. Every sea-board State, and I believe every State bordering on either of the great lakes, has its police and quarantine regulations for the preservation of its people against any danger of vessels coming into port with persons having infectious diseases; and those health regulations have been decided by the Supreme Court to be within the lawful competency of the States to enact. If that is the case, there is a little trouble in knowing how the United States is to interfere. If the States have authority to make these health regulations, and the United States has like authority, it is very easy to see what a conflict of jurisdiction might arise between the officers of the one and the officers of the other. If on the other hand the whole matter belongs to the States, then it ought to be left to them; but if it is one of those cases of concurrent jurisdiction until Congress shall act, then the effect of the action of Congress would be to oust the State jurisdiction. It is a question of very great consequence, and I see that the committee in reporting the bill had felt that, and therefore provided that the regulations to be made under this act shall not interfere with the regulations of the several States. But it seems to me that there is very great difficulty in that, for the health regulations of the States are different one from the other. The health regulations of Massachusetts are perhaps different from those of New York, and both of them different from those of South Carolina or of Georgia or of Louisiana.

How this board is to make any general regulations that will be effective and not interfere with the State regulations, I do not clearly perceive. I do not know but that Congress may do something in that direction and do something properly, but I should like to have some little time to think about it and find out what the regulations of the States are and how this would be likely to act. I hope therefore the acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce will let this bill go over for the present.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to say that this bill is asked for by the municipal authorities of all the Gulf ports, who are more interested than others. I have in my hands a letter from the mayor of Mobile on the subject.

Mr. THURMAN. It may be that the object of the bill is a good one; I do not say that it is not; but it is a very grave question and one that has been very much discussed. I think it had better go over because I think certainly members would want to consider it.

Mr. SPENCER. Inasmuch as this bill is objected to, let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 808) for the better protection of immigrants.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the appointment by the Secretary of the Treasury of not more than five immigration agents, whose duty it shall be, under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary, to supervise the execution of the laws relating to immigrants, to protect immigrants to the United States from imposition and fraud, and to furnish them with such information as will enable them to proceed in the cheapest and most expeditious manner to the place of their destination, and whose compensation shall be at the rate of six dollars a day and necessary traveling expenses. The Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department is to compile the information thus acquired, and cause it to be printed in such languages as may be considered necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is to be distributed under his directions.

The provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels," approved March 3, 1855, are so amended by this bill as to apply to all foreign and domestic steam or sailing vessels transporting or attempting to transport fifty or more steerage passengers to the United States from any foreign port or place other than foreign contiguous territory, or from the United States to any such foreign port or place, or between ports or places in the United States upon the Atlantic coast and ports in the United States upon the Pacific coast.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that bill explained. It is to create a new set of officers.

Mr. SPENCER. The bill was drawn at the Treasury Department and sent to the Committee on Commerce by the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know that I am competent to explain it. It is a long time since I have seen the bill. It was reported by the Senator from Connecticut, who is now absent, [Mr. BUCKINGHAM.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury with it?

Mr. SPENCER. There ought to be.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the bill will lie over until we either hear the letter or have some explanation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps the letter is here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that there is no letter with the papers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I think it had better go over to the next call. There are some parts of it that I sympathize with and others that I am opposed to. If we have no letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, I move to postpone it till to-morrow, which will leave it in its place on the Calendar.

Mr. SARGENT. I object to postponing it until to-morrow. Another committee has the floor at that time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "To-morrow" is when it comes up again, in parliamentary phrase.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

PORT OF DELIVERY AT PATCHOGUE.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 3593) to constitute Patchogue, on the south side of Long Island, in the State of New York, a port of delivery.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The village of Patchogue, on the south side of Long Island, New York, is by the bill made a port of delivery within the collection district of the port of New York, subject to the same regulations as other ports of delivery in the United States. A surveyor is to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to reside at the port of Patchogue, who shall have the power to enroll and license vessels to be employed in the coasting trade and fisheries, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, and who shall give the usual bond, perform the usual duties in the manner prescribed, and receive the fees he may be entitled to by law as allowed to surveyors for the same duties, and no more.

Mr. HAMLIN. That bill ought to provide for a deputy collector, and not a surveyor. That bill conforms to the old law that applied to interior ports where they only had to examine packages that had been appraised and the duty assessed in other ports. There should be a deputy collector at that place.

Mr. CONKLING. I hesitate very much to differ in any matter with the honorable Senator from Maine. This bill has been before the two Houses of Congress about two years; it has been examined in the House of Representatives, passed by that House, sent here, examined by the Committee on Commerce of this body—examined in respect of the very suggestion made now by the honorable Senator from Maine; and it is the opinion of the Committee on Commerce that this legislation should be had, the persons doing business at that port, which has a very considerable coastwise trade, being compelled now to go twelve miles for all formal purposes.

It is the opinion of the committee further that the bill as it stands is right, is economical, and answers the purpose. I think if the honorable Senator from Maine would give the same examination to the subject that it received in the Committee on Commerce, he too would be of that opinion. His suggestion is that the officer should be called a "deputy collector," and not a "surveyor." I hope he will not, upon a suggestion of that kind, delay the passage of a bill which I think should have been made law some time ago, and that is the opinion of men much wiser than I am touching the subject.

Mr. HAMLIN. I made the suggestion only in the interest of the bill. I interpose no objection. I am perfectly willing that the bill shall pass in this precise form; but I do say that by law a surveyor has no right to enter or clear a vessel. That is precisely what they want there; and men who want such a bill passed right want a deputy collector there and not a surveyor. I make no objection to passing the bill as it is. It will be some benefit to them. It would be more benefit if they had a deputy collector.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, if my friend will listen to me a moment, I beg to read to him from the bill—

Who shall have the power to enroll and license vessels to be employed in the coasting trade and fisheries, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary.

If that does not give the power to do it, I do not understand the meaning of language.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE AT PINE BLUFF, ARKANSAS.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2541) giving the consent of the United States to the erection of a bridge across the Arkansas River at Pine Bluff, Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to have read again that part of the bill which refers to a sale; I do not understand whether it is a sale of the property after the building of the bridge or a sale of the franchises conferred by the act.

Mr. SPENCER. The amendments cut that out.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will be read.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce, in section 2, were in line 7 to insert after the words "high-water mark" the words "nor less than eighty feet above extreme low-water mark;" in line 9, after the word "the," to strike out the words "bottom chord of the bridge" and insert "lowest part of the superstructure;" in line 10, to make the word "spans" read "span," and to insert after the word "span" the words "over the main channel;" in line 11, after the word "be," to strike out "of," after the word "than" to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred;" in line 12, after the word "clear," to insert the words "nor shall the additional span be less than two hundred and fifty feet in the clear;" in line 14, after the word "river," to strike out "at that stage of the river which is most important to navigation;" in line 18, after the word "channel," to strike out the words "at low water;" in line 22, after the word "current," to strike out the words "at the average stage of water in the river;" in line 24, after the word "reached," to strike out the words "at that stage;" and in lines 33 and 34, to strike out the words "bottom chord of the bridge," and insert "lowest part of the superstructure," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any bridge under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company or association building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot or other form of a draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans: Provided, That if the said bridge shall be made with continuous and unbroken spans, it shall not be, in any case, of less elevation than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, nor less than eighty feet above extreme low-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest part of the superstructure; nor shall the span over the main channel be less than three hundred feet in the clear; nor shall the additional span be less than two hundred and fifty feet in the clear; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river; and that no ripraps or other outside protection for imperfect foundation will be permitted in the channel-way of the high span or of the draw openings; and the main span shall be over the main channel: And provided also, That if the said bridge be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall have a pivot-draw, giving two clear openings of one hundred and sixty feet each, measured at right angles to the current, and located in a part of the bridge that can be safely and conveniently reached; and that said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the stationary spans of said bridge, except when trains are passing over the same; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draw before or after the passage of trains; and the next adjoining span to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet, and said span shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark, measuring to the lowest part of the superstructure, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4, as follows:

That all railway companies desiring to use said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That all railway companies desiring to use the said bridge after its completion shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges in the passage of the same, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, and in all the approaches thereto, under and upon such equitable terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in case they shall not agree; and in case of any litigation or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States of any State in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge touches.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to make one suggestion about the details of the extract just read. I made it once before in the Senate; I believe it attracted no attention and probably it will attract none now; but I ask the attention of the lawyers of the Senate to that phraseology "any State in which any portion of said bridge touches." It seems to me very curious phraseology. I have always had some doubt about what it might mean if all the words are to be given significance. I suppose it means "any State which the bridge touches," but the language is "any State in any part of which the bridge touches." If the purpose is merely to express the idea that I state, it seems to me there are too many words there. If it means something else, I do not know what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York move a modification?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not move any amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the words "SEC. 5. That," and insert "And;" so as to read:

And the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7, as follows:

SEC. 7. That said corporation or association may execute a mortgage and issue bonds, payable, principal and interest, in gold or United States currency, and may at any time transfer their charter under the provisions of this act of association or incorporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Although I am of the committee, I confess to ignorance of this measure. I should like to hear from the Senator from Alabama something in the nature of a history of this case. It may be all right.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suggest that the morning hour has expired.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the unfinished business of yesterday is now before the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. PRATT. I move to amend the bill on page 62, line 1514, where the compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions is provided for. This bill provides $3,000 for his salary. I move to amend by inserting "four" instead of "three." My reasons for this I will state briefly. The Senate yesterday increased the compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office from $3,000 to $4,000, as I understand, and they have preserved the compensation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at $6,000 a year. I do not understand why there should be any discrimination in the Department of the Interior between the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Pensions. Certainly the duties of the latter officer are of an extremely onerous character. The office is one of great responsibility. There is disbursed under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions about $30,000,000 a year. The estimate in his report of the amount required under our pension system for the next fiscal year is $30,500,000. The number of pensioners upon the rolls is 235,241. During the last year there were added to the pension-roll a little upward of ten thousand names. There are upward of thirteen thousand, about fourteen thousand, examining surgeons.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will my honorable friend allow me to inquire to what his remarks apply?

Mr. PRATT. I do not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) There is too much conversation in the Chamber.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I inquire what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on amending by increasing the compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions in line 1514 from $3,000 to $4,000.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To relieve the Senator from Indiana from any further remarks upon that subject, I raise the question of order.

Mr. PRATT. What is the question of order?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. To facilitate the matter, I raise the question of order on the amendment. The point is that it increases the appropriation, and no notice has been given of any such purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no notice has been given to the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PRATT. If this bill is not disposed of to-day, the Committee on Pensions will have their regular meeting to-morrow, and they can take action in the matter. I understand it would be proper to move an amendment recommended by one of the standing committees.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That might make it in order.

Mr. PRATT. Then, if the bill is not disposed of to-day, I shall present it to-morrow from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yesterday it will be remembered that the Senate, in committee, refused to strike out the second section of the bill according to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. I wish to inquire whether, when this bill shall come into the Senate, that question can be reserved or will be reserved?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is open to amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section is open to amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. The inquiry I wish to make is whether it will be then in order for the Senate to concur with the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, or whether they will be shut up to the amendment of the second section as it now stands?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to strike out the section will be in order in the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. I want to have the Senate, either in Committee of the Whole or in the Senate proper, concur with the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That question will be open to the Senator in the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. So there is no doubt I can have that right.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly. The Committee on Appropriations have several amendments to propose, to which I desire to invite the attention of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator from Maine will yield to me a moment, I ask leave to have a section of the Revised Statutes read, because I notice by the RECORD that there was some question raised yesterday as to the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I infer from the remarks made by my friend from Indiana this morning that that was taken as a precedent. I wish to show that the Committee on Appropriations have not raised any salary. We tried to cut one down and failed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 446. There shall be in the Department of the Interior a Commissioner of the General Land Office, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to a salary of $4,000 a year.

Mr. SARGENT. That is the amount which we provide in this bill.

Mr. PRATT. I should be glad to inquire of my friend from California if he knows any good reason why any distinction should be made in the matter of compensation between the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to undervalue either of these officers. I think, however, that salaries should be raised by another bill and not by an appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 50, at the end of line 1208, I move the following amendment:

Provided, That the Adjutant-General be, and he is hereby, authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to continue the services of not exceeding sixty-seven enlisted clerks to be employed in copying the worn-out muster-rolls and records, and in examining war claims, until the said work shall be finished, and not exceeding sixty enlisted men to be employed as messengers and watchmen until the records of the Adjutant-General's Office can be collected in one safe building: Provided, That the number of enlisted men hereby authorized shall be reduced as soon as their services can be dispensed with without injury to the public service.

I will make a single remark in regard to this proposition. This is not an increase of the service, but rather a continuance of the service now employed. It was hoped that it might have been dispensed with this year, and so the committee did not report it originally; but upon a careful presentation of the case by the Adjutant-General and a most careful consideration of the necessities of that Department, we have become thoroughly satisfied that it ought to be continued for another year. This force is employed in connection with the records of the Army, the rolls of the Army, and it is of a very important character. The transcribing of these rolls upon books is important in two ways: first for the preservation of these records, in which is a personal history of the entire Army, a personal history of each soldier in the Army, and it is important also for the facilities it gives in the information constantly being demanded in the other Departments, particularly in the Interior Department in the Bureau of Patents. The committee have become thoroughly satisfied that the public interests imperatively demand that this service should be continued, at least for another year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. There are other amendments from the Committee on Appropriations. On page 4, I move to strike out all after the word "telegraph operator" on line 73, down to and including the word "dollars" in line 75, so as to read "telegraph operator, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. On page 9, line 196, I move to strike out all after "telegraph operator" down to and including the word "Congress" on line 197, and insert "$1,000." That is for the compensation of the telegraph operator on the House side.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. Now on page 4, line 84, I move to strike out "$30,000" as the amount to be appropriated for the clerks of committees of the Senate, and insert "$51,000," which makes it correspond with the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. On page 5, line 96, I move to strike out "$9,576" and insert "$10,350" as the amount to be appropriated for pages for the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. In line 103, after the word "therefor," I move to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$8,000" for the folding of documents, and materials.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have an explanation of these large increases.

Mr. SARGENT. I have one other amendment and then I shall explain. In line 105 I move to increase the appropriation from $15,000 to $30,000 "for miscellaneous articles exclusive of labor."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a good thing to do—do it and explain afterward?

Mr. SARGENT. I will explain. For instance, the House provided that the clerks of committees should not be paid over five dollars a day during the session; that is an increase of fifty cents for the clerks of the House committees and a reduction of two dollars for committee clerks of the Senate. The Senate, for reasons satisfactory to itself, has struck out that legislative provision equalizing the pay, and consequently the amount of the appropriation must be increased to the estimates in order to cover the rate of expenditure. There is no use in coming in with deficiency bills to cover this when the Appropriation Committee is well aware at the time of making the original appropriation that such deficiency will be necessary.

Then, as to the item in regard to the fourteen pages for the Senate Chamber and riding pages at $2.50 a day, $10,350 is substituted for $9,576. This is an increase of nearly $1,000 over the amount appropriated by the House; but the amount of the estimates and the amount of expenditure necessary for the long session require the addition of nearly $1,000.

The same general remark is true in reference to the other items for "fuel, oil, heating-apparatus, furniture and repairs of furniture, for labor, for folding documents, packing-boxes, and miscellaneous articles, exclusive of labor." These items which the committee increase are increased to the amounts in the estimates, and the experience of the Senate shows that these sums are absolutely necessary.

In order to enable the Committee on Appropriations to reduce these items, the Committee on Contingent Expenses must go over these accounts, not only for the purpose of seeing whether the money is honestly expended, which I have no doubt they do regularly, but they must recommend some plan to the Senate by which we can dispense with some laborers or pages whom we employ or have less furniture repaired, or some other method by which we can avoid deficiencies; but, as I remarked before, in the opinion of the committee, it is not well to make an insufficient appropriation under the present system to make it up afterward in a deficiency bill. We have restored these items to the estimates, having given the matter such attention as we could, finding that these amounts were expended at the last long session. I further have an impression, although I do not speak positively about it, that the House, in cutting these items down, did not consider that the next year for which this bill provides is a long instead of a short session. These amounts are necessarily larger for a long session than for a short.

With this general explanation in behalf of the committee, I suppose there will be no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is always an ungracious task to commence upon matters of domestic economy. I suppose every Senator who has a family knows that very well. There was an effort made to reduce the pay of clerks to committees to five dollars a day. Who does not know that five dollars a day is enough for clerks of committees, some of which probably never meet. Three or four committee clerks have an annual salary, and the others have not very onerous duties. The Senate have struck out that clause and restored the compensation to $7.20 a day. It is a small matter, to be sure, but small things count. Here is an appropriation of $12,000 for labor, and we propose to raise it to $18,000. Eighteen thousand dollars is to be spent for labor for the Senate of the United States, a small body of men. I doubt if there is in the world a body of sixty or seventy gentlemen who cost so much for their surroundings as the Senate of the United States, and yet every year these expenses are increasing. I do not want to go into these matters in detail, but I think the Senate owes it to itself to check, if possible, this expenditure of money by the various employés of the Senate. It is a matter that no one cares about going into details in regard to.

The House of Representatives have sent us an appropriation of $12,000 for labor for the Senate. Unless there is some clear testimony that that is insufficient, we ought not to increase it. So as to the amendment at the bottom of page 4, raising the appropriations for clerks of committees. Every committee has a clerk; but many committees never meet, and yet the clerical expense of all is the same, $7.20 a day. In my judgment this is not right. Therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not like to have the committee placed in a wrong position upon this subject. We appropriate now for what we know to be the necessities for these expenditures according to past experience. Unless the law is changed on this particular subject and kindred subjects, or unless the audit and control of the contingent expenses of the Senate be changed, this is our necessity, and if you do not meet it now, you will have to meet it on a deficiency bill next year. It is more manly and wiser to meet it now. The sums which are asked for here are precisely in harmony with the sums we have been expending for years at the long session; and that is the reason they are larger in this year's bill than last; and as certain as anything can be in the future you will be called upon for a deficiency bill if you do not make the appropriation at the present time. We have given this careful consideration. and recommend it upon that principle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 72, after the word "building," in line 1756, I propose to add:

Provided, however, That at the end of the present fiscal year the Postmaster-General be directed, upon the demand of the lessor, to deliver up the possession of said premises.

I will thank the Clerk now to read that clause as it will be if amended as I propose, commencing on line 1752.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For rent of house numbered 915 E street northwest, $2,200: Provided That the above sum shall not be deemed to be paid on account of any lease for years of said building: Provided, however, That at the end of the present fiscal year the Postmaster-General be directed, upon the demand of the lessor, to deliver up the possession of said premises.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. In 1873, the Postmaster-General, in the exercise of an authority which he assumed and which I believe it had been customary to exercise in the Departments, made a contract with a Mr. A. C. Bradley for the rent of the building described in this paragraph of the bill at the rate of $4,200, a year, and he claims that that lease is in full force and effect for a series of years—some three or four years. The committee are of opinion that, according to the usages of that Department and from the fact that the Congress of the United States last year made an appropriation for it, he is not without some show, legal as well as equitable, to have this sum appropriated for him. But the House of Representatives have taken this subject into consideration and come to the conclusion that $4,200 is an excessive sum. They have put it at $2,200, and the committee on the part of the Senate do not perceive that that is unjust in an equitable point of view. But here is the contract nevertheless. Is it fair to hold the building at a lower rate than that which is contemplated by the contract? The committee came to the conclusion that the owner of the building ought to have the option to receive his $2,200, which Congress think is a proper sum, or to reclaim his building at the end of the current year. That is the substance of the amendment. The question, therefore, is upon the proposition to appropriate $2,200, which is a reduction of $2,000 from the contract price, with the option, by the proviso, that the owner at the end of the present fiscal year may reclaim his building.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I would ask the chairman of the committee to whom the house belongs, if the committee is informed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. So far as the evidence before us is concerned the contract is between A. C. Bradley and the late Postmaster-General.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I inquire further whether any members of the committee have visited the premises and whether they know the house?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think the committee are well informed about that.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I have seen the house, and I have also seen the house right alongside of it, which the owner informed me he had offered to the Government at the same time for $1,800 a year, and I think that is nearly double what the house is worth. I undertake to say that you can go into this city almost anywhere and hire such a house for $1,200 a year. I suppose there was no furniture in it; the Government took it naked, and I am sure that houses larger, of greater capacity, and perhaps costing more money, and in streets equally as populous as E street, are under rent to-day, scores of them in this city, for $1,200 a year. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to say that the committee did not consider that they had a right to cut down the contract amount. Did I understand him correctly?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee scarcely passed a judgment upon that. The contract provides for $4,200. If the contract is valid, on which the committee do not feel called upon to pass any opinion, then he is entitled of course to the sum specified in the contract; but we did come to the conclusion that we had a right to terminate that contract.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Then you have the right to cut it down, as I think. I am not a lawyer, and I will not contest that point; but if there is a lease of property at a certain price per annum and the Government has the right to terminate that lease without the consent of the other party, then it has the right to cut it down; and the Government does cut down almost everything that comes before it. In your Claims Committee here it is the rule to cut down.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does my honorable friend understand that we have not cut this down?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I want to cut it down.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have cut it down $2,000.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Now cut it down to what is correct while you are about it.

Mr. PRATT. I inquire of my friend from Texas whether this is the same piece of property that there was a discussion over in the House of Representatives, where it was shown that it had changed hands two or three times perhaps during the last two years at $18,000?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. So I have heard; but I do not know the facts. I do not know about its changing hands, but I understand that when this contract was made or pretty soon afterward, it fell into the hands of Governor Shepherd and was his property. If it is in order, I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting "$1,200."

Mr. SARGENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas is not in order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not germane to the amendment of the Senator from Maine and is not now in order. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas now propose his amendment?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Yes, sir. I move to strike out "$2,200" in line 1753, and insert "$1,200."

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. As we are under the five-minute rule, I have not time perhaps to have this long lease read. I will make a statement of the contents, however.

The Government of the United States through its Postmaster-General, having authority, before that time exercised unquestionably, made a lease of certain premises near the Post-Office building for the use of the Post-Office Department. Great care was used in making the lease. A committee was appointed to examine all the buildings in the neighborhood, and the rent of this building was lower than any other that was offered, although there were three or four offered. When the amount of rent and the character of the building was reported to the late Postmaster-General, he refused to allow the rent which the committee recommended and cut the rent down. The lessor agreed to the lower rent, which was the amount named in the estimate, $4,200 a year, and the Postmaster-General reported the facts to Congress and they are printed in a congressional document, showing the lease, showing the steps taken for the acquisition of the right to use this property by the Government; and the House of Representatives and the Senate, having that information before them, made first an appropriation for the lease in a deficiency bill for the remainder of the fiscal year, and then last year made an appropriation of $4,200 to pay the rent for this present fiscal year; and the estimate came in for the next fiscal year at the same rate. The House of Representatives cut it down by one-half, taking off $2,000; and the question might well have been raised before the Senate whether it is in good conscience for the Government of the United States to declare that, though by its officers a contract has been entered into which contract has been affirmed by two separate acts passed by Congress and signed by the Executive, it has nevertheless the right arbitrarily to violate its portion of the contract and refuse to pay the consideration.

The Committee on Appropriations were willing to consider that perhaps the rent of this building was too high, and so they gave the option to the lessor, by the amendment which has been adopted, if he thought he could make better use of it to resume possession of it at the end of the present fiscal year, up to which time the Government fulfills its contract with him. It seems to me that the principles of equity which would bind between individuals would apply in a case like this between the Government and an individual. We have no right to run over the rights of our citizens, and it makes no difference who the lessor may be or who the assignee of the lease may be.

There was a proposition to rent a building on the corner of Seventh street, opposite the Post-Office, which building is rented out into offices, where each individual office probably rents for somewhere from twenty dollars, the lowest, running up to $100 for a room. This is a large three-story building, and it is used by the Department not as a private family would use a building, but people are continually trampling up and down, a multitude of clerks, and there is necessarily greater defacement of the building than there would be if it was used for private purposes. That for a building so situated and so large and so used, the idea that the original rent was too large I consider absurd; but certainly after you have cut it down one-half, to say that you shall go further and give only one-half of that implies a meanness on the part of Congress, and an injustice that I do not think we ought to be guilty of. I impeach no man's motives for a thing of this kind, but I believe economy should go with justice, strict justice. I believe that citizens of the United States who deal with us have a right to expect justice and equity at our hands; and although there is no particular responsibility for our action, although we are powerful, although we can say that we will not yield them their rights, nevertheless the argument remains just as good that in conscience they have a right to require that we shall fulfill our contracts.

Here is a solemn contract made in all the forms of law by the Post-Office Department, ratified twice by Congress; and the proposition is not merely to violate the contract, but to put it in such form that the lessor himself is absolutely compelled to resume the possession of his property, and is not allowed the benefit of the contract which has been made with him. When the House went so far as to cut down this rent one-half, they went very far indeed. The Committee on Appropriations are willing to assent to that, provided the lessor may be allowed to resume possession of his property; but you had better make no appropriation for it at all, so that there can be no question in reference to the resumption, rather than allow only one-half of the amount which the House of Representatives allowed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I assure the Senator from California that I have no malice about this thing at all. I heard of the matter some months ago, and it struck me as being an enormous price to pay for such a piece of property. I know the property, and I will remind the Senator from California that it is not on the corner of E and Seventh streets or near that corner. It is not where it can be cut up into small offices and rented to patent attorneys and for insurance offices. It is at least two blocks from the Department. It was built for a private dwelling-house, and is not suited for any other purpose in fact; and although it is said to have sold for $18,000, I beg to say that in my opinion it would not sell for $12,000 to-day if it was put on the block. It may have sold for $18,000 in trade or exchange for something else that was put at an inflated price. But inasmuch as it is understood that it has sold for that, and that that is its value, I will modify my amendment by putting it at $1,800 instead of $1,200. That will be 10 per cent. per annum upon the value of the property as it is stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas modifies his amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. Of course I have no right to question the Senator's motives though he seemed to think I did. When he asked the question, who this person was, it seemed to me that there might possibly be some personality about it. Of course, the fact is known which the Senator by a question desired to draw out and which the chairman did not answer, that the present owner of this building is Alexander R. Shepherd. I do not suppose the Government has any right to take from Alexander R. Shepherd his rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is exhausted on the part of the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. I inadvertently spoke of "Seventh street" instead of "Ninth."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose that the Senator from California would hardly contend that if this lease were a fraudulent and dishonest one, Congress would be bound to carry it out. Certainly we might refuse to pay the money, and that would give the lessor a legal right to sue us in the Court of Claims, because it is of a class of claims that falls within the statute creating the Court of Claims, and each party would stand an equal chance to try the question as to the regularity, the legality, and the honesty of this lease of these premises. There cannot be any dispute about that.

Mr. SARGENT. I think he has his remedy in the Court of Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly; and I take it it will be agreed by the Senator from California that if the Postmaster-General or any agent of the United States exceeded his authority in undertaking to make a lease for years of property, we should not be bound to perform the covenants in the lease for the payment of rent. That would be very clear. The agent cannot bind his principal beyond his authority. Then if the United States occupied the property, so long as it did occupy the property it would be bound to pay as tenant at will for the use and occupation at what should be found by the court that heard the testimony to be a just and fair price. So there is no danger of doing any injustice to any person except it might be a very poor person by driving him to a lawsuit if Congress feels that there has been an exorbitant and most extraordinary rent promised for this house. If we cut down the sum we are willing to pay for it, it will not interfere with the legal rights of the people on the other side. If, on the other hand, we are all satisfied from what we know that this was a regular, fair transaction, reasonable as things go in Washington—it would not be very reasonable anywhere else, but that does not prevent its being reasonable here, as we all know—then of course we ought to appropriate the full sum of money. From all that has been said about this, it strikes me that it is rather due to the gentlemen who have owned this property and who own it now that we should put ourselves in an attitude of opposition to the payment of this money, that they may vindicate their good faith and the fairness and honesty of this transaction by compelling us to pay, as they can, the rent that has been agreed; for if the Postmaster-General was authorized to make this lease by law, and entered into it honestly with the other party, even if the rent is exorbitant, we have got to stand it. But if he was not authorized, or if it was a contrivance, (of which I have no evidence and of course about which I therefore do not speak,) then we are not bound to pay. I shall vote therefore for the amendment of the Senator from Texas, partly for the purpose of giving the people on the other side who have been assailed about this business an opportunity to set themselves right, if they think it worth while.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no disposition to prolong this debate or to say anything in regard to the matter, further than to put the Senate in possession of the facts. Here is a contract providing for $4,200 a year, for three or four years, for a certain building. Whether that is excessive or not, the committee are not well informed; it is quite impossible that they should be; but there are some presumptions in the case which favor the appropriation as it now stands, and there is no presumption of unfair dealing in the case, which my honorable friend from Vermont seems to hint at. Possibly——

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator say I hinted at?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That in this was a fraudulent transaction. There are no presumptions and no facts which authorize us to suppose that there is anything of that kind in the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I stated that I had no evidence of that at all, and therefore had no ground to suppose it to be so; but I said it had been so stated, as we have known in other things, that there was something wrong about it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. So I say we are not acting upon the presumption, nor are we authorized to act on the presumption, that there is any unfair dealing about this in any way whatever. If there was anything about it which could be presumed, it would be possibly that the Postmaster-General had made a mistake as to the price paid for the property; but is it reasonable to suppose that he made a mistake of more than $2,000 a year? Is it reasonable to suppose also that the House of Representatives, in considering this case, had no evidence upon the subject whatever? They intended to put it at $2,000, and having put it at $2,000, is not the presumption rather in favor of the supposition that the House of Representatives had some information on the subject which enabled them to fix it at $2,000? Now, I say, considering the fact that there is a contract of $4,200, and that it is cut down to $2,000, are there not some presumptions in this case which justify us in assuming that whoever is the owner of this property is entitled to at least the sum we give him here? The committee took that view of it. Following these presumptions, without any definite information upon the subject, the committee, on the whole, thought it prudent to recommend concurrence with the action of the House, putting on a proviso that if the party owning the property is injured by this action of Congress he may repossess himself of the property on the 1st day of July next. I think under these circumstances that the Senate ought to concur. Still, I have not the slightest feeling on the subject.

Mr. PRATT. If it is proper for the Senate to break in upon that contract at all and reduce the rent from $4,200 to $2,200, it is right to reduce it still lower, to the sum proposed by the Senator from Texas, if we are satisfied that that is a just and reasonable rent. I am not here for the purpose of offering myself as a witness, but I chance to live upon this street, (E street,) in a house about the same distance from the Post-Office Department that this building is represented to be. I understand it stands upon the corner of Ninth and E streets. From what has been said of the dimensions of this house, and that it was built as a private residence, I have no hesitation in saying that property equally valuable could have been rented at any day and is now rented at from $1,400 to $1,600—property equally eligible with this. Eighteen hundred dollars is 10 per cent. upon the amount at which I understand this property has been transferred two or three times. I shall, therefore, heartily support the amendment of my friend from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. WEST. Let the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is on page 72, line 1753, to strike out "$2,200" and insert "$1,800;" so as to read:

For rent of house numbered 915 E street, northwest, $1,800.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Pratt, Robertson, Schurz, Stevenson, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Conkling, Dorsey, Flanagan, Gilbert, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Patterson, Sargent, and Windom—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boreman, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Oglesby, Pease, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and West—35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On page 51, in the appropriations for the office of the Quartermaster-General, after the word "dollars," in line 1232, I move to insert "one draughtsman, at $1,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no further amendments to offer.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to have the amendment which I offered day before yesterday read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is on page 40, after line 983, to insert:

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:
For assayer in charge, $1,800; melter, $1,500; wages of workmen, $600; contingent expenses, $1,500; in all, $5,400.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. RANSOM. I will not detain the Senate one minute on this matter. I have discussed it twice before in the Senate, and each time it has been passed unanimously. I trust the committee will not oppose it, and I am very well satisfied they will not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senator whether his amendment is recommended by any authority?

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, sir; I showed the Senator from Maine the authority.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to have it read, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. RANSOM. There is a telegram from the Director of the Mint, which I have not now with me, in which he says the same reasons apply to this appropriation that apply to the appropriation which the committee have adopted. I took the liberty of showing that telegram to the Senator from Maine the other day, and also to the Senator from California.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I remember that, but I always like to be justified by the record. I do not rise to oppose the amendment, but to submit the question to the Senate. It is true it is estimated for; but the bill did not come to the Senate with that particular branch of the service appropriated for, and the Senate committee, having no information on the subject of its absolute necessity, of course did not amend the bill in that particular. The Senator from North Carolina called my attention to the fact, and did show me the recommendation of the Director of the Mint. That is all very well so far as it goes, and I am perfectly willing that the subject should be submitted to the Senate. As it did not come to the action of the committee, of course I submit it to the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. On page 11, after line 241, I move to insert the following:

It shall be lawful for the Congressional Printer to print and deliver, upon the order of any Senator, or member of the House of Representatives, or Delegate, extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the person ordering the same paying the cost thereof.

I propose this amendment for the convenience of members of both Houses. Some doubt has arisen in the mind of the Congressional Printer about his right to print speeches. I think there is no doubt about it; but at the same time I think he is to be respected for desiring to obey the law in its strictest sense, and it is to leave no doubt on the subject that I offer the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I offer an amendment. On page 33 I move to strike out from line 797 to line 805 inclusive, and insert—

Office of assistant treasurer at Charleston, South Carolina:
For assistant treasurer, $4,000; one clerk, $1,800; one clerk, $1,600; one assistant messenger, $720; and two watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $9,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to a provision of the bill on page 67 providing that the business of the office of the surveyor-general of Kansas shall be discontinued on or before the 30th day of June, 1876. Can I get the attention of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I did not hear the remark of the Senator.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to have the bill amended by striking out on page 67 the clause which provides for the discontinuance of the office of the surveyor-general of Kansas on or before the 30th day of June, 1876. The business of that office is in such a condition that it will be impossible to close it up and discontinue the office at that time without very serious detriment to the interests of the public. It is true that the field-work in that State has been completed, but a very large proportion of the public land still continues in that portion of the State where counties are not organized, where it will be necessary to have a general land office for the transaction of business connected with the public domain; and believing it to be impossible to close the office at that time I trust the chairman will allow the amendment I have suggested be made, leaving the question of the discontinuance of that office to such a time in the future as may be thought best for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think this same legislation we have had two or three years, the expectation having been each year that the next one certainly would close it. I would suggest to the Senator that if it should turn out at the next session of Congress that it is not likely to be closed at the end of that year, then we shall meet the same thing next year that we have undoubtedly met the last few years.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the object of putting into the bill this provision at the present time?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is in the hope that it will be closed within that period, and the committee have a sort of lively expectation that it may be so from the fact that it has been asserted for the last two or three years that one year more would likely close it out.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that legislation based on what he terms "lively expectation" is hardly appropriate. It seems to me it would be better to leave the subject until that time, and then if the public interests require this legislation to have it made at that time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the committee are obliged, my honorable friend will see, to entertain some sort of confidence in the statements that are made to us from certain sources, and although we ought not to be very lively about it, still we do really put some confidence in the statements which are made to us. The belief has been, as I am certain, for two or three years that the business might be closed up there and would be closed up probably within the coming fiscal year; and with that understanding it has been made the subject of appropriation for two or three years. The hope is still entertained that it will be closed before 1876; but if it should turn out that it should not be closed, then it would be a very easy thing to bring this in next year, and it will come in the estimates as sure as the day comes. My honorable friend may rely on that; so that there will be no slip about it. The officers having charge of this subject will be certain to estimate for it next year and it will be called to the attention of Congress. Therefore no harm can come of allowing this provision to be retained.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not have the same provision in regard to the other officers named in the section? Does not the same lively expectation exist that business there will some time discontinue?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir. This is an office which, by common consent, as I understand, is not likely to continue. Still it is not very material, if the Senator is greatly desirous about it.

Mr. INGALLS. I should very much prefer that the proviso be stricken out, because under the statement made by the chairman of the committee the legislation can have no practical effect, for, as he says, if the necessity then exists for the continuance of the office, provision will be made for it. I would suggest that no harm can be done by striking it out. I move to strike out after "dollars," in line 1646, page 67, the following words:

And the business of said office shall be settled, and the office shall be closed and discontinued, on or before the 30th day of June, 1876.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. On page 51, line 1248, in the items for the office of the Commissary-General, I move to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses, namely, office rent, repairs, and miscellaneous items," from $7,000 to $8,000. The Commissary-General's Department had intrusted this amendment to my care. Owing to my occupation on other committees, I was not able to attend the sessions of the Committee on Appropriations, nor was I here when the bill was read at that point. The total amount appropriated for the contingent expenses of this office is $7,000, and it is alleged that it is totally inadequate. This amount embraces $4,000 rent, the coal and fuel of the office, and all the stationery that may be necessary, and they have been hitherto scarcely able to keep themselves warm or properly lighted in that building with $7,000. They ask that the amount be raised to $8,000. I think the amendment out of order possibly, but I hope the chairman will not raise that point. I move to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$8,000."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hardly think we ought to allow that. I know there was an application for an increase of clerks, but it did not come to my knowledge that there was any special necessity for that increase.

Mr. WEST. The Commissary Department made to me three applications; one to raise this amount to $8,000, one for two additional clerks, and one for $250 compensation to the superintendent of the building. I cannot find it proper to recommend two of those propositions, and I recommend simply this one. I will stop there, and hope the chairman will not object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be put on concurring in gross in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, unless those that may be reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to reserve the amendment relative to striking out the second section.

Mr. PRATT. I beg to inquire whether any reservation has been made on page 60 striking out the provision for a chief clerk in the General Land Office and inserting a provision for a law clerk at a salary of $2,000?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can reserve that amendment if he desires.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to have it reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved. If no other reservations be made, with these two exceptions, the question will be on concurring in the amendments in gross.

The unexcepted amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first reserved amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Iowa shall be held at the times and places now provided by law for holding the United States district court in and for said district; but the circuit judge shall not be required to sit in said court except at Des Moines. Causes removed from any court in the State of Iowa into the circuit court of the United States within said district shall be removed to the nearest circuit court, unless the parties thereto shall otherwise agree: Provided, That all appeals or writs of error allowed by law from the district court to the circuit court for Iowa shall be taken to the circuit court at Des Moines, to be heard by said court when held by one or more circuit judges: And provided further, That the judge of the district court for said district of Iowa may in his discretion order that the same jurors be summoned to serve in the circuit and district courts when held at the same time and place and at a place other than Des Moines.

Mr. WRIGHT. It will be remembered that yesterday the Senate in committee of the Whole refused to concur in the action of the Committee on Appropriations, that committee having recommended the striking out of the second section of the bill. I said nothing about it at the time for the reason that I confess I supposed, in view of the opposition of the chairman of the committee to the measure, as being legislation on an appropriation bill, that it was not probable that it could pass; that is, that it was not probable that the Senate would refuse to concur in the recommendation of the committee. As the bill is in the Senate, inasmuch as I have not such information on the subject as I desire at present, and inasmuch also as the same question is before the Judiciary Committee in another form, and can be presented in another form as well by a bill, I ask that the Senate shall pro forma concur in the action of the Committee on Appropriations, and strike out this section. Then the matter will be between the two Houses, and in the mean time I can get such information as I desire, and either this section be permitted to stand or a new bill substantially the same as this section be passed, or such amendments as may be agreed on by my colleague and myself can be put in place of this section in a new bill. I think to this there will be no objection, and the point will be equally satisfactory to both of us.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the request of my colleague that the amendment be agreed to pro forma, provided it remains in such form in the bill that it can be adjusted between the two Houses. I understand that is the effect of his proposition, so that the Senate and the House will still maintain control of this matter. I deem it of such vital importance that I do not wish it to be out of the bill in such a manner that we cannot control it. Of course I desire to accommodate my colleague in perfecting such a measure as will be satisfactory to both of us.

Mr. WRIGHT. Of course it will be entirely under the control of the two Houses when that shall be done. I trust, therefore, my proposition to strike out this section will be concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is the question on concurring in the Senate with the action of the Senate in Committee of the Whole on the adoption of this section?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; it is simply a motion to strike out.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suppose, the Senate in Committee of the Whole having refused to concur in the recommendation of the committee, that section remains in the bill at present. Therefore I move to amend the bill by striking it out.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not necessary to put that motion. I understand it goes out pro forma, but still it is in the control of the two Houses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It cannot go out without a motion and a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on non-concurring in the vote of the Committee of the Whole retaining the second section.

The vote was non-concurred in.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment which strikes out of the appropriation bill the provision for a chief clerk in the General Land Office at a compensation of $2,000, and which provides for a law clerk at $2,000 in lieu of it. It looks very much as if this was directed towards a particular clerk in that Bureau. Its effect will be to strike down a very worthy and a very competent gentleman, who has been an attaché of that Bureau for the last fourteen years, and I venture to say that the Government has had no more faithful or efficient servant in its employment. I know the gentleman well. He was placed there upon the recommendation of a gentleman who for four years presided over this body, who was his personal friend. He is now somewhat advanced in years, and it would be very cruel indeed by this stroke of legislation to disgrace him by striking out his office and substituting in place of it a law clerk.

What sort of a law clerk is the Government likely to have at a compensation of $2,000 a year, which is but a very little above the compensation which the law provides for a fourth class clerk? What need has this Bureau of a law clerk anyhow? The Interior Department has its solicitor, its law adviser. Why should the Land Office have another, and of such low grade too of legal knowledge as $2,000 a year will pay for? I dare say it will be a very comfortable position for some young gentleman who wishes to read Blackstone's Commentaries or to attend law lectures during the winter in Washington to have the position of law clerk in the Land Office. It will be a very nice opportunity to acquire legal information, and a very low grade of legal information would meet the requisitions of this amendment, it being for a law clerk at $2,000 a year.

I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not concur in this amendment and strike down a veteran in the service, one, as I said before, who owed his position originally to the friendship and confidence of the late Vice-President of the United States. I should be glad to hear some good reason why the office that is now filled by Mr. Heaton should be abolished, and why another office is created by this amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator asked two questions: first, why the office is abolished. If the Senator will turn to the bill, he will find that this principal clerk and some other clerks named have their duties confined to bounty-land warrants, a businss which is nearly wound up in the Land Office, and there is no necessity for the services of this person in that place, especially at that high price. At the time the office was originally created there was an immense amount of that kind of business, which has been largely finished, so that there is no further need of it.

Now, one word further in that connection. If it is the policy of the law to make a kind of civil list and keep persons on it simply because they have been kept on heretofore, that would override the consideration of there being no necessity for the services of the person. If $2,000 should be paid out because the man has been a faithful servant, and that is in the nature of a civil list, of course that is an argument against which the consideration that his services in this capacity are not needed would not prevail. But it seems to me that that is not the policy of the Government; that these public officers are kept for the efficient performance of duty and are not kept up unless there is duty to be performed. We have the authority of the Land Office for saying that there is no necessity for the continuance of that place.

Now, as to the necessity of the other person, the Land Office has to pass first upon the legal questions that the Interior Department subsequently passes upon. All questions with regard to homesteads, with regard to mining claims, with regard to surveys of Spanish ranches, with regard to conflicting claims of individuals, are argued, and argued by acute lawyers, before the Land Office, and from the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is in writing, an appeal is taken to the Secretary of the Interior, and there the matter is reargued. In order to prepare the case properly, it is necessary to have more than an ordinary clerk, a clerk of some legal training, in preparing the papers and suggesting the legal points for the decision. The Commissioner of the Land Office deems that he needs this officer. The Senator sneers at the salary paid. Very well; I think the salary is too small. I would rather make it $3,000, which I suppose would secure the services of a fair lawyer; but I do not think that the person who will fill this place will have much time, during office hours at any rate, to study Blackstone or to attend lectures. It will necessarily be a very laborious place if the duties are performed. The Commissioner of the Land Office informs the committee that he finds a constant necessity for this officer, and asks that this provision may be made. If my friend's feelings are excited in favor of the other person on the ground that he was appointed at the instance of a Vice-President, and is a very worthy man, who has served for many years, let him induce the Senate to disagree with the amendment on the next page, which refers to that office; but the place of law clerk is absolutely necessary to enable the Commissioner of the Land Office to discharge his duties.

Senators may not be aware of the enormous increase of business before the Commissioner of the Land Office. It comes in from all directions. Every time you liberalize the pre-emption laws, every time you make a change in them, and every time that you increase the appropriations for surveys of public lands you bring a mass of business in upon the Land Office which has to be attended to; and I am sorry to say that the business of the office in some particulars, notwithstanding the most strenuous efforts which have been made, is two or three years behind time. This business must be brought up, and it needs some sort of additional apparatus to assist the Land Office. If my friend thinks $2,000 is too small a salary, I trust he will submit an amendment, and I will vote for it, to increase this salary to $3,000; but as the committee had some evidence, and as the Commissioner thought he could get a man who would be of sufficient ability at that salary, we put it in that shape. If we cannot, there is just as much necessity to have a person to make legal suggestions, to point out the salient points in a case, and direct the attention of the Commissioner to testimony and the merits of the case to be decided on, as that we should have such an office. Indeed, there is greater necessity for it. The Commissioner of the Land Office has to decide upon all cases, and the Secretary of the Interior only on selected cases which are appealed. I think this assistance is required and ought to be given to this officer. In regard to the other person, I simply urge the point that the place can be dispensed with in the judgment of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. PRATT. What I rose to inquire of the honorable Senator from California was, whether there is not already a law officer attached to the Department of the Interior to whom all these questions may be referred?

Mr. SARGENT. Not by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The Solicitor of the Interior Department is the adviser of the Secretary, and acts only in cases of appeal. The Senator will see that that must be so, because if this Solicitor could dictate or influence the decision of a case before the Commissioner, an appeal to the Secretary would be perfectly nugatory, because it would be submitted again to the same individual.

Mr. PRATT. I inquire further whether it has not been heretofore the special duty of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior to act as the law-adviser of the head of the Department, whether difficult questions growing out of our public land system have not heretofore been considered and decided by him?

Mr. SARGENT. In the Interior Department?

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. The Secretary of the Interior has his staff of course, but the Commissioner of the General Land Office is an officer from whom appeals are taken to the Secretary of the Interior. The staff of the Secretary of the Interior is no assistance to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and he needs this legal assistance. Of course it is humble. We are not coming in here and asking for a high-priced officer, but he thinks this will be of great advantage to him in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you any written report on the subject?

Mr. SARGENT. No; but the Commissioner was before us and was examined in reference to that matter.

Mr. PRATT. It is a little remarkable that this Bureau has been able to get along so many years and make a great many very important decisions without a law adviser; but we are advertised now at this late day that it will be impossible for the Bureau to discharge its duties to the public without attaching a law clerk at a compensation of $2,000 a year.

Mr. SARGENT. That same remark would apply in any Department wherever we add an additional officer, which we sometimes do, that they have got along up to this time, and so they can get along with the old force. I do not say it is impossible to discharge the duties of this office without this additional officer, but I say this is necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of the office.

Mr. PRATT. If it is necessary, I have no objection of course to the addition of one clerk to this Bureau. What I am objecting to is the striking out of the office of chief clerk, that is nearly as old as the Bureau itself, and making no provision for an equivalent officer. I believe every Bureau in all the Departments has its chief clerk. Then, why be guilty of the anomaly of depriving the Commissioner of the General Land Office of a chief clerk?

Mr. SARGENT. We do not. The Senator will find the chief clerk provided for on line 1470: "for chief clerk of the General Land Office, $2,000." We do not deprive the Commissioner of his chief clerk.

Mr. PRATT. Did not the Senate when in Committee of the Whole strike out this provision in line 1470, on page 60: "chief clerk, $2,000?"

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir.

Mr. PRATT. I understood from reading the RECORD that there was an amendment adopted to this bill in Committee of the Whole, striking out these words: "chief clerk, $2,000."

Mr. SARGENT. On line 1480 the Senator will find "also for additional clerks on account of military bounty land, namely, for principal clerk, $2,000." The clause "principal clerk, $2,000," was struck out. That is simply a principal clerk relating to military bounty lands, which are now pretty nearly closed up, and it is about time that force was discharged, and we have made a commencement.

Mr. PRATT. Then I was mistaken as to the amendment which was adopted yesterday, which was in line 1481, to strike out "principal clerk, $2,000," I am now told.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; and it has no reference to the chief clerk of the Land Office Bureau.

Mr. PRATT. If the case be as stated by the Senator from California, why should the committee not have stricken out what follows after the principal clerk of bounty-land warrants: "One clerk of class three, four clerks of class two, thirty-five clerks of class one, and two laborers?"

If the business is so nearly wound up, why not strike out this provision, and who is to be the head of this little coterie of clerks if the principal clerk is stricken out?

Mr. SARGENT. The "principal clerk" is not the head in that sense at all. The others do not report to him in any way. The Commissioner of the Land Office is the head. Whether this force can be properly reduced or not will be a question. So far as any evidence before the committee is concerned, it cannot be. If the Senator has any information on that matter he can submit an amendment.

Mr. PRATT. Then I would submit that we strike out one or two of the thirty-five clerks of class one, instead of striking out the principal clerk whose compensation is $2,000. I hope that amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the pending question. The pending question, I believe, is on concurring with the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole in line 1471. I wish to say a word on that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to be the question before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know but that additional force is needed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but I submit to the Committee on Appropriations that the person ought not to be called "a law clerk," whatever we may be employed to do.

Mr. SARGENT. There may be something in that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you put that into this sub-office this year, you will find that in every other Bureau, in every other Department, some one person in it will want to be turned into a law clerk next year. As the laws are now, all are arranged. Each Department has an Assistant Attorney-General. The Department of the Interior has. These assistants all belong to the Department of Justice so as to have some harmony and uniformity. There is not so much now as there ought to be by any means, but that is the theory and that is the law. Now, the Assistant Attorney-General, or whatever he is called, in the Interior Department is just as much bound to give an opinion, whenever he is required to do so, in aid of the General Land Office as he is in aid of any of the other operations of the Interior Department. Whenever a difficulty arises, the Commissioner may send to him, and he does often, I have no doubt. But if you set up this person as a law clerk per se and by name, you will introduce confusion into the proper responsibility in that Department for the decisions upon law matters in the first place, and in the next place we shall have a swarm on the appropriation bill next year, everybody pressing the committee to make him into a law clerk. Therefore I suggest to the committee to strike out the word "law" and say "one clerk."

Mr. SARGENT. Perhaps that would be better.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to it in that shape. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "law" and inserting "one," so as to read "one clerk, $2,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. PRATT. The amendment which I should have reserved is in line 1481, striking out "for principal clerk, $2,000." My remarks should have been applicable to that amendment made by the committee. I hope that amendment will not be concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment indicated by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PRATT.]

Mr. MORTON. I understand from the statement of my colleague that amendment proposes to turn out an old and efficient clerk whose services I believe have been satisfactory. I have known him many years. It looks to me very much like special legislation. If his services are not needed upon the particular labor that he is now employed upon, they could be directed to some other kind of labor in the same Department; but it seems to me that it is not precisely the proper thing to get clear of a clerk in that way; a man who has been here some fourteen years, who came in I think in about the prime of life, and is now getting to be something of an old man, leaving those who have come in since to remain there while he is in this way to be turned out of office. I hope the amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. SARGENT. It is very difficult to resist an appeal like that, especially in behalf of an old man. I can only say again that we are informed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the office in question is not necessary, and that the person is not competent on account of age to discharge other duties. On that bare statement, which is all I have to oppose to the appeal of the Senators on behalf of their friend, I submit the matter to the consideration of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment, made as in Committee of the Whole, in line 1481.

The question being put a division was called for, and the ayes were 13——

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. The yeas and nays being called for upon this question, I should like to understand one part of the statement of the Senator from California which I did not understand. Does the Senator say that the Commissioner of the General Land Office declares that the present services of the person to whom the Senators from Indiana have alluded are not satisfactory and that this change is needed to enable him to supply the required service?

Mr. SARGENT. Of course it is unpleasant to make such a statement. I have just stated it as clearly as I thought it necessary. I am free to restate it. I only referred to it to justify the action of the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. When we are called to vote upon the yeas and nays, the consideration on the one side being sympathy and on the other side a supposed duty, it becomes necessary to know what the fact is.

Mr. SARGENT. I made that statement.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Conkling, Davis, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Stevenson, Washburn, West, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Cragin, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Logan, Mitchell, Morton, Pratt, Schurz, Spencer, Tipton, and Windom—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Dennis, Edmunds, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Oglesby, Pease, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Scott, Sprague, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and Wadleigh—35.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4163) to provide an appropriation for continuing the construction of the post-office and custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri.

A bill (H. R. No. 4450) to incorporate the Potomac and Mount Pleasant Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

BILL BECOME A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the bill (S. No. 433) for the relief of Mrs. Susan A. Shelby, having been received by the President on the 7th of January and not having been returned within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had become a law without his approval.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to take up what is known as the fortification bill—House bill No. 3823.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3823) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS. A word or two in explanation of the bill. The average amount for the last five years appropriated by the fortification bill has been about a million and a half. Last year the bill appropriated about $900,000. The present bill appropriates $850,000. We have about sixty-five hundred miles of coast, about one hundred fortifications, one-third of which are provided for in the bill. The appropriation this year is less than any year since the beginning of the war. I think it unnecessary to discuss the bill, as the appropriation is so much reduced from former years that there can hardly be any objection to it.

An amendment was reported by the Committee on Appropriations, in line 53, to strike out "Jefferson, Garden Key," and insert "Taylor and batteries, Key West;" so as to make the item read:

Fort Taylor and batteries, Key West, Florida, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. SPRAGUE, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 1760) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain, reported with amendments on the 5th of June last, be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3911) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 211 and 212, to strike out from the consulates of class 6—

Fejee Islands:
Ovalan.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is provided for elsewhere in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 220, to strike out "Madagascar and," before "San Juan del Norte," from the list of commercial agencies, schedule C.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The reason for that is that that consulate is provided for elsewhere in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 252, to increase the total amount appropriated "for allowance for clerks at consulates" from "$49,500" to "$51,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The last amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was after line 285, to insert:

For salaries and expenses of United States and Mexican claims commission: For commissioner, $4,500; for agent, $4,000; for secretary, $2,500; for umpire, $3,000; legal assistant to agent, $3,000; two translators, at $1,500 each; two clerks, at $1,400 each; one messenger, $600; one assistant messenger, $300; and for contingent expenses, $5,000; making in all the sum of $28,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4163) to provide an appropriation for continuing the construction of the post-office and custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and

The bill (H. R. No. 4450) to incorporate the Potomac and Mount Pleasant Railroad Company, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the proposition reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections for an amendment to the Constitution in regard to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am inclined to yield to the Senator from Indiana and will support his motion, but after that matter is disposed of I give notice to the Senate that I shall claim the floor for the consideration of the Louisiana question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) proposing an amendment to the Constitution prescribing the manner of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORTON. I ask that the proposition reported by the committee be read in full.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution, to wit:

ARTICLE —.

1. The President and Vice-President shall be elected by the direct vote of the people in the manner following: Each State shall be divided into districts, equal in number to the number of Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress, to be composed of contiguous territory, and to be as nearly equal in population as may be; and the person having the highest number of votes in each district for President shall receive the vote of that district, which shall count one presidential vote.

2. The person having the highest number of votes for President in a State shall receive two presidential votes from the State at large.

3. The person having the highest number of presidential votes in the United States shall be President.

4. If two persons have the same number of votes in any State, it being the highest number, they shall receive each one presidential vote from the State at large; and if more than two persons shall have each the same number of votes in any State, it being the highest number, no presidential vote shall be counted from the State at large. If more persons than one shall have the same number of votes, it being the highest number in any district, no presidential vote shall be counted from that district.

5. The foregoing provisions shall apply to the election of Vice-President.

6. The Congress shall have power to provide for holding and conducting the elections of President and Vice-President, and to establish tribunals for the decision of such elections as may be contested.

7. The States shall be divided into districts by the Legislatures thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter the same.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I take it the Senator from Indiana would hardly feel disposed to go on at this late hour, and with his permission I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and thirty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 20, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4454) to revive and continue in force section 4 of the act entitled "An act to enforce the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1871; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AFFAIRS AT VICKSBURGH, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption at the present time the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House by what authority the courts, or the officers thereof, of the State of Mississippi at Vicksburgh, have been interfered with by the Army of the United States, and also to report all orders in relation to said military interference.

Mr. DAWES. I have a question which I desire to submit to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN?]

Mr. HURLBUT. I object to the resolution in its present form.

Mr. RANDALL. In what form would the gentleman have it?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think there would be no objection to my resolution, if I could have an opportunity to make an explanation of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at some subsequent time.

CONTUMACIOUS WITNESS—RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Mr. DAWES. I have a communication from Richard B. Irwin, addressed to the Speaker, which I desire to lay before the House, and when it has been read, to offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 20, 1875.

SIR: The time having now arrived when, without breach of confidence, I can answer the questions heretofore propounded to me at the bar of the House on the 6th instant, and by the Committee on Ways and Means on the same and previous days, I most respectfully state that I am ready so to answer whenever it shall please the House of Representatives to order, that I may thereby be purged of my alleged contempt and released from the custody in which I have been held since the 8th day of December, 1874, no provision now existing for such release.

And in most respectfully asking your honorable House so to order, I further state my readiness to answer any other questions that may be lawfully put to me by the Committee on Ways and Means.

I am now, and have been since Tuesday, the 12th instant, suffering from malarial fever produced by my confinement in this place, which disease is increasing and will shortly, in my opinion, run into a renewal of the typhomalarial fever from which I suffered for the three years immediately following the campaign in Louisiana in 1863. It is impossible for me to recover in these quarters; and unless soon released, my testimony will be lost forever.

Being held under the order of the House, I feel it due to the House itself that this communication be addressed to the Speaker; but to avoid any appearance of disrespect for the Committee on Ways and Means, I have handed a copy to the chairman.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, on which I call the previous question:

Whereas, on the 6th instant, Richard B. Irwin was adjudged to be in contempt of this House for refusing to answer a certain question or questions propounded to him at the bar of the House and by the Committee on Ways and Means; and whereas the House did thereupon order the commitment of said Irwin to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms in the common jail of the District of Columbia to abide the further order of this House; and whereas the said Irwin has this day stated in writing to the Speaker that he is ready to answer the question or questions which he has heretofore refused to answer and others that may be lawfully put to him: Therefore,

Resolved, That so much of the resolution of January 6 as requires the Sergeant-at-Arms to keep the said Irwin in the District jail be, and the same is hereby, rescinded, and that upon answering the said question or questions the said Irwin shall be discharged from the custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. RANDALL. Should not the resolution say, "or any other question?"

Mr. DAWES. I do not think we can hold the witness in advance for other questions.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL DISTRIBUTION OF SEED.

Mr. CROUNSE. I again renew my request for unanimous consent to take from the Committee of the Whole the bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seed.

Mr. BURROWS. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SENER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] to allow me to ask unanimous consent to put a bill on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SENER] demands the regular order.

Mr. DAWES. There is a little unfinished contempt, I believe.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that the witness in contempt is not now here. I appeal to the gentleman from Virginia to allow the passage of this bill, which is to make an immediate appropriation for the work on the Saint Louis public buildings. The amount of this appropriation is to come out of the annual appropriation in the regular bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. Is not the unfinished business the first thing in order?

The SPEAKER. To what does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BURCHARD. To the motion to postpone the consideration of the resolution in regard to a recusant witness.

The SPEAKER. If the witness in contempt were present, the House could proceed; but it cannot proceed without the presence of the witness.

Mr. BURCHARD. But there was a preliminary motion under consideration.

The SPEAKER. It was understood that the adoption of the motion to adjourn was tantamount to carrying the postponement. The gentleman from Virginia has called for the regular order. Does he withdraw the call for the present.

Mr. SENER. I do, for the present.

CHARLES C. CAMPBELL.

Mr. BOWEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4455) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Appropriations for consideration now the bill (H. R. No. 4163) to provide an appropriation for continuing the construction of the post-office and custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri.

The bill was read. It appropriates $150,000, to be available immediately, for the purpose of continuing the construction of the custom-house and post-office at Saint Louis, Missouri, now in course of erection.

Mr. GARFIELD. In explanation of this matter, I submit a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury and two letters from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust those letters will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 7, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a communication from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, recommending an appropriation of $150,000 for the continuation of the construction of the United States custom-house, court-house, and post-office building at Saint Louis, Missouri, to be made immediately available, said sum to be deducted from the amount estimated for that service for the coming fiscal year for that building, namely, $750,000, with the recommendation that the appropriation may be made at the earliest moment practicable.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT, January 7, 1875.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the condition of the work upon the construction of the United States custom-house, court-house, and post-office building at Saint Louis, Missouri. The cost of the building and site was limited by act of Congress dated March 3, 1873, (Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 524,) to $4,000,000, and the total amount appropriated to date is $2,550,000, of which $372,638.25 was expended in the purchase of the site, and $2,171,021.47 has been expended in the construction of the building, and the balance remaining in the Treasury is but $6,340.28. The work is entirely suspended for want of funds, and as the contingent services are continued, and the machinery, &c., deteriorating on account of not being used, I deem it for the best interests of the public service that an appropriation of $150,000 be obtained and made available immediately for the prosecution of the work, said sum to be deducted from the amount ($750,000) estimated as required for the service for the next fiscal year.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. POTTER,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in addition, that the committee required a further statement, to show why the whole sum had been used up so early in the year, and in reply received a communication from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department which I will not trouble the House by reading, but by unanimous consent append to my remarks in the RECORD, showing the peculiar nature of the ground demanded hands should be put to work night and day in order to prevent the caving in of and injury to adjoining property. The committee considered that sufficient reason for the action taken. We propose to cut down the regular appropriation by this amount, and this is only in anticipation.

The communication referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SUPERVISING ARCHITECT, January 13, 1875.

SIR: In reply to your telegram of the 11th instant, asking information as to "The cause or emergency which has occasioned the rapid exhaustion of the appropriation made last session" for the continuation of work upon the new custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri, I have the honor to state that between the 30th of June last and the 30th of November there was expended at the building $440,000, and at Hurricane Island, for granite stock and cutting of the same $325,000, making a total expenditure since that date of $765,000, which exhausted the balance then remaining on hand and nearly all of the appropriation made at the last session.

On the 30th of November there remained in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation $144,000, nearly all of which amount has since been expended for liabilities heretofore created and for the prosecution of the work during the month of December.

The large expenditure at the site of the building has been occasioned by unforseen emergencies. The workmen came upon beds of quicksands, which increased the quantity of excavation three or fourfold, and the foundations were at last obtained only by sinking heavy thirty-foot piles in very close proximity to each other over nearly the entire surface. The work had to be prosecuted with unusual vigor and at great disadvantage in order to accomplish it at all; and that it might be pushed along as rapidly as possible, so as to prevent accident to life and adjoining property, the superintendent employed two full sets of men, working one of them by day, and the other at night with the aid of calcium lights. Upon this subject he says, in a letter dated January 9:

"The exigencies of the work required me to place upon the building the greatest number of men I could possibly with profit, and in order that the work might be so far advanced before the approach of winter as to be in a condition of perfect safety the men were worked day and night, Sundays and holidays, without cessation. If I had not made the exertion for the last nine months which I did, an enormous amount of damages would in all probability have been brought against the Government for the destruction of public and private property and the public highways. With all my exertions we are only just out of danger."

The work is now in such a condition that a small force must be kept employed to preserve what has already been done; and to cover the walls, to take down and pack away the machinery, and to prepare for a total suspension of all work upon the building at this season of the year will necessitate a large expenditure from which no beneficial results can be derived. It is, therefore, earnestly hoped that the explanations above given will be sufficient to justify your honorable committee in recommending the immediate appropriation asked for the continuation of the work.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

WM. A. POTTER,
Supervising Architect.

HON. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL DISTRIBUTION OF SEEDS.

Mr. CROUNSE. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill (H. R. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds, in order that it may be put upon its passage at this time.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, appropriates the sum of $30,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds to the portions of the country which have suffered from grasshopper ravages during the past summer.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CROUNSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY INTERFERENCE WITH MISSISSIPPI COURTS.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to inform the House by what authority the courts, or the officers thereof, of the State of Mississippi at Vicksburgh have been interfered with by the Army of the United States, and also to report all orders in relation to said military interference.

Mr. LYNCH. I object to the resolution in that form.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAYNARD. What is the regular order of business if the motion to go into committee be voted down?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuse to go into committee, the next business in order will be the call of committees in the morning hour.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will ask to make a privileged report, if we are not to have the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Tennessee has a conference report, it is of higher privilege than the motion to go into committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker; but I do not wish to antagonize the morning hour. I think we should have a morning hour, for we have not had one for a week.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Pending my motion to go into committee, I move that all debate on the pending bill in Committee of the Whole be closed in one hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course that will be under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. There can be no other rule at this time.

LOUISIANA AFFAIRS.

Mr. SHELDON, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the conservative members of the Legislature of Louisiana, relating to the differences concerning the organizatiion of the Legislature of that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAYNARD. What will be the first question the Speaker will feel obliged to submit to the House in the present condition of business?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman rises to make his conference report, that will be the first question; but if he declines to make it, the motion to go into committee will be put.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the House refuse to go into committee, we will then have a morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour would then begin, and committees would be called for reports.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will test the sense of the House, then, as to whether it will have a morning hour or not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to go into committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 24.

So the motion was agreed to.

OFFICIAL STAMPS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster-General, in relation to the engraving and printing of official stamps; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can I make my conference report now?

The SPEAKER. Not now; the House is in committee.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POLAND in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the following amendment submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS:]

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION —. That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations of the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, he being authorized to receive the same by the council of said nation, the sum of $2,981,247.30, the amount of said award, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of said award until the payment thereof as herein provided, less the sum of $250,000 heretofore paid in part satisfaction of said award, to be deducted as of the date of said part payment; the same to be paid from time to time by said Secretary, and in such sums as may be required for the purposes hereafter named, and as may seem to be safe and prudent. Said money shall be disbursed by the treasurer of said nation, with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for said tribe, in the following manner, namely: A sum not exceeding — per cent. of the whole amount of said award remaining unpaid, and the interest thereon, may be paid out by said treasurer as before provided to such persons as the council of said nation shall designate and specify in full compensation for such services as have been by them lawfully rendered to said nation and for such money as they may have lawfully expended in behalf of said nation in the prosecution of the claim of said nation: Provided, That all persons so compensated shall, on receipt of said sums, file with the United States agent of said tribe receipt in full discharge of said nation and all individual members thereof of and from all claim on account of such services or expenditure; that the balance of said award and interest remaining after the payment before provided for shall be paid by the treasurer of said nation as aforesaid to the individuals of said nation, whose claims the said nation assumed and became liable to pay by the twelfth article of said treaty, such sums as may be found and adjudged by the proper authorities of said nation to be equitable and just: Provided, however, If the amount of claims so found and adjudged to be due shall exceed said balance, then that said claimants shall be paid in equal and just proportion according to the amount of their several claims so determined: And provided further, That if any balance after the payments before provided for shall remain, the same shall be paid over to and held by the United States as a general Choctaw fund, as provided by the thirteenth article of said treaty: And provided further, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said award as herein provided, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act in approval of this act, and shall accept the payment of the said award, as herein provided, as a full discharge and satisfaction of all the claims of the said nation, or of individual members thereof, on account of the said award.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I move to strike out the following words:

The same to be paid from time to time by said Secretary, and in such sums as may be required for the purposes hereafter named, and as may seem to be safe and prudent. Said money shall be disbursed by the treasurer of said nation, with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for said tribe, in the following manner, namely: A sum not exceeding — per cent. of the whole amount of said award remaining unpaid, and the interest thereon, may be paid out by said treasurer as before provided to such persons as the council of said nation shall designate and specify in full compensation for such services as have been by them lawfully rendered to said nation and for such money as they may have lawfully expended in behalf of said nation in the prosecution of the claim of said nation: Provided, That all persons so compensated shall, on receipt of said sums, file with the United States agent of said tribe receipt in full discharge of said nation and all individual members thereof of and from all claim on account of such services or expenditure; that the balance of said award and interest remaining after the payment before provided for shall be paid by the treasurer of said nation as aforesaid to the individuals of said nation, whose claims the said nation assumed and became liable to pay by the twelfth article of said treaty, such sums as may be found and adjudged by the proper authorities of said nation to be equitable and just: Provided, however, If the amount of claims so found and adjudged to be due shall exceed said balance, then that said claimants shall be paid in equal and just proportion according to the amount of their several claims so determined.

And in lieu thereof to insert these words:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not recognize, allow, or pay any claim or pretended claim which has been heretofore demanded, or which may hereafter be demanded, by any attorney or claim agent, or any pretended owner of said award or any part thereof, or any pretended purchaser of any contract or pretended contract made in behalf of said Choctaw Nation for the payment of any compensation or fees for the prosecution of the claim of said nation against the Government of the United States.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Let us vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] was entitled to the floor when the committee rose last evening

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair may award the floor to some other gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question will be on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in lines 12 and 13, after the word "them," these words, "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and insert "in bonds of the United States, bearing interest at 5 per cent., of the description authorized by the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt.'"

Mr. LOWE. I desire to oppose the amendment.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio is simply an amendment to defeat this entire appropriation. It is not an amendment which would either carry out the treaty with these Indians or carry out the award made by the Senate. As I understand this case, Mr. Chairman, the real opposition to this bill upon this floor seems to arise from the inability of the Government to pay its own debts. I have heard no gentleman upon this floor in the course of this debate allege or urge that this claim substantially was not a debt of the Government to the Choctaw Nation. If it be a debt which the Government honestly owes to the Choctaw Nation, it is not becoming the dignity or the honor of this House of Representatives to refuse to acknowledge it or to refuse to pay it as provided by treaties and by the award upon any supposition that the Treasury is not able to meet its indebtedness.

It is almost a work of supererogation to go into a discussion of the merits of this claim. For more than a quarter of a century it has been the subject of consideration, the subject of debate, the subject of reports by committees of both Houses of Congress; and, so far as I am aware, everybody who has given that attention to this claim which its magnitude demands, and who has considered the treaties upon which it is based and the facts in view of which it arises, concedes that substantially this amount as provided in this bill, and much more, is really due to the Choctaw Nation.

It is urged here upon this floor that there is danger that in the distribution of this amount it will not take the proper direction. And yet, Mr. Chairman, while this objection has been made from Congress to Congress and from session to session, by gentlemen who have antagonized the claim, I fail to find any of those gentlemen proposing to this House any method of distribution which would accommodate their views of the case in antagonism or in opposition to the modes which have been presented time after time by the committees of this House and of the other House.

One word, Mr. Chairman, in respect to the lobbies. There are two sides to the lobbies. There are two views in which their purposes may be taken into consideration, and in respect to which there may possibly be danger of improper action being taken by the House. In the first place, no one will concur more heartily than I do in the suggestion that no claim should be advanced or receive support from any motives other than those which lie in the justice, integrity, and propriety of the claim. And there is another view: whether this House will be cowed down, whether it will refuse to do justice to a suffering people with whom we have treated for fear that somebody will howl that they are actuated by the urging of a lobby. Sir, so far as I am concerned, it is my intention, and I believe it is the intention of every man here, to act with faithful integrity to the duties which are devolved upon us as public officers, and in discharge of our honest obligations to the Government, without fear of the action of the lobby and without reproach in respect to it in either attitude which I have suggested.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO,] it seems to me, is sufficiently guarded; and especially if the amendment which his colleague [Mr. PARKER] has just offered should be added to it, which would remove all doubt of suspicion and all possibility of this money taking an improper direction. I hope the appropriation may be made.

Mr. DAWES. I had not intended to participate in this debate, and should not have done so but for the suggestion of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] Of course the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio should not be adopted unless the claim is an honest one. Upon the merits of the claim specially I do not desire to trouble the House at present, because no gentleman has very earnestly contended upon the floor of the House that this is not an honest claim in some shape or other. The objections to it are based on other grounds.

I have known this claim for a great many years. I believe it is one of the standing reproaches upon the Government that they have failed to fulfill the provisions of the treaty, and the reproach is so much the greater because it is a treaty with one of the nations or tribes of Indians rather than with some one of the powerful nations of the earth. I believe we have failed to meet the just demands of that nation upon the Government of the United States; and every hour that a settlement is postponed is adding to that reproach which shall in the judgment of history be laid up against this nation on account of the manner in which it has treated those tribes of Indians.

But I desire to say that, in order to pay this claim, there is required by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that this be paid in bonds of the United States of the description authorized by the act of 1870. I think I am justified in urging this upon the House on account of the present condition of the Treasury of the United States. It does not make much difference to the United States or the Choctaws whether we pay it in these bonds or not, because those bonds are at par, and we can sell the bonds and pay what we owe to the Choctaws, or the Choctaws can realize upon those bonds.

But we cannot do it without legislation. Those bonds cannot be, any portion of them, put upon the market to meet this appropriation without some legislation. By the existing law they can be put upon the market only for the purpose of redeeming the outstanding debt of the Government; so that if you do not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, you take out of the Treasury, out of the receipts of the Government, the amount of this appropriation.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to call his attention to the fact that the Chair, as I understand it, has ruled that no legislation is needed in this matter, and that this is not new legislation? I understand that the Chair ruled on a point of order made that this amendment did not involve any new legislation, and that therefore it was not subject to the point of order. If that is so, I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts whether his point is correct if the Chair was correct.

Mr. DAWES. Well, I think that is pretty well put. I think if the Chair was correct I am not.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Settle it with the Chair.

Mr. DAWES. No, sir; I will not settle it with the Chair. I will settle it with the House of Representatives and with the gentleman from Maine.

Now, the statute of 1870 expressly declares in so many words that not one of these bonds shall be put upon the market except for the sole purpose of funding the outstanding debt of the country enumerated in that statute, and therefore, without some such provision as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] offers, you cannot take one of these bonds and divert it to this payment, and unless you do that you must take the money from the current receipts of the Treasury. You will see at once that you are now running behind two or three million dollars every month the current expenses of the Government, and it is our duty either to permit the Government to sell some of these bonds and pay the proceeds to the Indians or else to offer them to the Choctaws. These bonds are at par in the market, and that meets the objection otherwise perhaps well made by my colleague, [Mr. HARRIS,] and if you pay the amount in these bonds you cannot bind the Government in the distribution suggested by my colleague.

Mr. Chairman, all experience shows that if you distribute this money per capita you fritter it away. You should pay it in some way to the nation as a nation.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I would ask my colleague if he is aware that by the treaty of 1855 this fund is to be first appropriated to the payment of the claims of individual Indians of the tribe?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly I am; but it was not stipulated that the Government of the United States should withhold this money until they might be permitted to do it so as to settle those claims. If you will agree that the money shall be taken down there, where the lobby dare not go, you can provide for its payment in any way you please. Put an army, if necessary, between the lobby and these people; but I tell my colleague that the history of the treatment of the Indians is such that I would do anything rather than trust this money to the Indian agents down there. I say this without personal reference to any particular Indian agent, but if there are any officers of the Government in whom I have lost confidence it is Indian agents. I once heard it said upon this floor by a distinguished member that he would not trust even Saint Paul as an Indian agent.

Mr. DAWES. Allow me a word further. I agree with my colleague in his desire to shut out the lobby from any participation in this fund, but I would put it in the hands of the nation itself in some way. If we are not satisfied with the authority of its representatives here, let us charge our Government with the duty of taking the money to the very doors of the treasury of the nation, but I would not undertake ourselves to distribute it. I appreciate the efforts of my colleague and agree with him in the purpose he has in view and will go as far as he will in shutting the lobby out from any share in this money, but I apprehend that the last persons who ought to be trusted with it are the persons to whom he proposes to intrust it in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Inasmuch as the House has limited debate upon this question to one hour, the Chair desires to state that the gentleman will be confined strictly to five minutes and will not be allowed to overstep that limit.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say that the amendment which I offered yesterday was not proposed to be offered in this House, but only to be offered in the Committee on Indian Affairs for their consideration. Not finding time to offer it there I offered it here, being fully aware that it contains some matter that might be objectionable. Since the adjournment of the House last evening I have had an opportunity for the first time to see the old gentleman, Mr. Pitchlynn, who represents the Choctaw Nation here, and I have become satisfied that if a law shall pass this Congress which puts this money into the treasury of the nation or into the hands of some person whom the nation shall hereafter authorize, and pay it over at once without hesitation, we shall be doing a good work. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] provides that when this money shall be disbursed from the Treasury of the nation it shall be disbursed according to the terms of the treaty of 1855. With that I ought to be satisfied. My desire to protect this fund against any possible chance of its falling into the hands of what is called the lobby will as well be accomplished in that way as in any other; and therefore I am content that my amendment shall be withdrawn, as I now withdraw it, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, as it will be further amended as he will propose, should be adopted, and in that shape I will sustain it.

Mr. COMINGO. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read for information an amendment which I desire to offer. I believe it is not strictly in order now, as there is pending an amendment which must first be disposed of.

The Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out of lines 11 and 12 of the printed amendment these words:

P. P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized agents of said Choctaw Nation, or either of them.

And to insert in lieu thereof these words:

The treasurer of said Choctaw Nation, or to such other agent as the council of said nation may designate.

Mr. COMINGO. It is suggested that we shall first take a vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] before any discussion of the amendment which I have offered as proposed to be amended. I, therefore, yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole for a moment to the subject now before them. It will be remembered, if anybody has taken the pains to observe, that last winter I opposed a similar proposition, first because it was attached to an appropriation bill. I did not believe that an appropriation bill was the place to settle any unadjudicated claim. On the merits of the proposition itself I made two points. I said then that so far as my study had enabled me to go it seemed to me that the claim was an equitable one. But there were two things that stood in the way of my voting anything at that time for this claim. The first was the construction of the treaty itself.

The treaty recognized two kinds of claims due to the Choctaws; the first was a national claim. The treaty provided that whatever was due as the national claim was to be put into a trust fund for the purposes of education. Second, there were debts due to individual Choctaws, the amount to pay which was, according to the terms of the treaty, to be paid over to the nation, and by the nation paid to the individual claimants. I made this point, that until we knew how much was national and how much was individual we never could tell whether we had properly discharged our obligations. We must know that before we can tell what part to pay into the trust fund, and what part to pay in a lump sum to the nation.

For that reason, on motion of my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] a clause was inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill last winter directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and report to this House how much the two several classes of claims amounted to. He has made a report which, on the 23d of December last, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. In that report he says that the amount of individual claims of the Choctaws is more than the whole amount that we owe the Choctaws under the award; in other words, that the individual claims of Choctaws, the payment of which is recognized as the first use to be made of the money we are to pay, will absorb all and indeeed more than all we are to pay under the terms of the treaty.

That statement settles one of the difficulties in my mind last winter. It reduces it to this: that whatever we are bound to pay the Choctaws under the treaty is to be paid to them under the clause which provides for the individual Choctaw claims. By the language of the treaty the distribution of that fund is to be made by the Choctaw Nation themselves from the sum which we are to pay them. That makes it clear to my mind that our duty under the treaty will be discharged when we pay to the Choctaw Nation, or to any agent that we know to be their authorized agent, the sum of money awarded under the treaty.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the pending proposition refer as well to the award under the twelfth as under the eleventh section of the treaty? The amount under the twelfth is comparatively small.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course I speak of the whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Both the eleventh and the twelfth?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir. In the next place, there was also this trouble in my mind: was there any authorized agent of the Choctaw Nation to whom we could pay this money, and from whom we could receive a full and complete quittance and discharge of the Government of the United States from all obligations? I had some doubt whether there was such clear and unquestioned authority. The Secretary of the Treasury has also reported to us upon that point, and in his letter, which I hold in my hand, he declares that the Choctaw Nation has reaffirmed the powers of the agents named in the bill to receive the money. But to "make assurance double sure," I shall demand that there shall be put upon this bill a proviso that the Choctaw Nation should hereafter determine to whom this money shall be paid for them.

Mr. LOWE. It does that now.

Mr. GARFIELD. If it does that, I am content. There are two things in my mind to be determined: First, the United States must obtain a complete quittance for its obligation; in the second place, we should get that quittance by a means that the Treasury can endure. That cannot be by the payment of money, but it must be by the payment of bonds.

Mr. COMINGO. I desire to state to the gentleman that I have indicated an amendment requiring that hereafter the Choctaw Nation shall appoint an agent to receive this money.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have offered the amendment I did because we have not now, and according to present appearances will not have, the means to pay this sum of money. And unless specific authority is given, we could not even sell these bonds and raise the money for this purpose; for by the law all the bonds of this description, unless subsequent legislation shall otherwise provide, are pledged to the specific business of refunding the national debt. I therefore offered this amendment for the purpose of providing that such portion of these bonds as is needed may be made available for this purpose. One word more in regard to the merits of the case itself.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to the fact that his amendment does not allow the sale of the bonds for the purpose mentioned, but it requires that the fund itself shall be paid over to the parties authorized to receive it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course, if the claim was to be paid in money, the Government would have to sell the bonds to raise the money; but the Treasury Department has no authority to do that, nor do I want to give such authority.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it would be best to alter the phraseology of the proposition. I ask why we should appropriate these bonds to the Indians when they are above par? Why should we not give authority to sell the bonds and put the premium into the Treasury?

A MEMBER. What is the price of the bonds?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are selling at 115.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are about 3 per cent. above par in gold.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COMINGO. There is a pending amendment, and it seems to me the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] is not in order.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Mine is only an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. COMINGO. My amendment is not in the form of an independent section, but is itself an amendment to an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] is not in order.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] is mistaken. The proposition made by him is, as I understand, to attach an independent proposition to the bill.

Mr. COMINGO. No, sir.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri be read, so that we may understand what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "P. P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized agents of said Choctaw Nation, or either of them," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

To the treasurer of said Choctaw Nation, or to such other agent as the council of said nation may designate.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I ask a vote on the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. COMINGO. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move to amend that amendment by striking out "5 per cent." and inserting "4½ per cent." The latter bonds sell at about par.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. MERRIAM. I would suggest that inasmuch as we do not want to pay this debt in gold, we provide for paying it in 5 per cent. currency bonds. That will cover the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I feel compelled to raise objections to this measure. I do not oppose it simply because of its age, because, if it is a just claim against the Government, its long postponement would be the strongest argument for its prompt settlement; and I am well aware that we have not treated kindly or justly the Indian tribes which have come under our control even in times of peace. But I am not able to reach the conclusion that this claim is one which the Government ought to pay.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] in discussing this subject a few moments ago, mentioned the fact, if I understood him correctly, that he had never heard the justice of this claim called in question. The gentleman is certainly mistaken. When the Senate brought the subject before this House, soon after the award was made by the Senate by an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, the claim asserted by the Senate of a right to make that award was promptly resisted by this House; and the House went into the inquiry, not whether an award had been made by the Senate, but whether in fact, under the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1830, on which the Senate predicated its award, the Choctaw tribe of Indians were entitled to the proceeds of the land ceded by them to the United States by that treaty situated in the State of Mississippi. And after a very careful investigation the claim was defeated by a vote of 56 yeas to 104 nays, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] himself voting in the negative. Many gentlemen were then members of this House who had been familiar with all the facts and events connected with this award and the treaties preceding it from the beginning, and they voted with great unanimity against the appropriation of this money. The vote, as I have stated, and which I now have before me, is 56 in the affirmative to 104 in the negative.

I am forced to the conclusion, as I was then, that by the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1830, on which this award was predicated by the Senate, the Government was not liable to the Choctaw tribe of Indians for the proceeds of those lands. This tribe of Indians by that treaty of 1830 absolutely ceded their lands in Mississippi to the United States. The Government paid them for the lands in conformity with the treaty. It paid by the terms of the treaty to the Choctaw tribe an annuity of $20,000 a year for the period of twenty years. It agreed to remove and did remove them at the expense of the United States to the country lying west of the present State of Arkansas and support them there for a period of twelve months, and furnished liberal facilities to promote their civilization. It agreed further that all those Choctaws who might think proper to remain in the State of Mississippi might do so and become citizens of that State; that heads of families should receive two sections of land, that all children above ten years of age should receive half a section of land, and those under ten years of age a quarter-section of land. The provisions of the treaty secured to the tribe ample compensation for the lands they ceded and established them in their new home west of the Mississippi.

Now, sir, the eighteenth article of the treaty provides only that while the Indians are upon these lands in Mississippi they may be surveyed by the United States, but that they should not be disposed of until the Indians had removed west and until the Government had fulfilled its treaty obligations to remove them to the country west of the present State of Arkansas, and then the annuities of money which the Government had agreed to pay (every dollar of which has been paid) should be paid, and its payment should be a charge upon ceded lands; but no provision of the treaty gives this tribe the proceeds of the land ceded by them to the United States. There is no such provision in the treaty.

I have before me the statement made on this floor fifteen years ago by a then leading member of the Committee on Ways and Means, (Hon. John S. Phelps,) which seems to be absolutely conclusive against this claim; and I find from the Globe of that day that when the award of 1859 was under consideration in the Senate the chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs stated that the amount involved was about $800,000 to $1,000,000, when in fact the award was found to be $2,981,000. The Senate, after a very brief discussion, adopted a resolution submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs declaring that the Choctaw Indians should receive the proceeds of the lands sold by the United States, and within the limits of the State of Mississippi which had been ceded by the Choctaws to the Government.

Now, sir, the very use of the term "lands ceded" in this eighteenth article repels this idea that the Indians were to receive the proceeds of those lands; and in the debate to which I refer, when the subject was before the House there was great unanimity in the opinion that inasmuch as this was a question on which the House itself must pass its judgment, the data on which the Senate acted were not sufficient; that the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1830 did not warrant the construct on which the Senate put upon it, and that the award so far as predicated upon that eighteenth article was without any justice in fact or binding authority upon the House, and the House rejected the claim. My judgment is that that original action of the House was right. I cannot therefore support this measure, but must vote against it.

Mr. COMINGO rose.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to submit my amendment. This amount proposed to be awarded with accumulated interest perhaps amounts to $5,000,000,

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The Chair has ruled the amendment is not in order, and I make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

Mr. COMINGO. I will yield that the amendment may be read and then I will take the floor.

Mr. MERRIAM. Let it be read and the committee will see it will get us out of the difficulty.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the amount herein awarded shall be invested in United States thirty-year 5 per cent. currency bonds, such bonds to be registered in the name of the Choctaw Nation, held with accumulated interest by the United States Treasurer, subject only to the order of the legally authorized agents of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to have an amendment read.

Mr. COMINGO. I cannot yield, because it will be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. COMINGO. Mr. Chairman, I supposed at the time I offered the amendment to the appropriation bill that it would not be antagonized by any one on account of lacking merit, but to my surprise there are two gentlemen upon this floor who do so antagonize it and say it is not a just claim. From the fact there are but two who have spoken on the subject, I suppose they are the only two who do not regard the claim as having merit. Now the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] insists this money is not due to these Indians. I regret very much my time will not allow me to run through the history of the case, for I think I would be able to convince the committee the United States owes to these Indians perhaps $2,000,000 more than they ask or can now recover.

The gentleman from Indiana states these lands were not sold. I will remark for the information of those who have not examined the question that the lands to which these Indians moved west of the Mississippi River were ceded to them before this, I think in 1820, and they had as much title to them as they ever had to any land. In 1830 a treaty was entered into, the preamble of which I ask the Clerk to read. By that treaty we acquired lands from them amounting to nearly eleven million acres west of the Mississippi. The preamble will show on what terms, and that it was a sale and not a gift.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the General Assembly of the State of Mississippi has extended the laws of said State to persons and property within the chartered limits of the same, and the President of the United States has said that he cannot protect the Choctaw people from the operation of these laws: Now, therefore, that the Choctaws may live under their own laws in peace with the United States and the State of Mississippi, they have determined to sell their lands east of the Mississippi, and have accordingly agreed to the following articles of treaty:

Mr. COMINGO. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that preamble was not ratified, but was struck out, yet it is true nevertheless these Indians sold their lands. It is manifest from the subsequent action of this House, or rather of the Senate of the United States. The Choctaws, from and after the time that treaty was made, asserted their claim for nearly eleven million acres of land which they had ceded—for land which they had sold according to the recital in the preamble of the treaty. Until 1855 they were unsuccessful in accomplishing anything which indicated the purpose on the part of the Government to satisfy their claim.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I rise to a point of order. We have limited debate on this bill to one hour, and as there are several important amendments yet to be offered, if the whole time is to be taken up with the discussion of the pending amendment, we will not have opportunity to explain anything else. I insist, therefore, the gentleman's remarks shall be confined to the pending amendment.

Mr. COMINGO. I presume the point of order is well taken; but I apprehended, as the gentleman from Indiana, who antagonized this claim, was allowed to proceed without interruption, I would be permitted to make a brief statement in reply. If the point of order is insisted on, however, I will yield the floor so that a vote may be taken.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. If in any allusion I made yesterday to the lobby offense was taken by members of this House——

Mr. COMINGO. I make the point of order made and insisted on against me, that the gentleman must confine his remarks to the pending amendment. I was obliged to take my seat because the point of order was raised that I was not discussing the pending amendment. The gentleman from Maine proposes now to discuss the lobby and not the pending amendment, and I make the point of order against him.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let the pending amendment be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is to that amendment I propose to speak. I want, by certain figures taken from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, to call the attention of the House particularly to the end to which this fund should go.

If, as I commenced by saying, I made a mistake in referring to the lobby and that is offensive, I will adopt the phrase used by Mr. Sam. Ward, and speak of them as parliamentary lawyers. At any rate, it seems they are not upon the side of the persons for whom I am about to speak.

Now, if gentlemen will examine the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, prepared in accordance with the direction of Congress at its last session, they will find on page 2 of that letter on the Choctaw claim this statement, made up from the papers in the case:

The original claims are based upon those of eleven hundred and fifty families, as appears by statements submitted to the Secretary.

The amount of these is $1,798,400. In addition there are two hundred and ninety-two families who never received anything from the Government. Now, if there is any force in this claim, the money should go straight and direct as water runs or fire burns to these families. It ought not to be diverted. There ought to be no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] which seeks to send it to these persons.

If that is admitted, then the question arises, can you distribute bonds to these parties as well as money? That is a fair question for the House to consider upon the present amendment. I am free to say that my interest in this matter arises from a determination that so far as I am concerned this large sum of money—and the amendment makes it over $4,000,000—shall go directly to these parties. Congress ought not to move a step in this matter until that is guaranteed.

Now, sir, I have my suspicion that when these claims are investigated it will be found that no eleven hundred and fifty families, with the two hundred and ninety-two added, making over fourteen hundred in all, will ever appear to present a good claim. And where shall the balance go? That should be guarded, and the provision which has been referred to revived that if there is any fund over and above the net proceeds that shall go to these families, and then the balance, the residue, shall go for a fund that shall operate for all the tribe, that is, for an educational fund. I would have that religiously guarded. Let the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] of the Indian Committee, be carried into effect. Let the proper tribunal of the Choctaw Nation pass upon these claims of fourteen hundred and odd families, and let the money from the Treasury, whenever we give it, be paid directly to the Indians. If there is any balance over, let it go to the educational fund. And if the House chooses that a small percentage of this vast sum shall be paid to any parties who have had charge of urging this claim for fair and honest services, there can be no objection.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on Mr. GARFIELD'S amendment, there were ayes 75, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, have I a right now to offer my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] has offered an amendment to his own amendment. The Chair does not consider that it is in order to offer an amendment to that.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. We have just adopted one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That was an amendment to the original proposition, which is an amendment to the bill. The gentleman from Missouri now moves an amendment to his own amendment, and it is not in order to move an amendment to that.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] to the original amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 11 and 12 strike out these words, "P. P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized agents of said Choctaw Nation, or to either of them," and insert in lieu of them the following: "To the Treasurer of said Choctaw Nation or to such other agent as the council of said nation may designate."

Mr. GUNCKEL. I wish to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. COMIMGO. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I am going to discuss the amendment.

Mr. COMINGO. Is not debate exhausted on that amendment?

Mr. GUNCKEL. There has been no debate on the gentleman's amendment at all. The debate has been on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

I have not been able to satisfy myself at all that this claim is a just one and an honest debt due the Indians from the Government. I do not propose, however, to discuss its justice on this amendment, as I would not be permitted to do so under the rules. But neither am I satisfied as to the particular manner in which this money, some $4,000,000, shall be paid to the claimants. I have serious doubts whether, under the bill, one-half of it will ever get to the Indians or out of the city of Washington.

There are two propositions. One is to give the money to Peter P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, two gentlemen selected by the Choctaw Nation. We are not told that they are men of property; that they have given bonds for the safety of this money or for its payment to the claimants. Now, we know, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] knows very well, that in a similar case a few years ago Congress appropriated about half a million dollars to pay bounties to the soldiers of the Indian Home Guards belonging to the Cherokee and Creek Nations, and that it was paid to an agent selected and authorized by said nations, and that of that half million dollars but little more than one-half ever got to the soldiers, the balance having been kept by the agent himself. Now, what assurance have we that this will not be repeated in this Choctaw case? The agents named may be men of honor, integrity, and respectability. I know nothing against them. But this Government should not pay four or five million dollars to any person unless that person has given bonds for the safety and proper distribution of the money.

The pending proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] is to pay the money to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation. Now, those who know anything of these so-called Indian nations know that their treasurers are not men of property, and often do not give bonds, or that if they give bonds at all, it is only for a few thousand dollars.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that we have no assurance that under either of these propositions this money or any large portion of it will ever get to the claimants. We do not know that it will not be paid to attorneys and agents belonging to the Washington lobby notoriously interested in this claim. It was stated in the newspapers at the last session that these Indians, despairing of getting their claim through, had agreed to give the Washington lobby one-half of all they should recover for getting the claim through Congress. I do not know if that is true or not, but I shall not vote away millions of dollars of the people's money until I am quite sure it is just and that the money shall go to the Indians and not the lobby.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. The gentleman will allow me to state a single fact?

Mr. GUNCKEL. I have no objection if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. The Choctaw Nation in council last year declared that they would repudiate all contracts made with all parties upon the subject of this Choctaw claim. That is the condition of things to-day.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I object to the gentleman from Ohio yielding unless it be taken out of his time.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I resume the floor. Now, I propose an amendment to which I think there can be no objection, and which will secure the payment of this money to the legitimate claimants. It is to strike out the words "treasurer of the nation" and insert "Secretary of the Interior in trust for the claimants." Then the money will go not to the lobby, but to the Indian claimants to whom it is claimed to be due.

Mr. SHANKS. A former Secretary of the Interior placed the money in the hands of the special agent, J. W. Wright, formerly of Indiana, in whose hands the money was placed for the Indian soldiers, in the case to which the gentleman has referred, and in which it was lost.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The money was safe as long as it remained in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of the Interior. After it passed over to the agent of the Indians, then it was lost. It is suggested to me that I substitute the words "Secretary of the Treasury" for "Secretary of the Interior." I have no objection to that. All I want is to place this money, if appropriated at all, in the hands of some officer of the Government, so as to secure its payment to the persons for whom it was designed and to whom it is believed to be due.

I repeat, I prefer not to pay at all, because I am not by any means satisfied that it is a just and honest claim against the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I have not had an opportunity to offer an amendment which I think ought to be offered and ought to pass; and as part of my argument I ask the Clerk to read that amendment which I send up.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out "$2,981,247.30" in lines 14 and 15, and insert in lieu thereof "$2,332,560."

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to say to the committee that I believe seven committees of Congress have reported on this claim, and six out of that number have fixed the amount at the rate this amendment fixes it. The first committee that ever reported on the case was a Senate committee, of which Mr. Sebastian was chairman. He fixed the amount at this rate. I am in favor of the claim, and believe it to be an honest one. I do not think that any gentleman will rise here and say that it is not a fair and just claim; but I do think that $600,000 ought to be deducted from the amount awarded by this amendment. I send up to the Clerk and ask to have read a passage from the report made in the Senate by Mr. Sebastian, the first report ever made on this case, and made during the same session that the award of the Senate was made.

The Clerk read as follows:

The net proceeds of the ceded lands having been by the Senate awarded to the Choctaws, not as a matter of legal right upon the letter of the treaty of 1830, but under the power given by the submission in the treaty in 1855, not alone to decide whether the Choctaws were entitled to those net proceeds, but also whether they should be allowed them; in fulfillment of the duty created by that treaty, to give the rights and claims of the Choctaw people "a just, fair, and liberal consideration," because of the impossibility of ascertaining the real amount to which upon a fair settlement the Choctaw Nation and individuals were entitled, but which amount, it was evident, was of startling magnitude, as the only mode by which equal justice could by any possibility be done between them and the United States, and because under the treaty of 1830, taken in connection with the discussions and propositions that preceded the treaty, their equities to have the net proceeds were very strong indeed, therefore it seemed to the committee to be an equitable construction of the award and its true intention that the United States should return to the Choctaws only so much as remained in their hands as profit from the lands ceded by the treaty of 1830, and after payment of all expenses and disbursements of all kinds; and twelve and a half cents per acre for such lands only as still remain in the possession of the United States unsold.

The committee has therefore thought that there should be charged against the Choctaws, as a further deduction not made by the Secretary of the Interior, the 5 per cent. on the net proceeds of the actual sales of said lands, [$5,912,664.13,] which the United States have paid to the State of Mississippi, amounting to $362,100.70.

And also that the phrase "the residue of said lands" in the award [used instead of the words "the lands remaining unsold" in the submission] should not be construed to include such of the lands as have been given the State of Mississippi under the swamp-land act nor the grants for railroad and school purposes; but that so much as in the account is allowed for such lands at twelve and a half cents an acre [or $226,595.75] should also be deducted.

These two amounts deducted from the balance as found by the account leave the sum of $2,332,560.85 due and owing to the Choctaws, according to the award of the Senate, by virtue of articles 11 and 12 of the treaty of 1855.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, the six committees which have reported upon this claim have all fixed on this amount. The Committee on Appropriations of this House at its last session, in a report presented by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER,] fixed the amount as I propose to fix it.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. O, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I hold in my hand the bill which the gentleman reported last session from the Committee on Appropriations, and which fixes this as the amount due.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to correct the gentleman. The Committee on Appropriations did do that, but the report that I made did not do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa, who has been speaking of recent reports made in this case, if all the earlier reports upon it, when the facts were fresh, were not adverse to the claim?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The first report was made in the Senate by Mr. Sebastian, of Arkansas, about a month after the Senate had made the award, in which he says that the amount due is the amount I propose in my amendment; and since that time every committee that has examined the claim has fixed upon the same amount except the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House last session.

Mr. HOLMAN. The very second session of Congress after this award was made the claim was reported adversely upon and was defeated.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. As I said, I am in favor of the payment of the claim; but I think that the amount in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] is $600,000 more than the amount fixed by the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted under the order of the House. The first question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] to his own amendment.

The amendment was to strike out "P. P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, the authorized agents of said Choctaw Nation, or either of them," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the treasurer of said Choctaw Nation, or such other agent as the council of said nation may designate."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I now move to amend the amendment as I indicated a moment since, by striking out "$2,981,247.30" and inserting in lieu "$2,332,561."

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment, and upon a division there were—ayes 41, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE and Mr. COMINGO were appointed.

The Committee of the Whole again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 54, noes 97.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not recognize, allow, or pay any claims or pretended claims which have heretofore been demanded, or which may hereafter be demanded, by any attorney or claim agent, or any pretended owner of said award or any part thereof, on any pretended purchase or any contract or pretended contract made on behalf of said Choctaw Nation for the payment of any compensation or fees for the prosecution of the claims of said nation against the Government of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, or such other agent as the council of said nation may designate," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the Secretary of the Interior, in trust for said claimants of the Choctaw Nation." Now just one word. Instead of having this money go to the treasurer of the nation——

Mr. COMINGO. I object to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] is not in order, as it proposes to strike out words which the committee have just directed to be inserted.

Mr. GUNCKEL. As I understand, there is pending a motion to amend this appropriation bill. There is no other motion pending, and I have moved to amend the amendment. Do I understand the Chair to rule my amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] out of order, because it proposes to strike out words which the committee have just voted in.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The committee had put in a long clause. At the time I moved to amend it, but I could not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it is not in order to strike out any part of what the committee have voted in.

Mr. COMINGO. In order to perfect the amendment, I move to strike out, in lines 22 and 23 of the printed amendment, the words "to said Pitchlynn and Folsom, or either of them."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COMINGO. I further move to amend by striking out in line 27 the word "agents" and inserting in lieu the words "treasurer or agent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COMINGO. I move to amend also by striking out the words "to the said delegates," in line 32 of the printed amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon the amendment as amended.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to a question of order. In the confusion here I failed to understand what had become of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GUNCKEL.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I would inquire upon what point of order the amendment of my colleague [Mr. GUNCKEL] was overruled.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That is what I am inquiring about.

The CHAIRMAN. It was overruled upon the ground that it proposed to strike out a portion of what the committee had just voted in.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I understand that we are just getting ready to vote on the whole proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO.] Before that vote is taken that proposition can be amended in any portion by striking out. I understood that the gentleman from Ohio proposed to strike out certain words and to insert others. Is not that so?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] understand that when the committee have voted in certain words, a member of the committee can immediately move to strike out them or any portion of them? The Chair does not understand that it is in order to move to strike out anything that the committee have ordered to be inserted.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I would inquire if the amendment offered on yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, is now pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has been withdrawn by the gentleman who offered it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Then I hope the whole proposition will be voted down.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. COMINGO as amended by the Committee of the Whole; and upon a division there were—ayes 97, noes 52.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Instead of calling for tellers, I will give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote upon this amendment in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. In order to have a full vote, inasmuch as this is an important amendment, I think we should have tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will not call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote upon the amendment, as amended, is 97 in the affirmative and 55 in the negative. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to pay to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians, upon the passage of this act, the following arrears of interest due to said tribe:

Arrears of interest on $90,000 Arkansas 6 per cent. bonds from July 1, 1852, to July 1, 1866, $75,000.

Arrears of interest on $616,000 Tennessee 6 per cent. bonds from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $203,280.

Arrears of interest on $66,666.66⅔ Tennessee 5¼ per cent. bonds from January 25, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $19,010.25.

And that the same be paid to the said tribe in bonds of the United States of any issue authorized by law and bearing 4½ per cent. interest.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman who has charge of this bill will explain whether it has been the policy of the Government heretofore to pay the interest on these bonds held for Indians.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I believe it has always been the custom of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then how does it happen that from 1861 to 1866 the interest was not paid by the Government?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I will explain to the gentleman. The interest was paid upon these bonds until the breaking out of the war. After the war commenced Congress by an act instructed the Secretary of the Interior, I believe, to postpone payment of interest on the bonds due to Chickasaws, Choctaws, and Cherokees on account of some of them having been disloyal to the Government.

Mr. MAYNARD. Unfriendly, not disloyal.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. After the war, in 1866, we made a treaty with the Choctaws, Chickasaws, &c., by which the Government agreed to renew all payments to these Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did the Government, however, by that treaty in 1866 agree to pay the interest on these bonds in which the Indian fund had been invested?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. These were bonds in the United States Treasury belonging to these Indians. The Chickasaws sold certain lands, and the Government agreed to take their money and invest it for them as a trustee, in good, safe, interest-paying bonds. That, I believe, is the language of the agreement. We invested that money in Arkansas and Tennessee bonds that were not good, that are not paying interest. Now, as trustee of those Indians, we are bound in all conscience and good faith to pay the interest as it falls due, (and we have always done it,) waiting for the States to pay the bonds if they ever shall do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would throw a great deal of light on the subject if the gentleman would have read the treaty of 1866 by which the Government agreed to pay interest on those bonds, and also the original agreement by which the Government bound itself to invest this money in safe securities.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The fifth article of the treaty of 1852 recites that—

The Chickasaws are desirous that the whole amount of their national funds shall remain with the United States in trust for the benefit of their people, and that the same shall on no account be diminished.

It was therefore agreed—these are the words—

That the United States shall continue to hold the said funds in trust as aforesaid, and shall constantly keep the same invested in safe and profitable stocks, the interest upon which shall be annually paid to the Chickasaw Nation.

Allow me to repeat that after the war broke out Congress passed an act postponing the payment of all sums due to the Chickasaws, Choctaws, &c., on account of some of them having been, as was said, disloyal. After the war was over the following provision was made in the tenth article of the treaty of 1866:

The United States reaffirm all obligations arising under treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations entered into prior to the late rebellion and in force at that time not inconsistent herewith.

That is the provision of the treaty of 1866 upon which the Secretary of the Interior has in his annual estimates recommended the payment of this interest. There is no reason, so far as I see or know, why this payment should not be made.

Mr. MAYNARD. These bonds belonged, as I understand, to the Indian tribes.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. They do.

Mr. MAYNARD. They were their property?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAYNARD. How large a portion of them was stolen prior to the war by officials of the Government, so that the bonds themselves are no longer in the possession of the Government?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The amount of bonds stolen that belonged to the Indians was $870,000. But none of those bonds are included in this amount. These bonds were not stolen. They are still in the Treasury; but the interest is not paid.

Mr. MAYNARD. What disposition has been made in reference to those stolen bonds?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. There never has been any except that the Government annually appropriates for the payment of the interest on them.

Mr. MAYNARD. I submit to the gentleman this legal proposition: Suppose this was not a question between the United States and Indian tribes, but a question between a trustee and a beneficiary or cestui que trust; would we not, upon the ordinary principles governing such a fiduciary relation, be liable for the interest on those bonds and for the payment of the bonds themselves when they fall due?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I have no doubt of it myself as a lawyer.

Mr. MAYNARD. And this interest has been paid annually ever since the treaty of 1866?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. We are paying it every year.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is simply the ordinary appropriation?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee what rate per cent. we are paying.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Five per cent. on the Arkansas bonds and 6 per cent. on the Tennessee bonds.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by putting the rate of interest at 4½ per cent. per annum, making it agree with the amount fixed in the other amendment. It covers the same period of time, and what is right in one case will certainly be right in the other. I understand the case to be that the Government invested these trust funds of the Indians in bonds; and as at the time there were not many bonds of the United States out, the investment was made in State bonds. As many of the States have not paid interest on these bonds, I suppose in strict law we are responsible for the payment of the interest, because we made the investment of these trust funds. At the same time the Government of the United States used reasonable diligence, I have no doubt, in investing them as well as it knew how, and it seems to me if we pay 4½ per cent. now, (one of the forms we have agreed upon of our national debt,) we shall sufficiently discharge our obligation to these Indians.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I should like to ask the gentleman to explain how we can do that when we have a treaty with these Indians by which we agreed to invest in certain bonds?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not in certain bonds but some safe bonds.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. We invested in 6 per cent. bonds. After having invested in 6 per cent. bonds, to provide for paying only 4½ per cent. it seems to me would be a breach of faith with these Indians.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It has pained me, Mr. Chairman, very much in the last few years to hear sentiments avowed in the House like to the proposition that the Indian has and can have no rights this Government is bound to regard. Formerly we made treaties with them which we held to be obligatory, and when they were infracted there was great feeling of moral indignation throughout the country. Now the Indians have become comparatively few and weak and have wandered farther from the lands they held, and there seems to be a disposition to treat them as the weak are always treated by the strong. We made a solemn pact with this Indian tribe, that we would hold moneys which belonged to them and to which they were honestly entitled as a trust for their benefit and invest them securely. They were invested in such securities as those who had control of the Government at that time chose to select. We therefor became as to this Indian tribe sponsor for the security of these funds, and any attempt now to pay 4½ per cent., or, as some may suggest, three or two or even a lower rate of interest, (collecting this money from the creditors hereafter, as will certainly be done in the case of Tennessee,) would be a gross want of faith on our part. I trust therefore the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. GARFIELD. My colleague on the committee [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] states that treaty obligations required us to invest in bonds of the kind we did, and as it seems we are obliged to pay 6 per cent. interest, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POLAND reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I now demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two amendments on which I demand separate votes, the Choctaw and Chickasaw amendments.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the other amendments will be considered as concurred in.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question will be on the Choctaw amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION —. That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations of the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate, made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to pay to the treasurer of the said Choctaw Nation, or to such other agent as the council may designate, in bonds of the United States, bearing interest at 4½ per cent., of the description authorized by the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the funding of the national debt," the sum of $2,981,247.30, the amount of said award, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of said award until the payment thereof as herein provided: Provided, however, The sum of $250,000 heretofore paid in part discharge of said award shall be deducted from the amount at the date of said part payment; and that the payment of said award as herein directed shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of all the claims of the said nation and of those of the individual members thereof on account of said award: And provided further, That the said sum shall be paid by the said treasurer or agent, under the direction and supervision of the United States Indian agent, to the claimants entitled thereto, as is provided and required by the twelfth article of said treaty of 1855: And provided further, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said award as herein provided, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act in approval of this act, and shall accept the payment of the said award, as herein provided, as a full discharge and satisfaction of all the claims of the said nation, or of individual members thereof, on account of the said award: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not recognize, allow, or pay any claims or pretended claims which have heretofore been demanded, or which may hereafter be demanded, by any attorney or claim agent, or any pretended owner of said award, or any part thereof, or any pretended purchaser, or any contract or pretended contract, made on behalf of said Choctaw Nation for the payment of any compensation or fees for the prosecution of the claim of said nation against the Government of the United States.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] to allow the previous question to be reconsidered that a correction may be made. The change from 5 per cent. to 4½ per cent. has been made in one case but has been omitted in the other.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. SHANKS. Let the clause be read which it is proposed to amend.

The Clerk read as follows:

In order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to pay to the treasurer of said Choctaw Nation, or to such other agent as the council may designate, in bonds of the United States bearing interest at 4½ per cent., of the description authorized by the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," the sum of $2,981,247.30, the amount of the said award, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of said award until the payment thereof, as herein provided.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make the correction I have indicated that the rates may correspond in both clauses.

Mr. SHANKS. That was not the understanding at all. The understanding was that the 4½ per cent. should be for the future and not for the past.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It would make the sum a little less than $4,000,000, instead of a little over $4,000,000.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the main question, for the purpose of moving the amendment which I send to the desk and ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$2,981,247" and insert "$2,332,561."

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Have I a right to say a word upon that?

The SPEAKER. If the House reconsiders the vote ordering the main question, it is left open to any amendment or any discussion.

The question being taken to reconsider the vote ordering the main question, there were—ayes 53, noes 55; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE and Mr. SHANKS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 81.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. As there is about a million dollars involved in this, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was presented by Mr. BABCOCK, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3593) to constitute Patchogue, on the south side of Long Island, a port of delivery.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is, will the House reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered? and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 110, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Archer, Arthur, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bradley, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burrows, Cannon, Chittenden, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clymer, Conger, Cotton, Cox, Crooke, Crounse, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Durham, Farwell, Field, Fink, Fort, Foster, Garfield, Glover, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Holman, Howe, Hubbell, Hyde, Kasson, Knapp, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lynch, Magee, Martin, McCrary, James W. McDill, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Monroe, Moore, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Pierce, Pike, Randall, Ray, Read, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sherwood, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Storm, Taylor, Thompson, Todd, Townsend, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Wolfe, and Pierce M. B. Young—124.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Berry, Bowen, Bright, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Cook, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Crutchfield, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Dunnell, Eames, Eldredge, Freeman, Giddings, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Hoskins, Houghton, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Leach, Lowe, Lowndes, Maynard, McLean, Morey, Negley, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Rapier, Robbins, Rusk, Sawyer, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Sloss, Small, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Stone, Strait, Swann, Sypher, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Tremain, Vance, Waddell, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, and Willie—110.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albright, Barnum, Bass, Beck, Burleigh, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Corwin, Duell, Eden, Frye, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Lansing, Luttrell, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mills, Mitchell, Myers, Nesmith, Parsons, Phelps, Potter, Purman, Ransier, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Smart, George L. Smith, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Charles R. Thomas, Tyner, Walls, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, Woodworth, and John D. Young—54.

So the House agreed to reconsider the vote ordering the main question.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I do not desire to open this bill for discussion, but to have a vote by yeas and nays on the proposition which I have sent to the desk, and which I ask the Clerk again to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "$2,981,247" and inserting "$2,332,561."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman explain why that $600,000 should be taken off?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. There have been a number of reports on this subject from committees of both Houses, including one from the Committee on Appropriations of this House made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] and every one of those reports, with the exception of one of them from the Committee on Indian Affairs of last session, fixed this amount at $2,330,000.

The first report was made by Mr. Sebastian to the United States Senate in May, 1860. And in that report he goes very lengthily into the question, and fixes the amount due this tribe at $2,330,000. Since that time the following committees have similarly reported: On the 10th of May, 1860, the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House reported, fixing the amount as it was fixed by Mr. Sebastian. On the 30th of May, 1868, the Committee on Appropriations of this House, by Mr. BUTLER, reported in favor of making the appropriation, and fixed the amount as in my amendment. On the 22d of June, 1870, the Judiciary Committee of the Senate reported an amendment to the Senate bill providing for a funding of the balance of the Choctaw net proceeds and fixed the amount the same as in my amendment. On the 6th of July, 1868, the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, by Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, reported in favor of House bill No. 1195 for the payment of this claim, and fixed the sum as in this amendment. At the last session of this Congress the Committee on Appropriations of this House reported this claim in the bill appropriating for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, and fixed the amount the same as in the amendment. So that every committee who has ever examined this question during the past ten years has fixed the amount the same as I fix it in that amendment, except the Committee on Indian Affairs, by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO,] at the last session of this Congress.

This $600,000 proposed to be deducted from the original amount claimed is principal; and that has been on interest for over ten years, amounting now to over $1,000,000. Now I say that I am in favor of settling this claim honestly by paying every dollar that is due to the tribe; but I do not propose to pay more than is recommended in the reports of some seven committees of both Houses, commencing with Mr. Sebastian's committee in the Senate, in which he goes into the matter very lengthily. I might mention further that the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, through Senator Harlan, made a report in which they fix the amount at the same sum. The whole thing has been fully examined by all these committees.

I demand the previous question on my amendment.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman will not demand the previous question now. The House has opened this whole matter, many gentlemen voting to reopen it with the understanding that other amendments perfecting this amendment would be offered.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. O, no; there was no such understanding. I insist on the previous question.

Mr. KELLOGG. We have discussed this question for three whole days.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. We do not ask discussion, but we do want an opportunity to offer amendments.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and on a division there were ayes 79, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put, being first upon the amendment offered by Mr. LOUGHRIDGE to the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to reduce the amount of the appropriation $600,000.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Is not the motion divisible?

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to strike out and insert; and that motion is never divisible.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and on a division there were ayes 81, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. HALE of Maine, called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered upon the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 101, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Ashe, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bell, Berry, Blount, Brown, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Corwin, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Crutchfield, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Dunnell, Eames, Eldridge, Finck, Freeman, Garfield, Giddings, Glover, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamar, Leach, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Martin, Maynard, James W. McDill, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Moore, Morey, Negley, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Read, Richmond, Robbins, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sloan, Sloss, Small, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Stone, Strait, Swann, Sypher, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Townsend, Vance, Waddell, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Whitthorne, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, Willie, Wolfe, and John D. Young—139.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Archer, Arthur, Atkins, Banning, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bland, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Cannon, Carpenter, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clymer, Coburn, Conger, Cook, Cox, Curtis, Danford, Dobbins, Donnan, Durham, Farwell, Field, Fort, Foster, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, John T. Harris, Harrison, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Holman, Howe, Hyde, Kasson, Knapp, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Magee, McCrary, McNulta, Merriam, Monroe, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, O'Brien, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pierce, Pike, Randall, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Sener, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, St. John, Storm, Thompson, Todd, Tyner, Waldron, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Pierce M. B. Young—101.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barnum, Beck, Bradley, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. Cobb, Cotton, Crounse, Duell, Eden, Frye, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Luttrell, Lynch, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Myers, Nesmith, Niles, Phelps, Potter, Purman, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Isaac W. Scudder, Smart, George L. Smith, Stephens, Stowell, Strawbridge, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Tremain, Walls, Wheeler, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, and Woodworth—48.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. COMINGO moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as amended, was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next and last amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on which a separate vote was asked for was then read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to pay to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians upon the passage of this act the following arrears of interest due to said tribe:

Arrears of interest on $90,000 Arkansas 6 per cent. bonds from July 1, 1852, to July 1, 1866, $75,000.

Arrears of interest on $616,000 Tennessee 6 per cent. bonds from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $203,280.

Arrears of interest on $66,666.66⅔ Tennessee 5½ per cent. bonds from January 25, 1861, to July 1, 1866, $19,010.25.

And that the same be paid to the said tribe in bonds of the United States of any issue authorized by law and bearing 4½ per cent. interest.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let us have the yeas and nays on the bill itself.

Mr. CESSNA. Let them be taken upon its final passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I ask for the yeas and nays upon the engrossment of the bill, and let that be a test-vote.

The question was put upon ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were—ayes 24, noes 88.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 121, not voting, 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Berry, Bradley, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Corwin, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Dunnell, Eames, Freeman, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Leach, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, James W. McDill, McLean, Moore, Morey, Negley, Niles, Orr, Orth, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, Sawyer, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sloan, Sloss, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, St. John, Stone, Strait, Swann, Sypher, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tremain, Vance, Waddell, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whiteley, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, and William Williams—112.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Beck, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Caldwell, Cannon, Clayton, Clymer, Coburn, Conger, Cook, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Curtis, Danford, Dobbins, Donnan, Durham, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Finck, Fort, Foster, Giddings, Glover, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Herndon, Holman, Howe, Hyde, Kasson, Knapp, Lamport, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Magee, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, O'Brien, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pierce, Pike, Potter, Randall, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Speer, Sprague, Storm, Strawbridge, Thompson, Todd, Tyner, Waldron, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, James Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—121.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barnum, Bass, Amos Clark, jr., John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Cotton, Cox, Duell, Eden, Frye, Garfield, Hereford, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Lamar, Lamison, Lansing, Luttrell, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Myers, Nesmith, Nunn, Phelps, Poland, Purman, Read, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Smart, George L. Smith, Southard, Stephens, Stowell, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Walls, Wheeler, Ephraim K. Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—55.

So the bill was rejected.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE, who had voted in the affirmative, changed his vote to the negative, stating that he did so for the purpose of being enabled to move a reconsideration.

After the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed.

Mr. FORT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to allow a motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Allow me to suggest that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out the Choctaw claim. That is where the whole fight has been.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We had better adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a report from a board composed of one person named by the head of each executive department and of the Department of Agriculture and Smithsonian Institution, for the purpose of securing a complete and harmonious arrangement of the articles and materials designed to be exhibited from the Executive Departments of the Government at the international exhibition to be held in the city of Philadelphia in the year 1876 for the purpose of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the Independence of the United States. The report gives a statement of what is proposed to be exhibited by each Deparment, together with an estimate of the expense which will have to be incurred. Submitting to Congress the estimate made by the board, I recommend that Congress make a suitable appropriation to enable the different Departments to make a complete and creditable showing of the articles and materials designed to be exhibited by the Government, and which will undoubtedly form one of the most interesting features of the exhibition.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
January 20, 1875.

The message, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial Celebration, and ordered to be printed.

ARMAMENT FOR SEA-COAST DEFENSES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my annual message of December 1, 1873, while inviting general attention to all the recommendations made by the Secretary of War, your special consideration was invited to "the importance of preparing for war in time of peace by providing proper armament for our sea-coast defenses. Proper armament is of vastly more importance than fortifications. The latter can be supplied very speedily for temporary purposes when needed; the former cannot."

These views gain increased strength and pertinence as the years roll by, and I have now again the honor to call special attention to the condition of the "armament of our fortifications" and the absolute necessity for immediate provision by Congress for the procurement of heavy cannon. The large expenditures required to supply the number of guns for our forts is the strongest argument that can be adduced for a liberal annual appropriation for their gradual accumulation. In time of war such preparations cannot be made, cannon cannot be purchased in open market, nor manufactured at short notice; they must be the product of years of experience and labor.

I herewith inclose copies of a report of the Chief of Ordnance and of a board of ordnance officers on the trial of an eight-inch rifle converted from a ten-inch smooth-bore, which shows very conclusively an economical means of utilizing these useless smooth-bores and making them into eight-inch rifles capable of piercing seven inches of iron. The twelve hundred and ninety-four ten-inch Rodman guns should in my opinion be so utilized, and the appropriation requested by the Chief of Ordnance of $250,000 to commence these conversions is urgently recommended.

While convinced of the economy and necessity of these conversions, the determination of the best and most economical method of providing guns of still larger caliber should no longer be delayed. The experience of other nations, based on the new conditions of defense brought prominently forward by the introduction of iron-clads into every navy afloat, demands heavier metal and rifle-guns of not less than twelve inches in caliber. These enormous masses, hurling a shot of seven hundred pounds, can alone meet many of the requirements of the national defenses. They must be provided, and experiments on a large scale can alone give the data necessary for the determination of the question. A suitable proving-ground, with all the facilities and conveniences referred to by the Chief of Ordnance, with a liberal annual appropriation, is an undoubted necessity. The guns now ready for trial cannot be experimented with without funds, and the estimate of $250,000 for the purpose is deemed reasonable, and is strongly recommended.

The constant appeals for legislation on the "armament of fortifications" ought no longer to be disregarded, if Congress desires in peace to prepare the important material without which future wars must inevitably lead to disaster.

This subject is submitted with the hope that the consideration it deserves may be given it at the present session.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
January 20, 1875.

The SPEAKER. The message of the President, with the accompanying paper, will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see why.

Mr. GARFIELD. It asks for an appropriation for guns.

The SPEAKER. There is no law requiring the appropriation to be made.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; let it go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The message was referred accordingly, and ordered to be printed

RECUSANT WITNESS—CHARLES A. WETMORE.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms appears at the bar of the House with the witness, Charles A. Wetmore, who was on yesterday placed in his custody. It is the duty of the Chair again to address the witness: Mr. Charles A. Wetmore, are you now prepared to answer the question asked by the Committee on Ways and Means, and for the refusal to answer which you have been placed in custody?

CHARLES A. WETMORE. I cannot answer the question unless it be modified; and I have prepared a statement to show why I cannot answer it. I hope the House will indulge me in listening to it.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the action of this House, I have been afforded a brief opportunity to prepare myself for a final answer to this charge of contempt, which is now pending in the form of resolution. I did not yesterday, when called upon for an immediate answer why I should not be punished for contempt, feel that I could, under the circumstances, do myself justice or treat this House with the respect that is rightfully demanded from every citizen of the United States of America, of which I am one only. There were several reasons why I felt constrained to ask the indulgence of time, some of which I stated yesterday. I feel confident that the members who voted for the adjournment which has given me the required time will not regret their action, which has so far prevented an American citizen from being unjustly branded to the world as in contempt of this body. I cannot to-day answer directly the question addressed to me by you. I am required to give the name of the person who related to me by hearsay that a check had been traced from Mr. Fant to Mr. BECK. That you may fairly judge of the merits of my case before adjudging me to be in contempt, I shall try, as respectfully as possible, to relate to you the manner of my examination before the Committee on Ways and Means, by which I was forced into the position in which I stand before you to-day. I received Monday noon a telegraphic dispatch from the Sergeant-at-Arms, requiring me to appear before the committee forthwith. Not desiring to appear in contempt of even the desires of the committee, though not legally summoned, I hastened to the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms and received a subpœna. I then saw Mr. DAWES, chairman of the committee; told him that I had no knowledge of the disposition of any of the sums of money which have been traced, as it is currently reported, "to the very doors of Congress," and asked him if the committee could not examine me in private at once. All the information that I could possibly have would be such as might assist them in prosecuting their inquiries. I told him also that I desired to assist the committee as far as I could legitimately, and would be happy to be questioned at any time, provided I was not to be placed upon the inquisitorial gridiron in the position of a reluctant witness. He answered me that he would make this statement to the committee when I appeared, and intimated that I should be treated fairly.

I next learned that I had been subpœnaed at the request of Mr. BECK, to be examined with reference to dispatches sent by me to the Alta California. In all good faith I then cut from a file of that paper all the dispatches that I had sent on the subject of the Pacific Mail subsidy investigation, and carried them with me yesterday morning to the committee room.

Before proceeding further on this subject, as I do not wish to appear hostile to the committee, or any of its members, I will say that the course of proceedings pursued in my case was probably sufficiently warranted by honored precedents, except that the possibilities were very severely realized yesterday. I shall complain to this House, therefore, only of the manner of examination, which must have been adopted originally by some persons who were perhaps desirous of causing such examinations to be conducted so that the evidence of all witnesses might tend to prove a preordained judgment of the examining body. I complain of this now in behalf of future witnesses, in the name of justice, and to protect me from the apparent consequences of the action respecting me yesterday.

In the first place, I had no counsel, while each interrogator was supported by a large body of experienced committee-men. Mr. DAWES alluded among his first questions to my dispatches to the Alta California. I told him that I had all the dispatches on the subject sent by me, which had then reached this city in a published form, and offered to read them to the committee, as they all related to the subjects upon which I was being investigated. The precedent of the manner of examination, however, ruled, and I was plunged at once, without preparation, into a cross-examination, and first required to give the foundation and reasons upon which I had formed a certain opinion, and which I had telegraphed as a matter of judgment based on several weeks of observation. I told Mr. DAWES that my basis for such judgment would be more apparent—at least I could refresh my memory better—if he would permit me to review the chain of ideas and circumstances which had led me to such conclusions, and which were more particularly set forth in my previous dispatches. This privilege was denied me, although it had been extended to some other witnesses as a matter of favor, I suppose, inasmuch as it was a departure from precedent. My cross-examination by Mr. DAWES necessarily produced confusion in my recollection and ideas. I could not tell him positively how I could fully account for certain opinions, because my dispatches were of a current character, based on the rumors, established facts, and the circumstantial evidence of the day when they were written, to recollect which a correspondent must have considerable time for reflection. [Laughter.]

I ask of the Speaker that I may be treated with respect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not noticed any evidence of disrespect.

CHARLES A. WETMORE. I understood it to be such.

This examination necessarily tended to place me in a false light before the public, to make me appear ridiculous, and was calculated to extinguish entirely any light on the subject which might possibly be expected to come from me, if I had been permitted to unravel my own recollection and suffer cross-examination afterward.

When Mr. DAWES turned me over to Mr. BECK, he (Mr. DAWES) arose nervously from his seat and said something which I thought I heard, something like this: "There! I guess I've scalped that fellow!" I should be very much pleased to hear Mr. DAWES say that I did not hear his words correctly. I should have called upon him myself for an explanation if I had not been under arrest ever since the committee meeting. I may have been so confused by the manner of his examination that I did hear his remark incorrectly—as it was in an undertone, or whispered monologue addressed apparently to the window.

When Mr. BECK commenced his cross-examination I was somewhat prepared for the gridiron, but was naturally somewhat ruffled and confused. When he asked me whether I could recollect the name of the person who had related to me a certain rumor—one rumor out of a great many which I have heard and hear every day—I tried to collect myself and thought that I did distinctly recollect the person, and I was not disposed to dodge; but that person was a friend, whose confidence I would not on such an occasion abuse without further consideration of the subject. Therefore I asked for time, which was not granted. Instead thereof I was absolutely rushed before the bar of the House, when I obtained the required time, which I hope will result fortunately for me.

I now, Mr. Speaker, protest in the name of every American citizen who is in sympathy with a spirit of justice and whose supreme power, as of the people, is greater than the power of this House, though slower in action, against such examinations in future. I feel that I have a right to make this protest, and do it without any personal feeling against any member of this body and not in a spirit of vindictiveness. I am one of the American people and I am conscientiously engaged in serving one portion of that people. If I make mistakes I am willing to be corrected and to correct, but will rebel to my utmost strength and will tax my brain and my pen to the utmost to protect myself and the people in their inalienable rights.

I have now to say, in conclusion, that since leaving the House yesterday I have been busied, and so have others, to ascertain what my true position was and what my course should be. I have been surprised, however, to find that I did not fix the right rumor upon the right man, and I am relieved from that burden of mind; but am I guilty of perjury? If so, such is the certain result of such unusual and unjust examinations as that to which I was subjected. Having ascertained this fact by circumstantial evidence called to my recollection and the positive denial of the person, I tried to think in other directions for an origin, and it occurred to me that it might have been impressed upon me during some one of my interviews with Mr. Irwin, or might have been dropped by some one of his friends in company. I saw Mr. Irwin and asked him whether it was true that I had heard the statement from him. He answered that he had not said anything of the kind—he felt certain of it; but that if I thought so I was at perfect liberty to say so.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot now give the name of any party to whom I may trace my information; but if Mr. BECK will assist me in assisting himself—that is, in finding out who the guilty parties are, so that he and all honest men may be shown innocent in this maelstrom of overwhelming charges, so that the goats may be selected from the sheep, and so that the sheep thus selected to themselves may by the Darwinian process of investigation grow purer and purer until they become angels of virtue—then perhaps I can find for him the exact origin of the rumor, which I can do much better with my liberty than with these portending chains. I hope I have satisfied this House that, even if I was in contempt of its privileges yesterday, to-day I cannot answer the question, because I find that I was mistaken in my recollection of one of the thousand incidents that have occurred in the course of my inquiry on this subject.

I thank the House for the indulgence that I have enjoyed, and I most respectfully address myself to the investigating committee, and say that, although I believe that a public inquisitorial body is a farce in the name of justice, yet when one is undertaken they will find me their co-operator in good faith and the bitter enemy of all buncombe. I will meet any member of the committee or of this House, who through the falsity or insufficiency of information given me, which I may have believed worthy of publication at the time, may have suffered unintentional misrepresentation, and I will sift to the bottom with their assistance, for their individual benefit and the cause of truth, any rumors and statements, and will make all the reparation that can be demanded for any wrong that I may have unintentionally caused, only I ask such treatment also for myself, and demand it in my right as a citizen, whether free or whether under arrest.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your courtesy to me during this matter, and am ready, though not willing, to go to jail or any place else that may be selected for me; but I desire liberty, and hope and expect that with this statement it will be granted.

Mr. DAWES. I offered last night the following resolution:

Resolved, That Charles A. Wetmore having been heard by the House of Representatives, pursuant to an order heretofore made requiring him to show cause why he should not answer the question propounded to him by the committee and by the Speaker of this House in obedience to its order, has failed to show sufficient cause why he should not answer the same; and that the said Charles A. Wetmore be considered in contempt of the House for the failure to make answer thereto.

Mr. Speaker, that was the form of resolution which it struck me last night was proper to be adopted by the House; but after the remarkable statement that has been made in the presence of the House by this witness I am somewhat in doubt whether it is not becoming, and not only becoming but required on the part of the House, to add something to that resolution. I do not intend myself to make any reply, either in behalf of myself or of the committee, to anything that has been said in the answer of the witness. To my mind he has given no reason why he should not answer the question; and therefore that much of this resolution seems to me absolutely necessary.

I am not quite ready to offer any amendment or addition to that resolution, growing out of the character of this answer, because I think that the House should with deliberation set its seal of condemnation upon that answer. I do not know that any movement in that direction would come with propriety from the committee itself. The answer is an arraignment of the committee in a manner which the House has heard and which I will not characterize. It is such an arraignment of the committee as seems to me proper for the House itself to take in hand, not for the committee.

The committee is the organ of the House. A witness comes in here and in its hearing arraigns this committee. I am not able without consultation to express the sentiments of my colleagues on the committee; but so far as I am concerned I prefer, without asking anything from the House in behalf of the committee, to let the House express its own sense of the propriety of such conduct in its presence.

I ask the House to adopt the resolution which I have offered; but I deem it proper to give this reason why I did not propose anything further: It strikes me that it does not become the committee to ask the House to vindicate its course. Let the House do that if it sees fit; if not, let the committee take the condemnation which a contumacious witness comes into their presence and turns upon them, when they have brought him here to show cause in a respectful manner why he should not answer the question which has been propounded to him.

Mr. LAMAR. I wish to make just one remark. I cannot vote for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] after the statement which has been made by this witness. It seems to me that he has purged himself of the contempt—at all events he is no longer contumacious. I have nothing to say as to the manner or decorum with which he has shown cause why he did not answer yesterday; but he has answered here explicitly and positively that it is beyond his power to give the name of his informant for the reason that he knows of no such informant. He has distinctly and unqualifiedly declared to the House that he cannot call to mind any person from whom he derived any information as to the rumors published by him. I think that he has very strongly intimated to the House that he himself thinks he had placed the wrong rumor upon the wrong man in what he telegraphed to the California paper. At any rate, I do not think that he is persisting in his refusal to answer the question, for he has answered it by saying that he does not remember.

Mr. DAWES. The testimony that was brought before the House shows that this witness, when yesterday asked this question, gave another reason for declining to answer—that he could not answer without betraying confidence, and that he wanted time to confer with his informant. He does not now show any reason why yesterday he did not answer the question. He is brought before the House to show cause why he did not answer yesterday. If he does not remember now who his informant was, he did not remember yesterday; and he was as able to answer yesterday that he did not remember as to so answer to-day.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to yield to me to offer a substitute for his resolution.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let me put an inquiry. I wish to inquire whether this witness has tendered as an answer to the committee that he did not know or could not state the name of his informant. It should be remembered that this statement which he has made here to the House is not under oath at all. The contempt consists in the refusal to answer a question put by the committee. Now, if he should say to the committee under oath, so that he would be liable to the penalties of perjury, that he could not say who his informant was, that might purge him of the contempt; but he does not purge himself by merely coming in and making an unsworn statement to the House that he cannot now remember who his informant was.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would like to know from the chairman of the committee, or perhaps from the Speaker, whether the Speaker has put the question to him.

Several MEMBERS. O, yes.

Mr. LAMAR. I have but one more remark to make.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the substitute of the gentleman from New York read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. ELDREDGE. It should be apparent to everybody without my stating it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is as much quiet as there will be to make members resume their seats.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That may be; but if members take their seats we can all hear what is going on. We are all anxious to hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin insists on his point of order that members shall resume their places.

Mr. DAWES. Members having resumed their places and order being restored, I now ask the Clerk to read the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles A. Wetmore, having, under the guise and pretense of answering to a charge of contempt, been guilty of a series of gross and wanton insults to this House, be and hereby is adjudged in contempt thereof and committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to be detained in the common jail of the District until the further order of the House.

MEMBERS on both sides of the House. Question! Question!

Mr. GARFIELD. I have a single word to say.

MEMBERS on both sides of the House. Vote! Vote!

Mr. GARFIELD. You cannot get through by calling "Vote! Vote!"

Mr. DAWES. I will answer the gentleman from Ohio. This witness has made no profer to answer the committee. I will read to the House what he asked time for last night:

I ask until to-morrow, so I may obtain permission to furnish the committee with evidence as to the origin of the rumor which was related to me only as hearsay evidence, and not with intention to make it public.

Mr. LAMAR. Allow me to make a suggestion here, and it is this, that there is in the statement of the witness to-day an explanation, full and complete, of his answer, or if you please his failure to answer yesterday. He says he has consulted with that friend from whom he supposed he had derived his impressions as to the origin of certain rumors; he had, in short, applied to his supposed informant, Irwin, and that Irwin assured him he is mistaken; that the rumors to which he referred in his answers to the committee did not originate with him; and therefore he now states to the House that he does not know who his informant is. He certainly is not now in contempt, he does not refuse to answer; he does not defy the authority of the House or of the committee. He answers that he is unable to give the author of the rumors he has published, because he knows of no such author. If necessary he can repeat that statement on oath to the committee. But I see nothing in the case which will justify this House in sending the witness to jail. I have nothing to say in defense of the manner in which he has deported himself in the presence of the House.

MEMBERS on both sides of the House. Vote! vote!

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say to the gentleman from Mississippi this witness began his statement by the declaration that he would not answer the question which had been propounded to him, and he stands on that now, whatever explanation he may have made.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I have made a verbal modification of my resolution, adding that these insults were in the presence of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. The only question I have to raise is one the House ought to hear whether there is anything in it or not. There is this trouble in my mind: The answer of the witness in the presence of the House has I know raised in the minds of a number of gentlemen, and in my own, the question whether he is of sound mind. If you think he is this resolution ought to pass; if not, some milder form ought to be adopted.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether he intends to send this witness to jail because his answer is an insult to this House, or because of his refusal to answer the question propounded to him by the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I think if the gentleman from California will listen to the resolution I have introduced he will find his question fully answered.

Mr. BERRY. Let the resolution, as modified, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Charles A. Wetmore, having under the guise and pretense of answering to a charge of contempt, been guilty of a series of gross and wanton insults to this House in the presence of the House, be and hereby is adjudged in contempt thereof, and committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms to be detained in the common jail of the District until the further order of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I call for the previous question on the resolution and substitute therefor.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The substitute of Mr. HALE, of New York, was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

Mr. PAGE and Mr. CROOKE demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were ayes 13, noes not counted.

Mr. PAGE demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 14 having voted therefor.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution, as amended by the substitute of Mr. HALE, of New York, was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What has become of my motion?

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before the motion to adjourn is put, will the Chair please to state what will be the position of the Indian appropriation bill if the House should now adjourn?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I insist on my motion that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put that motion. At the same time, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] having asked what will be the position of the bill if the House should now adjourn, the Chair thinks that it is very important that members should understand this. The Chair will therefore state that the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the engrossment and third reading of the bill goes over as a privileged motion and comes up the first thing after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

PACIFIC MAIL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent that certain testimony by Charles H. Harney and George W. Wiley, taken this morning before the Ways and Means Committee, bearing upon a matter somewhat personal to myself, be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The testimony is as follows:

CHARLES H. HARNEY, sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. State your name, residence, and business.

Answer. My name is Charles H. Harney; residence, New York City; business, banker and broker.

Q. How long have you been engaged in business in New York?

A. About twelve years.

Q. From what State did you go?

A. From Lexington, Kentucky.

Q. State how long you have known me?

A. I have known you since I was a boy of about nineteen, and I am now forty-one years of age.

Q. State what you know about this Pacific Mail subsidy, the introduction of Mr. Wiley to me, and any other matter connected therewith.

A. The first I knew of the matter was when Mr. Wiley solicited from me a letter to you suggesting that he wished such a letter as would be of service to him in recommending him to you, with a view to obtain your support upon the question of the subsidy which was about to come before Congress. I asked him why he wanted a letter, and he went on to say that Mr. Stockwell had agreed that if he could obtain your support he would give him an interest in some puts and calls on the Pacific Mail stock. I said "George, I see nothing wrong in that; I will write you a letter to Mr. BECK." I did so.

Q. State the general character of that letter. Did you intimate to me anything about any calls or puts?

A. Not at all. I merely wrote saying that I introduced Mr. George Wiley, a friend and customer of our house; that he visited Washington City interested in the Pacific Mail subsidy, and that if you could conscientiously support the bill I would like you to do so. It was a general letter.

Q. How early was that?

A. I hardly remember the winter. I think it was 1872-'73. It was very early in the beginning, and before scarcely any publicity had been attached to the Pacific Mail affairs.

Q. Do you remember whether it was as early as February, or about February?

A. I could not say that it was; but my impression is that it was about that time.

Q. After that time, did you see any proceedings in the matter, hear anything about it, or did you ever talk to Mr. Wiley about what I had done?

A. None whatever, except that after a while Mr. Wiley came back. First, however, he wrote me from Washington, asking if I could not write another letter to Mr. BECK and make it stronger. I wrote him that I could not; that I considered, after the letter I had written, any more in that direction would appear as an insult. I declined to do so.

Q. After that did he make a report to you?

A. He returned. The thing progressed; there was a good deal of excitement in Wall street attending the passage of the bill. I noticed that you made speeches against it, and when George came back I thought he was a little cut down that his influence had not been sufficient with you to get you to support the measure. I said nothing at all to him about it.

Q. About the last of December I wrote you a note, calling attention to a telegram which, I am sorry to say, I have searched for in vain. It was a telegram which purported to have come from Mr. Wiley to me. Do you remember my letter to you on that subject?

A. I do not remember the exact date, but I know it was written some month or so ago. That letter which I received from you stated that you had gotten a dispatch signed G. W. Wiley, somewhat to this effect: "Don't go too far." You said in your letter also: "I hate mysteries; can you explain? I don't know what it means, unless it alludes to the Pacific Mail affair." I think it was about that time that the committee was organized and was meeting. That letter I immediately handed to Mr. Wiley, expressed my astonishment at it, and asked him if he could explain.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Did he submit that reply to you before he sent it?

A. I think he did. He submitted a reply to me. When I submitted that letter to him I said, "I suppose you can explain?" He said, "Certainly I can; I didn't send such a dispatch." He can tell you more about that matter than I can.

Q. Do you remember that I said to you in that letter that I did not know Mr. Wylie's address, and therefore wrote you upon the subject, as you had introduced him to me?

A. Yes, sir; you said that you had received some communication through him from me; that you had seen him in my office, or something of that kind.

Q. In the Republican of yesterday morning this editorial appears:

"It is observable in the testimony of H. G. Fant before the Committee on Ways and Means that he testifies he employed one G. W. Wiley to see Congressman JAMES BECK, of Kentucky, as to his course on the Pacific Mail subsidy. It is true that Mr. BECK claims to have spoken and voted against the subsidy. In a republican House of two-thirds majority, might not that have been the very thing wanted of Mr. BECK to insure the passage of the bill? Why have not the committee called Mr. G. W. Wiley? Why was Mr. Wiley, a New Yorker, engaged with the house of Harney & Searl, brokers, 67 Exchange Place, New York, sent to Mr. BECK? May it not appear that a distinguished democratic Senator from Missouri received, say, $30,000 through calls on the Pacific Mail through Stockwell, paid through Harney & Searl? May not an examination of Harney & Searl's books, Stockwell and his books, show to whom that was paid and how it was divided? Let this branch of the subject be investigated by the present Congress."

Do you know, or have you reason to believe, or have you information that would tend to induce you to believe—putting it in the broadest possible sense—that any one ever applied to me, offering me money, or giving me money, or suggesting that I could get money, or other thing of value, or stocks could be carried for me, or anything else in any shape or form?

A. You can make it just as broad as you like. I would not suppose that any man would dare to do it. Of course I do not.

Q. Did you ever hear of any information that anybody had on that subject, or did you ever know of anybody suggesting anything about it?

A. I never heard of anything of this kind until the newspaper article appeared.

Q. So far as you know, I believe you have been the only man with whom I have done business in New York since you have been there?

A. I have always supposed so. You were a friend of ours, and whenever you came to New York and had anything in our line of business to do, or whenever you had anything to communicate through the mails, you always did it with us, I judge.

Q. Did you ever hear of my doing business anywhere else in that city?

A. I never did.

Q. Your books are referred to in that article. Was there ever anything on your books, either in the shape of money, stocks, calls on stocks—state it in any form you please—in which I was connected either directly or indirectly?

A. Never, sir.

Q. Did I ever deal in any stocks to your knowledge?

A. Never.

Q. Did you ever hear of my doing so?

A. This whole matter is so absurd that I hardly deem it worth denying. I will, however, answer your questions as you go along. You never had any transactions in stocks, either directly or indirectly, with Harvey & Sons or myself or anybody else that I ever heard of. I can say that with all frankness and truthfulness.

Q. You are the only correspondent, so far as you know, whom I have in New York?

A. That is so, as far as I know.

Q. In reference to the last portion of that article in the Republican, I wish to make my question to you as to the carrying of stocks, or interest in stocks, or anything that your books show, very broad. Was there anything carried on your books in the name of any human being in which I had any interest, either directly or indirectly?

A. No, sir; none at all.

By Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS:

Q. I think it would be as well for the witness, now that he is here, to answer as to other members of Congress. Did you ever carry any stock or in any way render any service for any member of Congress for his vote or influence upon the question of the Pacific Mail subsidy?

A. I never did.

Q. Did you in any way have any relation with Mr. Irwin in this transaction?

A. Never. I do not know the gentleman; have never seen him.

Q. Did you have any knowledge, or did you have any information which led you to believe that any member of either House was interested at the time in the stock operations of this company?

A. No, sir; I never did.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Were you here at the time of the passage of the subsidy?

A. No, sir; I was in New York.

Q. Had you anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the passage of the bill?

A. Nothing whatever.

GEORGE W. WILEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. State your name, residence, and business.

Answer. My name is George W. Wiley; residence Astoria, Long Island. I am a broker, in connection with the house of Oppenheim & Brothers, of New York.

Q. You have heard the testimony of Mr. Harney and his statement of your connection with him, have you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. State in your own way all the connection you ever had with me relative to this Pacific Mail subsidy—how you came to see me, and all that took place. I desire to have the broadest statement of the facts.

A. I went to Mr. Harney and asked him if he would give me a letter of introduction to you; not an ordinary letter, but one which would recommend me to you as a gentleman of truth beyond question; that I had an important matter connected with my own interest to carry through, and if I could get a letter of that kind to Mr. BECK I could then make further arrangements for myself. Mr. Harney then said: "Well, what is it; I want to know." I said that it was the Pacific Mail matter. I said, "I can get some puts and calls on Pacific Mail if I can carry Mr. BECK's vote." Well, he said, "I think I will; I am in favor of the subsidy and interested in the stock myself." He gave me a letter to Mr. BECK. I came on and saw Mr. BECK with that letter, and found that he was opposed to the bill. He said that he was opposed to subsidies; that his (the democratic) party were opposed to subsidies in every particular. He said, "I don't think I can vote for this; I am sorry on Harney's account; I would do anything for Mr. Harney, and probably would strain a point if it was right, but I cannot vote for the bill." I got Mr. Stockwell afterward introduced to Mr. BECK, maybe by some other gentleman; I am not certain about that.

Q. Was not that introduction made by Mr. POTTER, of New York?

A. I think it was some gentleman whom I did not know at the time, and who knew Mr. Stockwell. Mr. Stockwell talked with Mr. BECK and to this other gentleman, whoever he was, at the same time, upon the subject of the Pacific Mail subsidy. When Mr. Stockwell came out I asked him what he thought about it. He said, "Well, I don't know; Mr. BECK seems to be opposed to the bill, but I think it is more than likely that he can be brought around; he is mistaken about the great commercial importance of this bill." I saw Mr. BECK once or twice, and probably two or three times afterward. Each time he gave me no assurance that he would vote for or make a speech in favor of the bill; whereupon I wrote a letter to Mr. Harney, saying, "Mr. BECK is decidedly opposed to the bill; won't you write him another letter, and a stronger one, to carry his interest?" Mr. Harney replied to me to the effect that he had stated all he could conscientiously say on the subject, and that anything further would be a reflection upon him and upon Mr. BECK, or probably an insult to Mr. BECK. I cannot remember the words of the letter, but it was of about that character of language.

Q. Do you remember bringing Mr. Irwin to see me?

A. When I received that last letter from Mr. Harney, I then cast around for other men of station by which I might reach Mr. BECK. I in the mean time had made the acquaintance of Mr. Irwin, who understood Pacific Mail thoroughly. I said to him, "If you will go with me and see Mr. BECK I will secure an interview, as I think it is possible that you may be able to combat every objection that he has." He said, "I will do it gladly and want just such an opportunity." In the course of a week or ten days, or probably not so long, Mr. BECK agreed to give me this interview with Mr. Irwin. I accordingly took Mr. Irwin to Mr. BECK, and they argued the point about an hour, or probably an hour and a half, and I supposed that Mr. Irwin was meeting every objection that Mr. BECK brought up. Mr. BECK would bring one objection and Mr. Irwin would argue it, and Mr. BECK would bring another, and so on, until the interview terminated.

Q. Was that in relation to the commercial advantages or disadvantages?

A. It was in relation to the commercial advantages and everything connected with Pacific Mail. Mr. Irwin had the matter so thoroughly settled in his own mind, and could argue it so well, that I supposed after that interview Mr. BECK's views would be changed; but they were not.

Q. Do you remember of my speaking and voting against the bill?

A. I do.

Q. Did you in any manner, directly or indirectly, at any time, ever suggest to me that there was money being used or paid in any form?

A. In no manner, shape, or form.

Q. Was any money, stocks, or calls on stocks, or anything else, either paid to me, or for me, or carried for me, or had I any connection with it so far as you knew or were advised?

A. I can say just this: that I did all I could to keep from you the fact that I had an interest in this matter.

Q. And you did?

A. And I did most positively. That is, if you did know it you knew it otherwise than through me.

Q. You never advised me anything about it?

A. I did not want you to know it for the reason that it might reflect somewhat upon Mr. Harney, as it was through Mr. Harney that I got the letter of introduction to you.

Q. And I did not know it as far as you know?

A. You did not.

Q. Did I in any shape or form, to your knowledge, or from any means from which you gathered, have any hint that there was money being used, receive any money, have any stocks carried for me, or have anything to do with stocks, or trade in them in any form?

A. In no way.

Q. So that you now state to this committee in substance that while you came with a letter from Mr. Harney to me, saw me, and used every legitimate argument, you not only did not tell me your own connection with it but no suggestion was made to me in relation to it from public reasons, to combat my views?

A. No other in the world. When I had the conversation with you on the subject of Pacific Mail, I felt my own want of knowledge of that matter so much that I at once sought for other means, and that means was Mr. Irwin. I knew him and his acquaintance with it, and knew that he was thoroughly posted upon the subject and could argue it thoroughly with any one.

Q. You never carried any stock in it in which I was interested either directly or indirectly?

A. No, sir; not a dollar.

Q. About the 21st of December last I received what purported to be a dispatch signed by you, saying to me in substance, "Don't go too far; parties excited." I wrote the substance of that dispatch to Mr. Harney in a letter which has been shown to you, saying that I did not know your address and did not know what it referred to, unless to Pacific Mail, for that was the only thing you had spoken to me about. Do you know the substance of that letter?

A. I think I do. I remember the substance of it only, and cannot give the exact words. The substance was that you had received a dispatch of that kind signed by Mr. Wiley, of New York, and that the dispatch had stated, "Don't go with the adverse party." You said, "Now what this means I don't know, and I hate mysteries. See Wiley and find out what it means."

Q. (Handing letter to witness.) Did you send me that letter in reply? If so, read it.

A. I did. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, December 23, 1874.

MY DEAR SIR: Mr. Barney has just handed me your letter to him of the 21st instant, in which you ask him for an explanation of a "mysterious telegram" received by you and signed "Mr. Wiley."

Mr. Harney has no explanation to give, for the reason that I sent no such telegram, and am myself as much in the dark as yourself.

Nor have I any key to the mystery, other than the fact that pending the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy I introduced to you Mr. Irwin, and subsequently brought him to your house for the purpose of endeavoring to combat your objections to the bill. Now, it may be possible some one, mistaking the intimacy supposed to exist between you and myself and having an interest in the matter, has done me this wrong and you this annoyance. I can see no other solution. Should you, however, be again annoyed and be able to trace the guilty party, I would be under favor to you to at once advise me.

I very much regret this annoyance to you, for the reason I came to you indorsed by Mr. Harney as worthy of your friendly greeting. You so received and treated me, and for which you have my kindest remembrance. It would be a shabby return for Mr. Harney's friendship and your courtesy to presume upon that acquaintance to send you any telegram, much less one clouded by mystery.

Permit me to add, in conclusion, that I have no interest in Pacific Mail in any manner, shape, or form.

I am, very truly, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. WILEY.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK,
House of Representatives, Washington City.

Q. Mr. Fant made some statements here the other day about sending you to me. Do you remember anything about that?

A. Perfectly. I saw the statement in the paper, and wrote to Mr. Fant on the subject. Mr. Fant did not send me to you, nor had he any interest in my coming to you in any manner, shape, or form, other than the interest I had with Mr. Fant in New York. Mr. Fant made a mistake; he recognizes that mistake and is sorry for it.

Q. Have you had correspondence with him since?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What I want to get at is any communication you had with Mr. Fant, and whether there was any suggestion made that I was to be approached with money or money's worth in any form?

A. Most assuredly not. I have a communication in my pocket now from Mr. Fant, in which he states that so far as Mr. BECK was concerned he did not know him; that he knows nothing in any way, shape, or form that would reflect upon him in the transaction. When I saw in the paper the statement of Mr. Fant that he had sent Mr. Wiley to see Mr. BECK, I at once wrote him saying that he had done me a wrong, and connected my name in this matter in an unwarrantable manner, and I wanted to know why he did it, and asked him if there was anything behind this. Mr. Fant wrote me a letter of apology for doing what he had done. It was satisfactory. I have seen Mr. Fant this morning. He is sick in bed.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. You sent no dispatch of any kind, mentioning the Pacific Mail subsidy, last December to Mr. BECK?

A. No, sir; nothing of the kind.

Q. Neither mysterious or open?

A. Neither mysterious or otherwise.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. I believe I have not seen you before for a year or so, have I?

A. I have seen you but once since the passage of the bill, and that was but once in Mr. Harney's office, until I met you here this morning.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. I think there was one point upon which Mr. BECK asked you, and the question being rather long, you answered a part and may have answered the other part, although I do not remember it. That was, that in no way, shape, or form, did you carry or get anybody to carry any stock, or make any stock contracts in which Mr. BECK had any interest, or of which he had any knowledge.

A. You cannot make that too broad; there was nothing in any manner, shape, or form.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Neither in my own name or in that of anybody else?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS:

Q. You have made your answers with reference to Mr. BECK very broad. I desire to know now whether you had any communication with any other members of Congress with reference to this subsidy.

A. I did not.

Q. Did you for any other member of Congress, directly or indirectly, carry any stock, or propose to carry any stock?

A. I did not either directly or indirectly carry or propose to carry for any member of Congress any stock or money, nor had I any connection with the matter in any way. I saw no member of Congress except Mr. BECK.

Q. Did you have any relations with Mr. Irwin in the distribution of the funds which he held?

A. No, sir; none at all. I saw Mr. Irwin while I was here three or four times, and each time was to report to him the state of Mr. BECK's feelings as to how he would vote, and to get him to agree upon the time he would meet Mr. BECK, if I could get Mr. BECK to meet him.

Q. Did you make any report to Mr. Irwin as to any other member of Congress?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was the name of any other member of Congress mentioned by you to Mr. Irwin in connection with this subsidy?

A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. Did you know at the time of the employment of Mr. Irwin of any attempt to influence the vote of any member of either House?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. WALDRON:

You have answered in reference to members of Congress. Will you now state whether you know of any contract by which stock was to be given to or carried for the benefit of any officer or employé of the last Congress?

A. I do not.

By Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS:

I have asked you as to whether you made any report to Irwin as to any member of Congress. I will ask now further whether Irwin gave you any information as to any member of either House who could be influenced in any way by either money, stock, or any valuable consideration, to vote or refrain from voting?

A. No, sir; my acquaintance with Mr. Irwin was predicated upon a mere introduction by Mr. Stockwell for an express purpose, and that was that I could influence the vote of Mr. BECK in the way I have stated.

Q. I would like a direct answer to the question. You imply it; but I prefer a direct answer whether or not Mr. Irwin suggested to you any member of either House who could be influenced by any valuable consideration?

A. No, sir; he did not.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Do you know of the payment of money or of the giving of any consideration to any member of Congress or any officer or employé of the House.

A. I do not.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Do you not think that Mr. Fant claimed the credit of having sent you to Mr. BECK as a sort of desperate effort to show that he had rendered some specific service for the money he received? What other explanation can you give for this unwarranted use of your name in that connection by him?

A. I hardly know. When I first read the testimony, we canvassed among ourselves in the office as to why Mr. Fant had said this; one suggested one reason and one another. I could see no good reason why he would do it unless it was that the connection of his name with Mr. BECK's or mine might in some manner give him some character with the committee.

Q. If you remember reading the testimony, you will recollect the committee pressed him to know the specific service he had rendered; to whom he had talked; upon whom he had tried to exercise influence in consequence of this amount of money which he had received. In other words, they asked him for an illustration of the service he had performed. He thereupon gave this as an illustration, saying he had sent you to Mr. BECK. I am disposed, after what you have said, to regard that as a mere desperate effort upon his part to try and show that he had done something. Can you explain it in any other way?

A. I think that is about the best explanation that can be given of the matter.

The question being taken on the motion that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ARMSTRONG: Memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory, for an appropriation to improve the navigation of the Red River of the North, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory, for an appropriation to erect a public building for the use of the Legislature, courts, and other public officers, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory, for the establishment of a post-route from Sioux Falls, Dakota, to Lake Benton, Minnesota, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Dakota Territory, for a post-route from Fargo to Fort Totten, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BANNING: Letter of Josiah Given, in relation to hardships experienced by distillers under section 13 of the act of June 6, 1872, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts: Papers relating to the claim of Lieutenant J. C. Duff, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: Estimate of expenses of the board of health of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, papers relating to the claim of William Bowen, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of Anne Catharine Fisher, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Andrew Fyans and 22 other Union soldiers who have lost a leg below the knee or an arm below the elbow, for increase of pension to twenty-four dollars a month, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLAND: The petition of Andrew Folsom, of Barton, Vermont, to be reimbursed money unjustly exacted as commutation for his son, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SPEER: The petition of 30 soldiers of Cambria County, Pennsylvania, for the passage of a law granting, without restrictions, one hundred and sixty acres of land to soldiers, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, the petition of 17 soldiers of Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia: The petition of citizens of Georgia, for the refunding of the cotton tax, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 21, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ARMAMENT FOR SEA-COAST DEFENSES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my annual message of December 1, 1873, while inviting general attention to all the recommendations made by the Secretary of War, your special consideration was invited to the "importance of preparing for war in time of peace by providing proper armament for our sea-coast defenses. Proper armament is of vastly more importance than fortifications. The latter can be supplied very speedily for temporary purposes when needed; the former cannot."

These views gain increased strength and pertinence as the years roll by, and I have now again the honor to call special attention to the condition of the "armament of our fortifications" and the absolute necessity for immediate provision by Congress for the procurement of heavy cannon. The large expenditures required to supply the number of guns for our forts is the strongest argument that can be adduced for a liberal annual appropriation for their gradual accumulation. In time of war such preparations cannot be made, cannon cannot be purchased in open market, nor manufactured at short notice; they must be the product of years of experience and labor.

I herewith inclose copies of a report of the Chief of Ordnance and of a board of ordnance officers on the trial of an eight-inch rifle converted from a ten-inch smooth-bore, which shows very conclusively an economical means of utilizing these useless smooth-bores and making them into eight-inch rifles capable of piercing seven inches of iron. The twelve hundred and ninety-four ten-inch Rodman guns should in my opinion be so utilized, and the appropriation requested by the Chief of Ordnance of $250,000 to commence these conversions is urgently recommended.

While convinced of the economy and necessity of these conversions, the determination of the best and most economical method of providing guns of still larger caliber should no longer be delayed. The experience of other nations, based on the new conditions of defense brought prominently forward by the introduction of iron-clads into every navy afloat, demands heavier metal and rifle-guns of not less than twelve inches in caliber. These enormous masses, hurling a shot of seven hundred pounds, can alone meet many of the requirements of the national defenses. They must be provided, and experiments on a large scale can alone give the data necessary for the determination of the question. A suitable proving-ground, with all the facilities and conveniences referred to by the Chief of Ordnance, with a liberal annual appropriation, is an undoubted necessity. The guns now ready for trial cannot be experimented with without funds, and the estimate of $250,000 for the purpose is deemed reasonable and is strongly recommended.

The constant appeals for legislation on the "armament of fortifications" ought no longer to be disregarded, if Congress desires in peace to prepare the important material without which future wars must inevitably lead to disaster.

This subject is submitted with the hope that the consideration it deserves may be given it at the present session.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 20, 1875.

The message was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a memorial numerously signed by citizens of the District of Columbia, asking for an act of incorporation to promote the manufacture and sale of any and all kinds of agricultural, mechanical, and other useful implements and articles within the District of Columbia; which was referred to the committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Alice E. De Groot, and Theodore R. B. De Groot, administrators of the estate of William H. De Groot, deceased, praying payment of certain losses and damages, and to have refunded to them the amount of William H. De Groot's expenditures (less the amount paid to him by the Government) incurred by him as the assignee of the contract for furnishing brick for the Washington Aqueduct; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DENNIS presented papers relating to money erroneously paid by John G. Taylor, collector of customs at Annapolis, Maryland, who asks the passage of the necessary measures by Congress to relieve him from liability; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAGER. I present the memorial of R. H. Brotherton and about 300 others, asking that the homestead act be so amended as to enable all settlers upon the even-numbered sections inside of railroad reservations to enter one hundred and sixty acres of land, instead of eighty as now provided by law. They state that they memorialize in behalf of themselves, residents of California, and others. They state, and correctly, that the most of the better class of lands in that State have been taken up by private Spanish or Mexican grants, leaving vacant and unoccupied only an inferior class of lands suited better for grazing than for agricultural purposes unless at the very great expense of irrigation. They ask that the law be amended as applicable to that State, so as to allow eighty acres of land in addition to those who have already entered eighty acres, and that hereafter all be allowed to enter one hundred and sixty acres instead of eighty acres within the railroad belt. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I present the petition of John W. Haney, late of Company H, Eleventh Wisconsin Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension. Several citizens of the city of Indianapolis, where he now lives, headed by Governor Hendricks, join in the petition. I move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT presented a petition of members of the bar of Council Bluffs, Iowa, asking that the district court of the district of Iowa shall have concurrent jurisdiction in all cases with the circuit court of that district; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MERRIMON presented the petition of Thomas H. Coates, of Raleigh, North Carolina, praying for a reconsideration and allowance of his claim for property taken for the use of the Army of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ROBERTSON presented the petition of John S. Riggs, J. D. Aiken, Evan Edwards, George W. Williams & Co., and others, business men and firms of Charleston, South Carolina, praying the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3656) incorporating the Eastern and Western Transportation Company; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. MORTON presented the petition of James Calhoun, late second lieutenant Company D, Third Regiment of Indiana Cavalry Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Joseph A. Stilwell, praying that a pension be allowed James A. Benham; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Anna Lombaert, Susan Hathwell, and Mary A. Davis, legal heirs of Captain John Arndt, of the revolutionary war, praying that they may receive the pension with land warrant which was due the said Arndt; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3681) granting a pension to William M. Drake, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1438) granting a pension to Emily Phillips, widow of Martin Phillips, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Rosa Ward, of Moretown, Vermont, praying to be granted a pension on account of services rendered by her son, Andrew Ward, late of the First Vermont Battery, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Ann Toliver, mother of David Toliver, late of the One hundred and nineteenth Regiment United States Colored Infantry, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3722) granting a pension to John Fink, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1243) to abolish the system of mileage, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3189) granting a pension to Frederick Vogel, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1644) granting a pension to Hannah E. Currie, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3020) granting a pension to George Pomeroy, have had the same under consideration, and it appearing from a note accompanying the papers that after the bill had passed the House the Pension Bureau granted to Captain Pomeroy a pension, it is not deemed necessary to further consider the bill. We therefore recommend that it be indefinitely postponed. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 938) for the relief of Thomas G. Kingsley, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SCOTT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1565) relating to the commissioners of claims, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report back the same with amendments and recommend its passage. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this bill extends the time within which petitions for the allowance of claims may be filed before the commissioners of claims, as that is a subject in which Senators have taken an interest, and in making the report to further state that I make it in obedience to the instructions of the majority of the committee, and I do not concur in the report.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say also in this connection, although it is unusual to do so, that the report does not have my concurrence, and I do not wish by my silence to be construed as approving the bill.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1086) to regulate promotions in the staff of the Marine Corps, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 7) authorizing the reappointment of Robert L. May, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Kate Louise Cushing, widow of the late Commander William B. Cushing, praying to be allowed a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Philadelphia and New Jersey, praying that a landing may be granted to the Red Bank Ferry Company at the foot of Broad street, Philadelphia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. M. J. Coston, praying for compensation for the use of the inventions of the late Benjamin Franklin Coston, particularly that known as "the cannon percussion primer," asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the memorial of Duff Green, giving his views on finances, exchanges, &c., asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in favor of the adoption of the monitor life-saving raft for the use of steamships carrying passengers, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Alexander Henderson, late consul at Londonderry, Ireland, asking payment of balance claimed to be due him for services as such consul, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1053) to amend chapter 7 of title 33 of the Revised Statutes, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 980) fixing the salary of the President of the United States, to report adversely and recommend its indefinite postponement. I am also instructed by the committee to request that it go on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1173) to incorporate the Stockbridge Agricultural, Manufacturing, and Commercial Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1174) for the relief of C. C. Barker and W. W. Williams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1175) extending the provisions of an act approved June 4, 1872, entitled "An act granting a pension to A. Schuyler Sutton;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. I introduce this bill by request. I know nothing of its merits. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1176) permitting Lieutenant-Commander Frederick Pearson, of the Navy, to accept a decoration from the Queen of Great Britain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DENNIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1177) to incorporate the Washington City and Suitland Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1178) for the relief of certain creditors of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH S. COOPER.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on Pensions have instructed me to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3713) granting a pension to Sarah S. Cooper was indefinitely postponed, and to ask that the bill, with the accompanying papers, may be recommitted to that committee for further action.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the 19th of May last I had the honor to introduce the joint resolution (S. R. No. 9) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The joint resolution was laid upon the table. I move that it be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE. I ask for an order that the papers in the case of Daniel J. Brown may be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCOTT. I would inquire of the Senator from Alabama whether there has been an adverse report in that case?

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE. There have been two. It has been before the committee in the House, who reported favorably, and then there have been two or perhaps three unfavorable reports from the committee of the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. The unfavorable reports have been subsequent to the favorable report?

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. I must object then to these papers being withdrawn and recommitted to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects, and the order cannot be made.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MOUTH OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish the Senate a detailed statement of amounts appropriated since 1870 for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, Fort Jackson and Fort Saint Philip, giving the name, amount paid each person, and date of payment, and for what.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no further morning business, the Chair will call upon the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We have no business to present this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Agriculture—[a pause.] The Committee on Military Affairs.

RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the bill for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, of the United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the retirement as a colonel, on February 19, 1873, for disability on account of a wound received in battle, of Brevet Major-General S. W. Crawford, United States Army, be so amended that he shall be retired and be borne on the retired list of the Army as a major-general as of and from that date, he having been in the exercise of the command of a major-general at the time he was wounded, being then in command of the First Division of the Twelfth Army Corps.

The Committee on Military Affairs propose to amend the bill by striking out, commencing in line 8, the following words:

Major-general as of and from the said date, he having been in the exercise of the command of a major-general at the time he was wounded, being then in command of the First Division of the Twelfth Army Corps.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Brigadier-general, he having held the rank of brigadier-general at the time he was wounded: Provided, That his retired pay as brigadier-general shall commence from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That all officers of the Army who have been heretofore retired by reason of disability arising from wounds received in action shall be considered as retired upon the actual rank held by them, whether in the regular or volunteer service at the time when such wound was received, and shall be borne on the retired list and receive pay hereafter accordingly; and this section shall be taken and construed to include those now borne on the retired list placed upon it on account of wounds received in action.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to offer this additional amendment to be added to the second section:

Provided, That no part of the foregoing act shall apply to those officers who had been in service as commissioned officers twenty-five years at the date of their retirement, nor to those retired officers who had lost an arm or leg or both eyes by reason of wounds received in battle; and that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and are hereby, repealed.

I will state to the Senate that under an act of Congress which was passed in 1866 it was provided—

Officers of the regular Army entitled to be retired on account of disability occasioned by wounds received in battle may be retired upon the full rank of command held by them, whether in the regular or volunteer service, at the time such wounds were received.

It is very evident that this statute was passed to apply to particular persons. Persons in the regular Army might be retired, not on their own rank, but on the command they held at the time of receiving the wound. To illustrate, a colonel, for instance, might by accident be in command of a brigade. Although the brigade may not have been commanded by a brigadier-general, it is considered the command of a brigadier-general. If he were wounded while in command of that brigade, this law would retire him as a brigadier-general, retire him with a rank he never held. Why it was and why it has stood as the law so long I cannot tell. At the last Congress or the Congress before it was repealed and the law made applicable only to the rank of the officer himself, without reference to the command. I do not desire to discuss it, but any one who knows anything about Army matters knows how unfair a law of this kind would be in its application to different officers.

The amendment that I have now offered is to the bill retiring Mr. Crawford. He is the only one, I believe, who was not retired under the act of 1866. He claimed to be retired as a major-general, but he was not a major-general; he held the rank of brigadier. This bill as we propose to amend it provides that he may be retired as a brigadier, that being the rank he himself held at the time and not the rank of his command, and at the same time the bill is so amended as to apply to all persons in the Army and provide that their retirement shall be according to the rank held by themselves and not the rank of command, for there is no such rank. I have stated it so that the Senate may understand it. It applies to those who have been retired under the act of 1866. Some men who never held a rank higher than major have been retired as colonels and brigadier-generals under that act.

There has been a great deal of complaint against the committee and especially against myself, on the ground that what we propose is a harsh measure. Some of the old officers who have been retired as major-generals, for instance, when they never held the rank, do not now want to have it changed. This is perfectly natural, and they have brought a great deal of pressure to bear on the Congress of the United States, and have defeated me two or three times in getting this measure passed. I then changed it. The amendment I offer now makes exceptions of certain men who have been retired. It makes an exception of a man who has been retired with the rank of command, if he lost an arm, if he lost a leg, if he lost both eyes, or if he had served in the Army twenty-five years at the time of his retirement. That makes an exception of all the old officers retired who were retired for wounds that absolutely rendered their services useless. There are a great many in the Army retired on a rank which they never held, and who are in as good health to-day as any of us. I submitted this bill to the Secretary of War, and he wrote me the following memorandum that I will read to the Senate:

> I have looked over the amendment proposed to be added to this bill, and it strikes me that if adopted it will make the law more satisfactory and do away with the objections which may exist to the present law-bill of the House of Representatives No. 2093, as proposed to be amended in the Senate.

I submitted the bill to him, with the amendment. He said it would do away with the objections to the bill by making these exceptions. For instance, a certain gentleman in the State of New York, and a certain gentleman in the District of Columbia who has lost both eyes, and several men whom I could mention, are in the classes which are excepted; so that this makes the bill so that it will work no hardship to any one, but will be fair to all.

Mr. SCOTT. Before I discuss the actual point that is involved in the amendment reported by the Military Committee, I would ask for one moment the attention of the Senate to the standing of the officer affected by this bill in the first instance, and upon whose application for the benefit of the general law this amendment now comes in.

General Crawford was a surgeon in the regular Army in 1861 and attached to the command of Colonel Anderson, at Fort Sumter. His conduct at that time was such that very soon after hostilities commenced he was commissioned by President Lincoln a major in the regular Army. He passed through the several grades of major to brigadier-general, taking a very active and a very creditable part in military operations. At the battle of Antietam he received his wound, having been ordered to take the command of General Mansfield after he was killed upon the field. He participated in the battle of Gettysburgh and in the battles of the Army of the Potomac, and he was one of the few soldiers who were present at the firing of the first gun of the rebellion and who continued in active and valuable service down to the time the last gun was fired in the rebellion.

In 1866 the law which the Senator from Illinois has read was passed, which authorized the retirement of officers at the rank of command which they held at the time they were wounded. Under that law General Crawford made his application in August, 1871, to be retired, and he was entitled at that time to be retired with the rank of major-general. His services, however, were deemed to be of some importance to the Army, and, if I am correctly informed, at the request of the Secretary of War his application for retirement was not pressed at that time. He was at that time, if I remember correctly, in command in Alabama. In consequence of his application not being pressed, or for reasons satisfactory to the War Department, he remained in the service; and while his application for retirement was before the board the act of 1872 was passed, which repealed the act of 1866.

During the time the act of 1866 was in operation, seventy-two officers were retired. I have before me a list furnished by the Secretary of War of the officers who were retired, and upon looking over it to some extent—not fully—I find that one captain has been retired as a major-general and one lieutenant has been retired as a colonel. While I agree with the Senator from Illinois that, if it were a question of original construction, I should be inclined to think that the proper construction of that law was that they were to be retired upon the rank of the commission which they held at the time of their wounds, and not upon the rank of the transient or accidental command which they happened to hold; but here are seventy-two officers who have been retired, some of them perhaps officers in command in the very battle in which General Crawford received his wound; and thus, with his application pending at the time the law was repealed, he is cut off from the benefits of that act, and officers who were his inferiors in rank now have a superiority to him both in rank and in pay upon the retired list.

This bill was introduced for the purpose of giving him the benefit of that act, as his application was pending at the time it was repealed. It passed the House, and there was a very favorable report made there, showing, more fully than I can now state them, the reasons why General Crawford ought to have the benefit of that act. The Military Committee of the Senate, however, propose now to retire him with the rank of a brigadier-general, and then to add a section which will reduce all the officers who have been retired under that act to the rank of their commissions, with the exception of the few who will be saved by the last amendment now proposed.

If it be the pleasure of the Senate to reduce the seventy-two officers, with these exceptions, to the rank of their commissions instead of the rank of their command, then of course I have no objection to the amendment which has been proposed to retire General Crawford as a brigadier-general; but I would ask the Senator from Illinois, if it will comport with his idea of propriety, that the question shall be first taken upon this second section, which will bring the Senate to the square question of whether they will reduce the officers who have been retired, before he asks for the vote upon the other part of the amendment. If that be the sense of the Senate, then of course there is a disagreement between the Senate and House of Representatives on this bill, and unless the House concurs, it will be necessary to go to a committee of conference. I do not desire to take up time in protracting debate, but I wish to get this question as clearly as I can before the Senate and then have a decision upon it.

As I have already said, if it were a question of the original construction of the act of 1866, I should be inclined to think that the proper construction would be to retire all these officers upon the rank of their commission at the time; but it has been construed otherwise. They have been retired with the rank of command, and I think in justice to General Crawford, with the brilliant military record which he has, with his long service, with his wound incurred in that service, he ought not to be singled out as the pivot upon which this question is to turn. He ought to be retired, as his application was pending before this law was repealed, as others were, and not have an invidious distinction made against him. If, however, it be the policy of Congress to bring all these officers down together, then I shall have nothing more to say on the question of retiring him as a brigadier-general.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to detain the Senate, but I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I think some portion of his remarks has been made under a misapprehension of the facts. He speaks of the seventy-two officers who have been retired under the law of 1866, and speaks of the hardship, and he states that one captain had been retired as a major-general and one lieutenant as a colonel. What are the names?

Mr. SCOTT. I have a very long list. I cannot give the names just now.

Mr. LOGAN. He states the case of a captain. That rank was the rank the man held in the regular Army; that was not the volunteer rank he held. This law does not apply to that; this authorizes his retirement with the volunteer rank he held. He probably was retired on the rank he did hold at the time, and if so, the amendment does not affect him.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator is mistaken. I have already said that the retirement was of a captain in the regular Army as a major-general, he holding the rank of major-general in the volunteers at the time; and the same in reference to the lieutenant. He was a lieutenant in the regular Army, and was retired as colonel because he was holding the command of a colonel in the volunteers.

Mr. CAMERON. If Senators will allow me, I think I can explain the case of the captain who was retired as a major-general. It was the case of Mr. Fessenden, I think. He was appointed a lieutenant at the beginning of the war and immediately promoted to a captaincy. Afterward he got a command in the volunteer service, and became a major-general in it, and he was retired on the rank he then held.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator [Mr. SCOTT] will see that the distinction is not properly made. There is a misunderstanding, and frequently it has been apparent here, in confounding the two services. Rank in the regular Army is one thing, and rank in the volunteer Army is another thing. The officers are not retired on their rank in the regular Army, but they are retired on the rank they hold at the time in the volunteer Army. That captain held a major-general's commission; and therefore he was retired as major-general. He is not retired with the rank of his command, but retired, because he was a major-general, with his personal rank. So of the lieutenant. Neither of them is affected by this bill as amended. It only affects persons who were retired with the rank of their command. That is all this applies to; and it retires General Crawford with the rank he absolutely held, and not with his rank of command; and it brings all the rest down to the rank they absolutely held and not to a fictitious rank, which everybody admits is just. There is no officer in the Army to-day but will admit that the old mode of retirement is an absurdity, and every man who will examine it that knows anything of military life knows it is a mockery.

Mr. SCOTT. I think the Senator from Illinois has misunderstood me. If I did not state, I certainly intended to state, that the seventy-two who were retired were retired upon the rank of command which they held when wounded. I do not intend to say that they held commissions entitling them to that rank, as General Crawford did in this instance. He was ordered to take the command of a major-general although he was an inferior officer. I intended to state that distinctly.

Mr. LOGAN. A major-general is commander of a division. I have known divisions in the Army to be commanded for months by a colonel who never had any higher rank. Every man on this floor who has been in the Army knows that that occurred frequently during the war. How absurd now it would be to retire that colonel as a major-general and give him three-fourths of $7,500 a year as retired pay! I could name, but I do not desire to do it, an officer who was a gallant officer, who is retired as a major-general in the Army under this statute, retired on account of a wound, but who is just as stout a man as I am, and probably more able physically to do business than I am, or at least as able to do so. But he was wounded, and under this statute he was retired as major-general, though his rank in the regular Army was that of a major. That is the way this law has been used. My object and the object of the Military Committee is only this, to let every man retired in the Army be retired with the rank he held at the time he received the wound. If it was the rank of brigadier-general, let him be brigadier-general, whether his commission in the regular Army was that of a captain, lieutenant, or what not.

I do not say anything about the statute except that it was very unfair at the time it was passed. Men never ought to have been retired in that way at all. The Army Register shows, as you will see by examining it, that this amendment does not work a hardship to any man. Every man who lost a leg or arm or his eyesight is excepted, and every man who served twenty-five years in the Army is excepted. Who are the men who lost a leg or arm? A right leg was lost by Thomas W. Sherman. He is excepted. Of these seventy-two officers all that have been wounded seriously are excepted under this amendment. Major-General John C. Robinson, late lieutenant-governor of New York, lost one leg. He is excepted by this amendment. Daniel E. Sickles lost the right leg. He is excepted by the amendment. George L. Hartsuff lost two legs, but he is dead and it does not apply to him. Richard W. Johnson is a retired brigadier-general. He is excepted because of the length of his service. Eli Long is excepted because of his length of service. Brigadier-General Gabriel R. Paul had both eyes shot out. He is excepted. He never had the rank he was retired on; he was retired by special act of Congress as a brigadier-general; and he is excepted on account of having lost his eyes, and I think that was proper. I could afford to do that. We could all afford to do it. John B. McIntosh lost a right leg. He is excepted.

These are the only persons on the retired list who have lost an arm, or a leg, or eyesight; and they are every one excepted.

Then the old men retired on that list, no matter what the rank, are excepted. Every man who served twenty-five years in the Army, so that his age is such that he ought to have support, is excepted.

This bill thus amended is no hardship. It is just. It only applies to young officers of the Army who have been retired on a rank they never held, which was an injustice to every other officer of the Army. We have an Army to-day of forty regiments. This law is repealed, but every man who is retired on account of wounds now in the Army is retired with the rank he holds.

Mr. SCOTT. As this amendment makes it in the nature of a general bill and the morning hour is just about expiring, I will ask that the morning hour be extended for the purpose of disposing of this bill.

Mr. MORTON. How long will it take?

Mr. SCOTT. Make it subject to the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The Chair hears no objection to the extension of the morning hour for the purpose indicated.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, I want the Senate to understand what the meaning of this proposition is. Take, for instance, the soldiers of the Mexican war; we have some retired officers who served in the Mexican war. How were they retired? They were retired on the rank they held—their absolute personal rank. There they stand on the list to-day, retired on their actual rank. We have officers now who are wounded in the Indian service who are retired. How are they retired? On their absolute rank, on their personal rank, not the rank of command. By the action of the Senate and House of Representatives in 1866, you made exceptions to the general rule applicable to the Army, and you have seventy-two exceptions to the general rule that applies to those who served in the Mexican war and to the rest of the Army, and to all for the future. There stand these exceptions to all our rules and regulations, and to any rule that was ever established for any army in the world before. In the history of any army that I have ever examined I have not been able to find any such exceptions. I do not know of a case of any man ever being retired in any army until this statute passed on any rank except the rank he held; but you have made a law here to retire men on rank they never held, on a rank they never could have acquired, for some that I know myself never could have been major-generals in the Army, and yet they are retired as major-generals. They never held the office in the world, but happened accidentally to be thrown some day into the command of a division. I could name a gentleman, but I do not desire to do it, who is serving now in the civil service in Europe, who was retired on the rank of command. His own proper rank was very low, but he is retired tolerably high. Nine-tenths of the men retired on rank of command, when they never held the rank, are to-day occupying high positions, some of them in railroad employment, some in one employment and some in another, doing good business; and yet their retired pay to-day amounts to more than mine as Senator. I say it is unjust and wrong to the Army. I do not speak of the amount of pay they get; I do not care about that; but it is unjust to the Army of the United States, because they make exceptions to the rule, and you will find just such cases coming up every Congress.

I introduced by the voice of the Military Committee the bill that repealed this law of 1866. It was repealed. After it was repealed Mr. Crawford was retired on his actual rank, which is that of colonel. Everybody else has to be retired in the same way now. If you pass a bill giving Mr. Crawford the rank of his command that he held at that time, or the rank of his commission at that time, and do not make it applicable to the others who have been retired, you will have a dozen bills here every Congress for the officers retired hereafter. Each one will be asking you to retire him on the rank of command under this statute because Crawford was retired in that way, and thus you set the precedent. Mr. Crawford has been retired since the repeal of the law of 1866. Pass this bill without the amendment, and you set a precedent that will annoy us at every Congress; and we are certainly annoyed every year, not by applications of this character particularly, but in reference to rank and changes and things which are absolutely wrong and ought not to be permitted.

Mr. SCOTT. This was the only application pending at the time of the repeal.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true, and therefore his case might be somewhat exceptional; but yet it is a precedent for every other officer of the Army. His retirement as brigadier-general in my opinion is a fair retirement, for that was the volunteer rank he held. I have nothing to say against General Crawford, because my opinion is that he is a gallant officer; but this is fair and just to him. It increases his retired pay from that of colonel to brigadier-general and makes it fair all around and will stop special proceedings in Congress. For that reason I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Illinois, and ask him whether he will not let the vote be taken on the second section by itself before taking it on the amendment to the first section.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SCOTT. I am willing to vote for the amendment in the first section if the second is adopted, but I do not feel at liberty to vote for both together.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to the vote being taken in any way, but if that second section is stricken out, I shall do everything I can to defeat the whole bill, because that is the only section that makes it just.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask to have the vote taken on the second section first.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection; but I shall oppose the bill if it is not adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the question will be divided and the vote first taken on the amendment reported as a second section.

The second section was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment in the first section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Samuel W. Crawford, and to fix the rank and pay of retired officers of the Army."

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) proposing an amendment to the Constitution prescribing the manner of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, it is pleasant to be able to present to the Senate a subject which is entirely above all party considerations and to which men of all parties can address themselves independent of the excitement which now seems to prevail throughout the country.

The proposition is to amend the Constitution of the United States as to the method of electing President and Vice-President, so as to bring the election home to the people as nearly as possible, and at the same time to avoid the dangers that exist under the present method. No more important question can be considered by the Senate of the United States at this session of Congress; for in my opinion great dangers impend, owing to the imperfection of the present system of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States.

When we look back through the history of the country as to former elections, it becomes a matter of surprise that there have not been collisions and troubles resulting from the imperfections of our system. We may fairly assume that we have had a series of happy accidents by which these collisions have been avoided; but we cannot hope that these happy accidents will continue to occur; and in fact the dangers arising from the present system of election are greater now than they have been before in the history of the country, and will increase.

The system of electing the President and Vice-President by means of electors appointed by the Legislature of each State, as is well understood, had its origin in a profound distrust of the people. It was not believed by the framers of the Constitution to be safe to intrust the election of President and Vice-President to the people of the United States. Democracy was not so well understood then as it is now. It was believed that it was necessary to place the election of President and Vice-President in the hands of a small body of men, to be selected on account of their wisdom and of their character; that those men should be made entirely independent of the people and entirely independent of Congress; that their action should be unknown to the people and unknown to each other, so as to secure their complete independence. The first proposition in the convention of 1787 was that the President and Vice-President should be elected by the Congress itself. That was afterward changed, and it was then proposed that they should be elected by electors, and that these electors should be chosen by Congress. Then the plan was changed, and it was agreed that they should be elected by the States through the medium of electors, and that the electors should be chosen by the Legislatures of the several States; and the purpose was to place the election of electors and the election of President and Vice-President entirely beyond the control of Congress, that those elections should not be under the supervision of Congress. I will ask the Secretary to read the second clause of the first section of the second article of the Constitution.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

Mr. MORTON. The first point now to which I call the attention of the Senate is that the election of electors was placed absolutely under the control of the Legislatures of the several States and that Congress had no power over the election of these electors or to determine any question in regard to their election, but that the selection or appointment of electors was to be placed exclusively in the hands of the State Legislatures. The States could not by their constitutions control or in any manner change the appointment of electors; the power of a Legislature to appoint electors is conferred not by the State constitution, but is conferred by the Constitution of the United States, so that it is not in the power of a State constitution to take from the Legislature the power to appoint electors in any way that that Legislature may see proper. The Legislature may repeal any day the law by which electors are elected by the people. The Legislature may elect these electors by joint ballot of the two houses; it may authorize the governor to appoint them; it may authorize the supreme court of the State to appoint them; and this power has been exercised in various ways in various States. In some States the electors were once elected by separate districts, like members of Congress; in all the States now by general ticket. In some States in times past they were chosen by the different houses of the Legislature, and where the houses were divided in politics, the senate, for instance, being federal, and the house republican, they divided the electors by contract, the senate to choose so many and the house to choose so many. They have been elected by double and treble districts, by dividing the State into a number of districts less than the number of members of Congress, so that one district would elect two or three electors. In other words, various expedients and various methods have been adopted by the States at different times in the choice of electors, and this power to choose electors being placed absolutely with the Legislature of each State by the Constitution, it is in the power of any Legislature, at the next or before the next election, to withdraw the election from the people and choose electors in some other way that may seem good to the Legislature of the State, and Congress has no power to control it; it has no power to determine whether the election has been properly held or not. In other words, no contested election of electors can be determined by the Congress of the United States, because the Constitution has placed that election absolutely and entirely with the States. All the power that Congress has over the electors is contained in the third clause of that section, which is in these words:

The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

With these two exceptions everything is left to the States through their Legislatures.

This brings me to the consideration of the next proposition. Congress has no power to provide for contesting the election of electors. That power is devolved entirely upon the State Legislatures; and if they make no provision for cases of contested elections of electors Congress cannot do it, because it was the policy of the framers of the Constitution to make the election of President entirely independent of Congress, so that the Executive should be entirely independent of the Legislative; and therefore, if there is to be any provision made under the present Constitution for determining a contested election of electors, it must be made by the several States and cannot be made by Congress. All the power that Congress has is to fix the time when the electors shall be chosen by the States, and to determine the day when they shall come together as electors to cast their votes, which shall be the same day in all the States.

The next proposition that I call the attention of the Senate to is that the States have made no provision for contesting the election of electors. All the States have now provided for electing electors by general ticket by the vote of the people; but this is of recent origin. Up to 1824 eight States chose electors by the Legislature, and up to the beginning of the war in 1860 South Carolina chose her electors by the Legislature, just as she did her Senators. Now all the States, however, have agreed that they shall be elected by the people upon general ticket, so that whatever set of electors get the most votes in a State, if it is only a majority of five, cast the whole vote of the State.

But no State has provided any method of contesting the election of electors. Though this election may be distinguished by fraud, notorious fraud, by violence, by tumult, yet there is no method for contesting it; no State has passed a law for that purpose. Every State has passed laws for contesting the election of governor, of lieutenant-governor, of members of the Legislature, and of all State officers; but no State has made any provision for determining a contested election as to electors; so that whatever electors are certified to by the State authorities have the right to cast the vote, and there is no power in Congress or anywhere else to prevent them from doing it, although it may be known to the whole world that they were not honestly elected and have no right to cast the vote of that State.

Not only that, but the law passed by Congress in 1792 to carry out the provision of the Constitution prohibited any contest in effect either by the State or by Congress. That law provides that the electors shall assemble in the several States on the first Wednesday in December and cast their votes. It further provides that the electors shall be chosen, whether by the people or by the Legislatures, within thirty-four days of the time when they are required to cast their votes, so that no time is left between the selection and the vote for any contest; nor can there be any contest afterward. When the electors have cast their votes, they are functus officio; they can never meet again; their office has expired. When they meet and vote on the first Wednesday in December, their functions have expired; they can never be called together again.

And then the Constitution goes on to provide that they shall vote by ballot. Why? That it may not be known to each other how they voted; that it may never be known to the people how they voted; and then, that the vote shall be sealed up and sent to the President of the Senate and that he shall not open that vote until the day it is counted; that the vote is to be opened in the presence of the two Houses and at the very moment it is to be counted; so that if there is any informality in that vote, if there is any fraud or irregularity, there is no possibility of knowing it, there is no possibility of correcting it, because the sealed package is not to be opened until the very moment the vote is to be counted in the presence of the two Houses. It seems never to have occurred to the members of the Convention that there could be two sets of electors; it seems never to have occurred to them that there would be fraud or corruption or any reason why the votes of electors should be set aside. It is clearly a casus omissus, a thing overlooked by the framers of the Constitution, and there is no place to contest the vote either of the electors by the people, or by the Legislature, or the vote of the electors for President, because all that they have done is to be absolutely sealed until the very moment when the vote is to be counted.

Then, Mr. President, how is the vote to be counted? I come to that as the next consideration. The Constitution provides that the vote shall be sealed up when it is cast by the electors, and sent to the President of the Senate, and that he shall open the sealed paper in the presence of the two Houses, "and the votes shall then be counted." The two Houses are to come together, and they are to be as witnesses merely. They cannot act together as a joint convention; they cannot vote as one body. There is no function that they can perform when they are together. They are there simply as witnesses. The vote is to be sealed up and sent to the President of the Senate, and he is to open it in the presence of the two Houses, but the two Houses thus assembled can do nothing, whatever may be the irrregularity, whatever may be the wrong visible on the face of the papers. They cannot act together as a joint convention; they cannot act as one body; they cannot act as separate Houses in the presence of each other; but the Constitution says "the vote shall then be counted." That is all that is to be done.

Now we see the power which is given to the President of the Senate, ordinarily the Vice-President of the United States. The sealed votes are to be sent to him and he is to open them in the presence of the two Houses, "and the votes shall then be counted." Suppose there are two sets of electoral votes, as from Louisiana at the last election, sent up to the Vice-President; he has two packages, and he causes both to be opened in the presence of the two Houses; who shall determine which set shall be counted? The one handed over by the Vice-President to be counted must be counted. The choice is left with him. There is no earthly power to correct it. If in the case of Louisiana the Vice-President had handed over to the tellers the electoral votes that had been certified to by McEnery, they must have been counted; there was no power to prevent it; or if on the other hand he had handed over those that had been signed by Kellogg, they must have been counted. The two Houses together could do nothing. The two Houses separately could do nothing. This is a case where this great power is vested in the hands of the Vice-President because of an omission in the Constitution. There is no power provided anywhere to determine which of these two sets of electoral votes should be counted, and it depends upon him as to which set he will hand over.

Mr. SARGENT. Does not a disagreement between the two Houses reject a vote?

Mr. MORTON. I am coming to that after a while. That is a very important question. See what a vast power is placed in the hands of the Vice-President. He may understand, as likely he will, the contents of the different papers that are placed in his hands, and he may be a candidate himself for election. That has so happened six times. It has happened six times that the Vice-President has opened and counted the votes where he himself was a candidate. John Adams as Vice-President opened and counted the votes and declared himself elected in 1797. Mr. Jefferson as Vice-President opened and counted the votes in 1801, when he was a candidate for President, and he declared the vote to be a tie. Suppose in that case there had been two sets of electoral votes from a State, certified to, and in his hands, one of which would have made a tie, and the other of which would have elected him President; there was no constitutional power anywhere to prevent him from handing over that set which would have elected himself as President. Nor could his action have been revised in any possible way. Again in 1821 Mr. Tompkins counted the votes when he himself was a candidate for re-election as Vice-President. In 1837 Mr. Van Buren counted the votes and declared himself elected President of the United States. In 1841, Mr. Johnson counted the vote when he was a candidate for re-election as Vice-President. In 1861 Mr. Breckenridge opened and counted the vote when he was a candidate for President. True, it was done honestly in all these cases; but suppose a case where the election is close, where by opening one set of papers the Vice-President is to be elected President, and by opening another set he is to be defeated, or where by refusing to count at all the vote of a particular State the result will be to elect him or to elect the candidate of his party! You see what a monstrous and irresponsible power has been placed in the hands of the Vice-President or the President of the Senate.

I have spoken of the theory of the electoral college; and now let us consider how completely it has failed, let us see how completely that theory has been reversed in practice. What was the theory? That the President should not be elected by the people—the people could not be trusted—but the election was to be vested in the hands of select men, who were to come together and act as deliberative, independent bodies. They were all to vote on the same day, so that there should be no collusion between them. The votes could not be cast on different days, where there might be correspondence with different States so as to control the last elections. That might take place; but the Constitution requires that the electors shall vote in all the States on the same day. And how are they to vote? Vote by ballot, so that one elector may not know how the others vote, and so that the people shall never know how they vote; but they were to deliberate, to be deliberative bodies. They were to consider and discuss, and were thus made independent of all knowledge by the people, that they might act entirely independent of all improper considerations or influences. That was the theory.

How has it turned out in practice? It has turned out in practice that the electors are pledged in advance to vote for a particular candidate; that they have been elected as mere agents, to cast their votes for the candidates of their party, a pledge that has never been violated and the violation of which would bring upon the offending party all the indignation that society could invent. It never has been violated and it probably never will. Therefore the theory is a total failure. Instead of being deliberative bodies, they are pledged in advance to vote for particular men. Therefore the reasons for the electoral college have gone. Why not let the people vote themselves for the presidential candidates, instead of voting for electors who are pledged to do the same thing?

Now, let me consider some of the dangers and difficulties attending this system. In the first place, by law when electors have died since their election, or fail to attend, then the others may fill their vacancies. In the case of Texas at the last election when the electors met to vote four were absent, just one-half the whole number. The other four supplied the vacancies by election. Suppose there should be five in favor of one candidate and five in favor of another and one elector dies. Then one five will have the majority over the other, and they can fill the vacancy, and they can thus secure a majority in the electoral college.

But let us look at the unfairness of it in another particular as now adopted. They vote by general ticket in all the States. That set of electors that get a majority of one vote cast the vote of the whole State. A majority of one will cast the entire vote of New York; so that nearly two million and a half of people are utterly silenced in their vote for President. It becomes an election by States. That was not intended by the framers of the Constitution. They did not intend to make it an election by States in one particular, because they expected the electoral colleges to be deliberative bodies, and as deliberative bodies to divide up, some to vote for one candidate and some for another; but it has turned out in practice that the electors are all pledged in advance to vote for a particular candidate, and that one set or the other set will be elected as an entirety, and they come together and cast the vote of the State. It is therefore a vote by States; and under the present system ten States can elect a President of the United States. It is just the same thing as if every man in those ten States had cast their votes for those candidates—a thing never likely to happen; but that is the effect of it. It is an election now by States. It is not a national election. It is removed further from a national election than was contemplated by our fathers, because they supposed these electors would divide—first deliberate, first discuss and consider with each other, and then divide the votes; but it turns out they do not do so. They are pledged in advance. They vote as a unit; and therefore the vote of New York, of Indiana, of Pennsylvania, of Illinois, is given as an entirety. It is therefore an election by States. It enables a small minority of the people of the United States to elect a President. Let us suppose, for example, that one man receives enough electoral votes to elect him; that he has carried enough States by small majorities to give him 186 electoral votes. If you please, he has carried New York by 5,000, Pennsylvania by 3,000, and so on, so that his aggregate majority in those States is less than 50,000. His opponent carries the other States by large majorities, so that it may turn out that his opponent will have half a million majority of the popular vote of the United States.

Mr. BAYARD. That was the case with Mr. Lincoln, I believe. He had a very small minority of the entire popular vote of the United States.

Mr. MORTON. But the remaining vote was divided between two other candidates.

Mr. BAYARD. I say he had a small minority of the entire popular vote of the United States.

Mr. MORTON. Yes, he had. It turns out that four Presidents have had less than a majority of the popular vote, and it is the possibility at all times under this system that a small minority of the votes of the people may elect a President of the United States. That is anti-republican; it is anti-democratic; and that possibility of itself calls for a change in the method of electing a President and Vice-President of the United States.

For my part, I would much rather elect the President by the people of the United States as one entire community, but I know we cannot change the Constitution to that effect. I know the small States will never vote for that; but I would prefer it. But the next and the nearest approach that we can make to an election by the people is to elect by districts. Now, I wish to read from the report, which is more accurate than I can state it. I wish to show by past history how far the electoral college has come from representing the popular vote, and how much nearer the district system will approach to it, and I will ask the attention of the Senate to this extract from the report, which has been carefully prepared.

Mr. OGLESBY. From what report does the Senator read?

Mr. MORTON. The report made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In the first place, I will state that so far as I can gather the evidence the electoral college has never come within 10 per cent. of representing the popular vote, and it several times has differed from it more than 30 per cent.

The following statement of the result in the different presidential elections from 1872 back to 1844 will establish the truth of what we have said:

In 1872 General Grant received 55 per cent. of the votes of the people; in the electoral college he received 81 per cent.

In 1868 General Grant received 52 per cent. of the popular vote, and 73 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1864 Mr. Lincoln received 55 per cent. of the popular vote, and 91 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1860 Mr. Lincoln received only 40 per cent. of the popular vote; he received 59 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1856 Mr. Buchanan received only 45 per cent. of the popular vote; he received 59 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In this election Fillmore received 25 per cent. of the popular vote, and only 2 per cent. of the electoral vote; but fourteen of his friends were elected to Congress.

In 1852 Pierce received 51 per cent. of the popular vote, and 85 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1848 General Taylor received 47 per cent. of the popular vote, and 56 per cent. of the electoral vote. At this election Mr. Van Buren received about 10 per cent. of the popular vote, and received no electoral vote; but three of his friends were elected to the House of Representatives.

In 1844 Mr. Polk received not quite 50 per cent. of the popular vote. He received 62 per cent. of the electoral vote.

To compare the district system with the general-ticket system and to see how much nearer it comes to representing the people, I call the attention of the Senate to the following statements. I will take the four States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois:

These States voted solidly for Mr. Lincoln in 1860, casting 74 electoral votes.

At the same election they returned sixty-six members of Congress, of whom twenty-four were democrats.

In 1864 the same States cast 76 electoral votes for Mr. Lincoln again, and elected the same year sixty-eight members of Congress, of whom sixteen were democrats.

In 1868 the same States threw 76 electoral votes solidly for General Grant, and elected sixty-eight members of Congress, of whom twenty-two were democrats.

In 1872 the same States again voted solidly, giving 85 electoral votes to General Grant, and elected seventy-seven members of Congress, of whom twenty-five were democrats.

In these four States the democratic strength, as compared with the republican, has been about as 9 to 10, but under the operation of the general-ticket system they had been wholly unrepresented in the electoral college; but in the House of Representatives, under the district system, they have had an average of nearly one-third of the members.

Now I will take the State of New York alone for the same period:

In 1860 New York cast her thirty-five electoral votes solidly for Mr. Lincoln. At the same time she elected thirty-three members of Congress, of whom nine were democrats. In 1864 she again cast her thirty-three electoral votes solidly for Mr. Lincoln, and at the same time elected thirty-one members of Congress, of whom eleven were democrats. In 1868 she cast her thirty-three electoral votes solidly for Mr. Seymour. The State was carried for Mr. Seymour by his overwhelming majority in the city of New York, about the character of which grave charges were made, but of which the committee expresses no opinion; but the rest of the State, unaffected in their districts by this large majority in the city, returned eighteen out of the thirty-one members of Congress, who were opposed to Mr. Seymour, thus showing conclusively how the voice of the people of New York outside of the city had been stifled in the presidential election by the city majority, operating through the general-ticket system.

There is a very fair illustration of the dangers of the general-ticket system. A large fraud in the city of New York controls the election for governor, controls the election for President; but in the election of members of Congress by districts, out of the city, not being affected by this large fraud in the city, they elected eighteen republicans out of thirty-one members of Congress, showing what would have been the voice of New York if the country had not been stifled by the enormous fraud committed in the city, about which fraud there was scarcely any dispute and will be scarcely any now. These cities present the elements of fraud: New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and New Orleans, all these large cities; and the fraud committed in a city may control the vote of a whole State, so far as the election by general ticket is concerned; but if the election is by districts, that fraud only affects the district in which it is committed, and will not control the vote of the whole State. Here is great temptation to fraud; because where parties are closely divided in a State, with but a small margin one way or the other, there is great temptation to commit a fraud which determines the vote of the whole State. By the election by districts you do not bring the vote absolutely home to the people as you would by a vote as one community, but you come as near to it as possible. You find that the district system approaches more nearly by one-third to the whole popular vote than the election by general ticket in the present method. I would prefer to elect the President by the vote of the whole people as one community; yet I think we cannot do that. I then prefer to come as near to it as possible, to elect the President by districts; and that is what we propose by this amendment. We propose, in the first place, that the candidate who gets the highest number of votes in a State shall have two presidential votes. This is to preserve the autonomy and the power of the small States. They now have two presidential electors, two votes at large, as they have two Senators. We preserve that theory by giving them two presidential votes; and the man who gets the highest vote in the State shall get those two votes. Then we have the State divided into as many districts as it has members of Congress, and the candidate who gets the highest vote in a district has the vote of that district. He may not have a majority, but if he has a plurality, if he has more votes than any other candidate, he gets the vote of the district, and it counts one. This brings the election home to the people as nearly as possible. So far as these districts are concerned, we leave the power to make the districts just as it is now with regard to members of Congress. The States now district themselves by their Legislatures, but Congress has the power at any time to lay off the districts for electing members of Congress. It has never been exercised, but that power is reserved to Congress. And we make the same provision in regard to these presidential districts; that is, leave the States to form them in the first place, but reserve the power in Congress to alter them or to change them at any time. These districts may be gerrymandered, as they are for Congress. That has been done; it is an evil; you cannot correct it altogether. But we require the districts to be composed of contiguous territory as nearly as possible, and as nearly equal in population as possible. Under the system of electing members of Congress by districts instead of by general ticket, as I have already shown, you approach one-third more nearly to the popular vote than by electing by the general ticket. In the States that I have mentioned the votes were cast solidly for one candidate for President, yet the same States elected nearly one-third of all their members of Congress on the other side, electing democrats, showing that by the district system you give to the people of the States comparatively a voice in the election of President according to their views.

There is another question involved in electing by districts as compared with general ticket, and that is that when you elect by general ticket under the present system no man can vote unless he has a party in the State large enough to hold a convention and put an electoral ticket in the field. If I want to vote for a particular candidate and that candidate has no party in my State, though he may have a strong party in other States, I cannot do it; I must vote for electors who will vote for him. I cannot put an electoral ticket into the field myself, but there must be a party convention to do it. Therefore I am disfranchised in point of fact, unless there is a convention held in that State which will appoint an electoral ticket to vote for the candidate I am in favor of. How did this operate in the South in 1856 and in 1860? In 1856 there were thousands of republicans in the South who did not vote because there were no electoral tickets in the field for Frémont and Dayton. That peculiar state of public opinion prevailed in those States that republicans could not meet in convention and nominate electoral tickets. Therefore the votes of those men that were in favor of Frémont and Dayton were entirely lost; they could not vote at all. Under the present system, to enable a man to vote, there must be enough men of his own way of thinking in his State to put an electoral ticket in the field that he may vote for it. Now, this can hardly be called republican. The government is republican which enables every man to vote directly for the man of his choice, although there may not be another man in the whole State that feels as he does. A particular candidate may have a majority in some States, but he may have scarcely any friends in others; his friends may all be in one district; they may be concentrated; but unless there is a convention, a caucus, if you please, to nominate candidates for electors, his friends are excluded from voting, because they cannot vote directly but must vote for intermediate men.

Now, Mr. President, I consider another question, and that is the danger of the present system. Mark you, no State in this Union has a law to contest the election of electors, and there is no room for a State law; there is no time for it, even if the States were disposed to enact laws. Congress has no power, there is no power to judge except the President of the Senate. He is irresponsible; he is the depositor of all the votes, and as to whether these votes shall be cast depends entirely upon himself, so far as the Constitution is concerned. Suppose that the election of President had depended in 1872 upon the vote of Louisiana, or upon the vote of Arkansas, or upon the vote of Texas, would we not in all probability have been involved in revolution? If the election of Greeley had depended upon counting the votes certified to by McEnery, or the election of Grant had been dependent upon counting the votes certified to by Kellogg, I ask you what would have been our condition? If it had been decided either way in all probability there would have been resistance and there would have been rebellion. It is full of danger. We have escaped it thus far. It was a matter of congratulation to both democrats and republicans that Grant's majority was so large as to make the vote of Louisiana, of Arkansas, and of Texas unimportant; but if it had been otherwise, if the election was to depend upon the vote of any one of those States, what would have been the result?

Mr. President, let me consider the result in 1857, when Buchanan and Frémont were candidates. The electoral vote of Wisconsin was not cast on the day fixed by law. The Constitution requires all these votes to be cast upon the same day. There was a snow-storm in Wisconsin that prevented the electors from coming together and voting upon that day. They voted upon the next day. When they came to count the votes in 1857, a motion was made by a Senator to reject the vote of Wisconsin because it was not cast upon the day provided by law. I think the objection itself was good; but what was the decision of the President of the Senate, Mr. Mason? He decided that the motion was out of order. He said nothing was in order but to count the votes. He overruled the motion, and he would have overruled a motion to exclude the vote of any State. He took the view of his power, and I think it was correct, that the two Houses were there simply as witnesses; they were not there to make motions, they were not there to offer objections; but they were simply there to witness the count; and so he decided. And when motion after motion was made to exclude the vote of Wisconsin because it was not cast as required by law, he decided every time that nothing was in order but to count the votes. And when they had counted the votes, he said the purpose for which they had assembled had been discharged, and the two Houses separated. They had a great debate in the House over the question, which lasted two or three days, and they came to the conclusion, substantially, that the two Houses had no power over the question. They had a debate in the Senate, and they arrived at the same conclusion in the Senate, although not by resolution, that they were powerless. Now, suppose the election had turned upon the vote of Wisconsin; that by counting the vote of Wisconsin Frémont would have been elected; that by rejecting it Buchanan would have been elected. If Mr. Mason had excluded the vote of Wisconsin, his party would have supported it; if he had received the vote of Wisconsin, the republicans would have supported it; and in that case he would have had, beyond all question, the decision of the election in his own hands. In either case it would, in all probability, have resulted in violence, in insurrection. The danger was escaped in that case because Buchanan was elected independently of the vote of Wisconsin, and it was no matter how it was cast. But the point to which I call the attention of the Senate was the decision of the Vice-President in that case, that nothing was in order but to count the votes, and that the Houses were there simply to witness that count, but without having any power whatever.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the consideration of what is called the twenty-second joint rule of the two Houses.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator, by his amendment, it seems to me, does not make provision for one contingency. It may be a remote contingency, but still it may arise, and that is in case no person should receive a majority of the votes thus cast in the various districts, or if two persons receive the same number, it does not provide which shall have the place or how that controversy shall be settled. Perhaps it is not so remote a contingency, when we find the remarkable fact that in districts where thousands and tens of thousands of votes are cast, still on counting them they come out nearly even. There seems to be some law of chance which leads to parallels in such cases that are really remarkable. It certainly would not be very remarkable if, after all the votes are cast in the districts and the additional votes are given in the proper manner, it should be found that two persons have an equal number.

Mr. MORTON. I will state that that contingency is not provided for by the amendment. The committee did not agree upon it. I was of the opinion that in such cases as that the election would be by both Houses of Congress in joint convention, each Senator and each Representative having one vote. I will come to the consideration of that after a while. But in regard to the question of majority we provide for that. We dispense with the requirement of a majority and we adopt the plurality system, and I will now speak of that. We intend to avoid an election by the House altogether, and that that candidate having a plurality shall be elected and not require a majority of all the votes cast. We now require a majority of all the electors appointed to elect, and if no candidate gets a majority of all, then the election goes to the House of Representatives, and the election is there not by each member having a vote, but the election is by States. Now one word as to the plurality rule. It is adopted by all the States except three in the election of State officers. It is adopted by all the States in regard to the election of members of Congress, and no complaint is made of it. It is adopted by the States in the election of electors. The electors who have a plurality are elected. A majority is not required to elect electors, even, under the present system. We believe that the election there should be final, that there should be no second election required, and that that candidate who has a plurality of all the votes, that is, a majority over anybody else, shall be elected. It has worked well in the States; it has been used in most of the States for a hundred years, and no State now proposes to go back from the plurality to the majority system. I now ask for the reading of the twenty-second joint rule.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The two Houses shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of one o'clock p. m., on the second Wednesday in February next succeeding the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; one teller shall be appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, the certificates of the electoral votes; and said tellers, having read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses then assembled, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been counted, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote and the names of the persons, if any, elected; which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses. If, upon the reading of any such certificate by the tellers, any question shall arise in regard to counting the votes therein certified, the same having been stated by the Presiding Officer, the Senate shall thereupon withdraw, and said question shall be submitted to that body for its decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, in like manner, submit said question to the House of Representatives for its decision; and no question shall be decided affirmatively, and no vote objected to shall be counted, except by the concurrent votes of the two Houses; which being obtained, the two Houses shall immediately reassemble, and the Presiding Officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted, and upon any such question there shall be no debate in either House; and any other question pertinent to the object for which the two Houses are assembled may be submitted and determined in like manner. At such joint meeting of the two Houses seats shall be provided as follows: For the President of the Senate, the "Speaker's chair;" for the Speaker, a chair immediately upon his left; the Senators in the body of the Hall, upon the right of the Presiding Officer; for the Representatives, in the body of the Hall not occupied by the Senators; for the tellers, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives, at the Clerk's desk; for the other officers of the two Houses, in front of the Clerk's desk and upon either side of the Speaker's platform. Such joint meeting shall not be dissolved until the electoral votes are all counted and the result declared; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any of such votes, in which case it shall be competent for either House, acting separately, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to direct a recess, not beyond the next day at the hour of one o'clock p. m.

Mr. MORTON. The first point to which I call the attention of the Senate is that this twenty-second joint rule is grossly unconstitutional. No provision can be found in the Constitution that gives a shadow of power for its adoption. Not only is it without authority, but it is in violation of the very theory of the Constitution. The intention was to place the election of President independent of Congress, to make the Executive independent of the Legislature, but this makes the election of President to depend upon either House, not by a law, but by a joint rule. It enables the Senate by a vote to throw out the vote of North Carolina or New York; it enables the House of Representatives to do the same thing. What is the provision? When you come to look at it, it is monstrous. It is astonishing how that rule could ever have been adopted. The two Houses are assembled to count the votes, and a formal objection is made, if you please, to counting the vote of New York, entirely formal; there may be no sense in it, no foundation for it, but if anybody objects, then the two Houses must separate and they must vote upon this objection, and unless it is overruled by both Houses the vote is rejected. If the Senate sustains the objection, the vote of New York is thrown out. If the House sustains it, the vote of New York is thrown out. It enables either House without debate—they must not debate without adjournment—they must not adjourn to consider, but they must decide summarily; it enables either House to throw out the vote of any or of all the States.

We had an illustration of that the last time the votes were counted. A formal objection was made to receiving the vote of Arkansas. The Houses separated and voted. What was the result? What was the objection to receiving the vote of Arkansas? When you came to look at the seal upon the certificate it did not appear to be the seal of the State. Upon close examination it was found to be the seal of the secretary of state and not the great seal of the State. Upon that technicality the vote of Arkansas was lost, the people of Arkansas were disfranchised in the presidential election. It turned out, I believe, that the State had no other seal, and that the seal was put to that certificate that is put to all papers required to be certified by the executive department of Arkansas; and yet upon that objection the vote of Arkansas was lost. The House overruled the objection, but the Senate sustained it. Suppose it had been New York, the vote of New York—the vote of five millions of people—would have been thrown out upon the mere technical objection by one House. There would be more sense in it if it required the concurrence of both Houses to throw out the vote of a State, but by this rule one House may reject the vote of a State. And so it may reject the votes of all the States, and you may in every case throw the election of President into the House of Representatives.

To show you some of the objections offered upon that occasion, I want to refer to the proceedings that took place at the time. For example, a motion was made to reject a part of the vote of Georgia cast for Horace Greeley upon the ground that he was dead. It would have been very important in determining the question of the majority if the election had been close. The Senate overruled that motion, and decided that the votes cast for Horace Greeley must be counted, so that they would count in making up the majority of all the electoral votes. The House sustained the objection, and the vote of Georgia in part was lost simply because the House of Representatives sustained the objection. There the two Houses disagreed. They disagreed in the case of Arkansas. Now we come to the case of Texas. Objection was made to receiving the vote of Texas. I will read what the objection was, to show the character of it. Mr. Trumbull, a very able lawyer as you all know, objected on this ground:

Because there is no certificate by the executive authority of that State that the persons who voted for President and Vice-President were appointed as electors of that State, as required by the act of Congress.

The certificate was informal, had not been made out correctly. That was Mr. Trumbull's objection. It was afterward re-enforced by Mr. Dickey, of the House:

Mr. Dickey objected to the counting of the electoral vote of the State of Texas, because four electors, less than a majority of those elected, undertook to fill the places of other four electors, who had been elected and were absent.

The two Houses separated and voted. We overruled the objection in the Senate by a vote of 34 to 24; I believe the vote in the House was still closer; but a change of six votes in the Senate would have thrown out the vote of Texas. Luckily nothing depended upon it; but if the election of one candidate or the other had depended upon it, what would have been the result in that case? Then we come to the vote of Mississippi. A formal objection was made to the vote of Mississippi. We overruled it; the House overruled it by a small majority; but it happened that nothing depended upon that vote. It was not very important; but it shows the possiblity of doing the thing. Now let me suppose a case where the Senate belongs to one party and the House to another in point of majority and we come to count the votes. If you please, a democratic State is called. We look at the certificate. It is informal in some respect; some little objection may be made to it in the nature of a special demurrer. We separate, and vote. The Senate being republican, we throw out the vote. The next State called is a republican State. Some little objection is found to that, because a good lawyer can always pick some little flaw in a certificate. The two Houses separate, and the House of Representatives throws out that vote. And thus we throw out first on the one side and then on the other, till they are all gone, and the election goes for nothing.

This is not only possible but it is probable. Here we have a rule—not a law, but a simple rule agreed upon between the two Houses—by which either House, against the other, may throw out the vote of every State in this Union for President and disfranchise the people and throw the election into the House of Representatives. There could not be a grosser violation of the Constitution of the United States. It was not intended to give Congress any power over the electoral votes; but here by a simple rule, never passed as a law, never approved by the President of the United States, either House of Congress is enabled to disfranchise any and every State in this Union and to throw the election into the House of Representatives. If that is not full of danger, I cannot conceive what is. You take a time when parties are bitter, when party spirit runs high. The election of President is a great prize; the office commands vast patronage and vast power; and here is a rule which enables either House to cast out the vote of any or of all States, disfranchise the people, and throw the election into the House of Representatives. It makes Congress a canvassing board, a thing that the Constitution expressly prohibited, not in words but in effect, by various provisions. While the Constitution attempted to withdraw the election entirely from Congress, here is a rule that puts it in the hand of either branch. It does not require a joint vote to disfranchise New York, but enables either the House or the Senate to disfranchise New York, Mississippi, or Indiana.

Now, sir, I come to the question of an election by the House of Representatives. We have a rule that enables either House to throw the election there. What is an election by the House of Representatives? There they vote by States. They do not elect the President by a majority of the members of that House, giving it some sort of a popular character, but they vote by States. Nevada has one vote; New York has one vote. Nevada with forty-two thousand people has the same vote as New York with five million—one hundred and fourteen times the population of Nevada.

There was some calculation made as to the possibility of an election by the House, and I want to read it from the report, as being better stated than I can do it now. Let me call the attention of the Senate to the possibility of an election by the House of Representatives. In the election of a President by the House of Representatives under the present apportionment, each State having one vote, forty-five members out of two hundred and ninety-two can make the election. For example:

> Delaware, Nebraska, Nevada, and Oregon have each one member, and four members would cast the votes of those four States; Rhode Island and Florida have each two, and four members would cast the votes of those States; Minnesota, New Hampshire, West Virginia, Vermont, and Kansas have each three members, and two votes in each, or ten members; in all five, would cast the votes of those five States; Arkansas, California, and Connecticut have four members each, and three in each, or nine in all, may cast their votes; Maine and South Carolina have each five members, three of whom in each, or six in both, may cast their two votes; Maryland, Mississippi, and Texas have each six members, and four in each, or twelve in all, may cast the vote of those three States. This makes nineteen States, or a majority of the States in the Union, and forty-five members may cast their votes and elect a President of the United States against the wishes of the other two hundred and forty-seven members of the House of Representatives.

This may not be likely to happen; but this can be done under the election of a President by the House of Representatives. Why, sir, to call that republican or to call it democratic is to make nonsense of it. It is as far removed as possible from what may be considered a democratic or republican election of a President of the United States. And see how it is done: The voting is by members elected two years before. Members elected two years before on different issues, when the politics of the country were entirely different from what they are when the election takes place, are to choose the President of the United States and do it by States.

The election of a President by the House of Representatives is full of danger. It has been tried twice, and each time we came near making shipwreck. Can this Government stand the strain of another election by the House of Representatives? The monstrous injustice of giving forty-two thousand people in the State of Nevada the same voice in electing a President that New York with five million has is too great a strain for the Constitution of the United States. In 1801 it came near making shipwreck. They balloted until nearly the 4th of March, and then an election was secured by a change brought about under circumstances that I will not now state, not reflecting great credit upon the parties engaged in that change. In 1825 John Quincy Adams was elected by the House. The election was said to have been brought about by the action of Mr. Clay in securing for Mr. Adams the vote of Kentucky. Mr. Clay was afterward appointed Secretary of State. He never recovered from it. It was too great a power. I do not believe that Mr. Clay was guilty of corruption; I think that is not the general opinion; but the fact that Mr. Clay caused the vote of Kentucky to be cast for Mr. Adams, and that Mr. Adams afterward appointed him Secretary of State ruined the prospects of Henry Clay; he never recovered from it. And now think of the grand opportunities for corruption. Take those States where one Representative casts the vote of the State; take the State of Nevada, or any other State that has but one member; that one Representative has the same power as all the Representatives of the State of New York. The patronage of the President is ample enough to reach every member of that House. You cannot conceive of grander opportunities for corruption than with a Representative from a State where there is but one Representative, or where a Representative may cast the casting vote in the delegation of a State and determine the vote of it. It is not only anti-republican essentially; it was the result of a compromise; but it is full of danger; and in these days, when there is so much said about the danger of corruption, we cannot contemplate without horror the idea that the election may be placed in the House, where a few members of the House by the sale of their votes or the promise of office to themselves or to their friends may determine the election and elect a President for forty or forty-two millions of people.

We ought never to have another election by the House of Representatives, and when we look back to the reasons that brought about the adoption of that provision of the Constitution, we find they have wholly failed; they are all gone; and the convention, if assembled now to adopt the Constitution, would never think of providing for an election by the House of Representatives, each State having one vote. If there was a tie-vote, as suggested awhile ago by the Senator from California, and it was provided that both Houses of Congress might assemble in joint convention, each Senator and each Representative having one vote, that would come much nearer to an equality among the people and to making the election of a popular character than to give to each State one vote in the House of Representatives, because then each State would have a vote in the joint convention somewhat according to its population; and the number of men necessary to be corrupted in order to control the election would be much larger than under the present system. Therefore we should not tolerate the longer continuance of this provision in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, to sum up the points which I am making against the present provisions of the Constitution and in favor of the proposed amendment, I will state that the theory of the electoral college grew out of a distrust and unwillingness to allow the President of the United States to be elected by the people; that the theory was that the election should be committed to a body of men who should be made entirely independent, who should meet and deliberate and vote secretly, so that they might be independent; that their action should never be known, they should vote by the ballot, but all of that has been reversed by pledging them in advance to vote for particular candidates; that by the general-ticket system the vote is by States, it is an election by States, it is not national in its character; that a few States may control the election, so that now attention is paid only to the votes of the larger States; the votes of the small States have very little consideration, but under the plan proposed each district must be counted by itself and it is the same thing whether it is in a large State or in a small State; that under the present system a small minority of the people of the United States may elect a President against a very large majority for the defeated candidate; that under the present system the electoral vote has never approached within 10 per cent. of the popular vote and has varied from it several times from 30 to 35 per cent.; that under the present system an election may be had by the States in the House of Representatives in defiance of the popular vote and in defiance of the plurality vote of the electors.

General Jackson in 1824 had the largest popular majority that any President has ever received in the United States, and he had a large plurality of the electoral votes also; but there were four candidates, and he did not get a majority of all the electors. The election went to the House of Representatives, and Mr. Adams, who did not receive one-third of the popular vote, was elected over General Jackson. What has been done may be done again.

Then there is no method now of contesting a fraudulent election of electors. Though the fraud may be so open that the world knows it, yet that vote must be counted unless the President of the Senate shall take the responsibility of withholding the vote on the day when it is to be counted. I say further that there is no power in Congress, that there is no room left to the States, in point of fact, to contest the election of electors; that under an election in the House, the vote being taken by States, forty-five members of that House may elect a President against the wishes of two hundred and forty-seven; that the States casting the vote may have a population of only one-fifth of the entire population of the United States.

Mr. President, the original theory that the people could not be intrusted with the election has failed. We now understand that large constituencies are safer than small constituencies. The patronage of the President is ample to reach every elector; it is ample to reach every member of the House of Representatives, but it is not ample enough to reach the people of the United States where they vote directly for the candidate of their choice. We are in danger of a collision at any time. In a closely contested election, to be decided by fraudulent votes, to be decided by arbitrary conduct on the part of the President of the Senate, there is danger of revolution. Our forefathers were wise, but they seem never to have contemplated the possibility that there might be two sets of electors or that electors might be chosen by fraud or by violence. The debates do not show that these things were ever contemplated, and there is not one word in all the debates of the convention of 1787 to show that it was contemplated or expected that the electors would be chosen by the people; on the contrary the expectation was that they would be chosen by the Legislatures of the States, and the power was put into their hands, and when the Legislatures have committed this power to the people they have done a thing that was never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution, but they have done it under circumstances under which revolution or insurrection may arise.

Now, I submit to the members of the Senate that this question is too important to be passed over. It ought not to go over this session without action. You may not be able to agree upon this amendment, but perhaps you can agree upon something by which we can take away all or a part of the dangers by which we are surrounded; and I submit that the Senate ought never to give up the consideration of this question until something has been decided that we may send to the House of Representatives for their concurrence.

It is more important than any other measure that can possibly come before us. It is not new. For more than seventy years attempts have been made, at different times, to change the Constitution so as to avoid some of these dangers. Amendments have passed the Senate and the House four times by a two-thirds majority to avoid some of these evils, and yet finally failed. The question is not new. The remedy proposed is not new, it is almost as old as the Constitution. Seventy years ago some of the ablest men in the Senate of the United States foresaw these dangers, but they have been allowed to sleep along. But shall we allow them to sleep along until the danger comes, until the actual collision takes place? If we are patriots, without distinction of party, without regard to our party differences upon other questions, we will address ourselves to the great work of so amending our Constitution as to avoid the great dangers that lie at the very threshold.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended, but the subject was so important that I could not forbear so much.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, more than two years ago I submitted some remarks to the Senate upon the question which has been to-day discussed by the Senator from Indiana, and when afterward the Senator from Indiana brought the subject formally before the Senate by the introduction of a resolution of instructions to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I was very much rejoiced that he did so, and I voted for the instructions with the greatest pleasure, as I believe every member of the Senate did; and I hoped for a report from that committee with which we might all agree.

The dangers to which we are subjected have not been exaggerated by the Senator from Indiana; the difficulties under which we labor have not been exaggerated at all; but it does seem to me that the remedy proposed by the committee in the resolution now under consideration really fails to meet the very danger which is most menacing. That there may be frauds in the election we all know. That there may be fraudulent returns in the States and a fraudulent count of returns, with the experience of Louisiana before us, needs no proof. But the greatest difficulty, the most menacing of all, is the count of the electoral votes here in Washington. If the result of the presidential election had depended on the votes of Arkansas and Texas at the last count that was made, we might have seen this country plunged in civil war. And before that we once witnessed the most extraordinary spectacle when the votes were counted in February, 1869, when the President of the Senate, or the acting Vice-President as he was called, announced that under a resolution passed by the two Houses of Congress the vote of the State of Georgia should be counted if it did not change the result; but that if it should change the result it was to be rejected.

With these dangers menacing us, liable at any moment by this mode of counting the vote to see this country convulsed from one end to the other, not in a sectional way, but in a way that may reach every hamlet in the land, I must confess I was a little surprised when I looked at this report to find that it provides no sufficient or safe mode of counting the electoral vote.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me a word just there?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. I intended to speak of that part of the amendment providing a tribunal for the decision of contested elections. It was a subject of grave consideration in the committee. Some were in favor of constituting the Supreme Court of the United States the tribunal to decide questions of contested elections; others thought the circuit courts or the district courts of the United States should be provided; others again thought there ought to be a special tribunal created by Congress. It was then thought better to place the whole matter in the decision of Congress to provide this tribunal. If we should put any special tribunal into the Constitution, it might not work well, and it might be difficult to change it. It was thought better, therefore, to leave the whole subject to Congress, believing that Congress would come to a safe and wise conclusion, because the subject was necessarily not of a party character, but one upon which men would differ or act together simply as they were patriots and lovers of their country, and we therefore inserted this provision:

> The Congress shall have power to provide for holding and conducting the elections of President and Vice-President, and to establish tribunals for the decision of such elections as may be contested.

We could therefore establish, if Congress thought proper, the Supreme Court as the tribunal, or the circuit courts in the different parts of the United States, or we could establish an independent tribunal for this very purpose. The whole power is left to Congress, where it did not rest before.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator think that the use of the word "establish" there implies "new?"

Mr. MORTON. Not necessarily. We thought it would apply to any tribunal that might be selected.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Was it the opinion of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that, under the Constitution as it stands now, Congress has not the power to dispense not only with the twenty-second joint rule, but to put in its place a mode safer for ascertaining and counting the electoral votes?

Mr. MORTON. I cannot speak for all the members of the committee. I think there can be no doubt that Congress can dispense with the twenty-second joint rule; and that if nothing else be done that ought to be done. But it was my opinion, and I think the opinion of other members of the committee, though I will not undertake to speak for them, that Congress has no jurisdiction over the question; that the question of appointing electors and determining who are appointed is a question that belongs to the Legislatures of the several States, and that the other provisions of the Constitution show that it was intended to take the whole subject out of the hands of Congress except in regard to two things which are specially mentioned; first, the time of choosing the electors by the Legislatures, and, second, the time when the votes shall be cast by the electors, which shall be on the same day in all the States. My own conviction is that Congress has no power over the subject whatever, and that the power of the Vice-President results ex necessitate rei from the absence of any power to control him. He is the depositary of the electoral votes; they are not to be opened by him, not to be inspected until the very moment when the vote is to be counted, so that there is no room or time for correcting informalities in the vote that may have been made by the electors, and the electors being functus officio on the day they cast their votes, the first Wednesday in December, they cannot be called together for any purpose. It is a casus omissus, where no provision has been made at all on the subject.

Mr. THURMAN. I was aware that in the resolution reported by the committee there is a provision that Congress shall have power to provide for counting these votes, and indeed for much more than that; but I, for one, am not willing to confide that power to Congress. I want the tribunal that shall count these votes to be provided for in the Constitution. Whether it be the Supreme Court or whether it be some tribunal created for that specific purpose, whatever it may be, I want it provided for in the Constitution. I do not want the laws that are to affect these great privileges, that are to operate on this great subject, to be at the mercy of the dominant faction for the time being in Congress, whatever party that faction may be. I want it fixed in the fundamental law, so that every party shall be compelled to obey it. Therefore, with great respect to the committee and to the able chairman of it who has devoted so much patriotic labor to this subject, I do say that in my humble judgment the report is manifestly defective in this particular; that it will not do; it will not cure the evils, and the greatest of all the evils, that attend this subject.

Nor, while I am up, I may be permitted to remark, do I agree with the Senator from Indiana that the counting of the votes and the declaration of the result belongs, under the Constitution of the United States, to the Vice-President alone. That is not the interpretation that has been placed on the Constitution heretofore. If so, you never would have the joint rule on the subject which now exists. The Constitution does provide that the President of the Senate shall open the returns in the presence of both Houses of Congress, and that the votes shall be counted and the result declared. It does not say in so many words that the Vice-President shall count them; it does not say that he shall decide any question; it does not say that he shall even declare the result. What, then, is the natural interpretation to be placed on the Constitution? It is governed by that great and general rule, that when a duty is to be performed under the Constitution, and no specific mode of performance is pointed out in the Constitution, it is remitted to the law making power to provide the mode. That is a rule of universal application. Where a power is conferred upon the Federal Government, and no officer or Department is specifically charged with that power, then that power is to be regulated according to the dictates of the law-making power, the Congress of the United States. Therefore I am not at all prepared to say that those who have gone before us, who have for so long a time interpreted this provision of the Constitution to authorize a joint rule on the subject, have interpreted it wrong. My own impression is that they have rightly interpreted it. At the same time I do not wish to be understood as exactly approving the present rule. I think it would have been better if the rule as originally advocated had been adopted, that the vote of every State should be counted unless both Houses of Congress agreed to reject it. Now the rule is just the other way. Every presumption is in favor of the regularity of the returns, every presumption is in favor of the legality of the vote, and yet, assuming really that prima facie the return is not regular or that the vote is corrupt, it is put in the power of either House of Congress under this rule to reject the vote of a State. I do not think it should be so. I think the rule should be as it was very near being, for the vote was exceedingly close upon it, that the vote of every State should be counted unless both Houses concurred in rejecting it.

But I must say that the rule in my judgment is defective in another particular. It prohibits debate absolutely, and the ruling was so strict on that subject at the last count of the returns that the Vice-President ruled out of order anything in a resolution offered on this floor that contained the slightest recital, because, he said, that was argument. He would not allow a resolution that had any preamble; he would not allow a resolution in the body of which was contained any recital or any statement of positions of law. He ruled them all out as being in their nature argument, and we were compelled to vote here blindly upon every question that came up before us. Take the very case of Texas, if I am right about the State; I think it was Texas. The Senator from Indiana will correct me if I am wrong. There the objection was that the return was under the seal of the secretary of state.

Mr. CONKLING. Arkansas.

Mr. THURMAN. I thought it was Texas.

Mr. SARGENT. Texas was where four electors were chosen by the other four.

Mr. THURMAN. Take Arkansas. It matters not which State it was. There the objection was that the return was under the seal of the secretary of state, and not under the great seal of the State. It was of the utmost consequence to know whether the State of Arkansas had a great seal, or whether the seal of the secretary of state was the only seal that was used in that State. I remember perfectly well when questions were asked on that subject objection was made that they should not be answered, for that would be in the nature of debate; and we had to go up and look at that seal and see whether it was the seal of the State of Arkansas or only the seal of one of the departments of government in that State. And that was not all, sir. We had then to hunt up the constitution of Arkansas, those who had time to do it, to find whether that State has a great seal or not, and then were not at liberty to communicate the result in open debate. I know we did violate the rule by communicating the result. It was spoken of. Members from their seats spoke of it; others spoke of it in one way and another; but it was all decided by the Vice-President to be out of order; and for what reason, pray? That you might decide on the election of President of the United States between the rising and the setting of the sun on that day. It was wrong. Sufficient time to have discussed every one of those questions fully and to have them decided correctly should have been given, but your rule did not permit it.

I mention this for the purpose of showing that we have in our own hands the power to remedy some of those evils which have existed in the count before and which may have operated unjustly. I remember that I voted to reject the vote of one of those States—I forget whether it was Arkansas or whether it was Texas, one or the other—and I never cast a vote that gave me more pain in my life, for it looked like casting out the vote of a State on a mere technicality; and yet I could not get rid of the positive act of Congress and the provision of the Constitution, as I then thought, upon the light I had before me. Possibly my doubts might have been removed if we could have had the whole facts before us and discussed the question; but your iron rule prevented all debate. Even information on the subject is cut off by that rule. I hope, therefore, to see that rule amended so that we shall not have everything like information to enable us to exercise one of the highest functions of Congress debarred from us and not considered by us.

Mr. President, there is another matter in this resolution that requires the gravest consideration. It proposes a sweeping change in the mode of electing the President of the United States. I will not refer to the abolition of the college of electors. I do not think that is a matter of so much importance; but I refer to that change by which the President is to be elected by a plurality instead of by a majority. That is a sweeping change, that is a mighty change, I may say, in our mode of electing the Chief Magistrate of this country; and when we come to consider the power that that Chief Magistrate exercises in the country, when we come to consider the tendency to increase his power, when we come to look at the facts that show the mighty growth of executive power in this country, it behooves us to take care that we move slowly in the direction of so fundamental a change as that proposed by the report of this committee. I will not say that under no possible circumstances might such a change be undesirable, but I want to amend the Constitution of this country, when it is amended, with the utmost care. It is not a thing to be lightly dealt with. It is not a by-law, or an ordinance, or an ordinary act of legislation that is to be changed every day with every tide of public sentiment or according to the notion of any party that happens to be dominant in the Halls of Congress. Changes in it should be made with the utmost care by every one engaged in making those changes, from their inauguration in either House of Congress to the final votes of the people or of the Legislatures by which amendments are to be ratified or rejected. Therefore, it does seem to me that a proposition so sweeping as this deserves, and must receive before it can be acted upon, the most ample consideration of the Senate.

Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech on this subject. I only rose to express these views and ask the Senator from Indiana to consent that this resolution may be laid over to some other day sufficiently remote in the session to give Senators a chance to consider it. This is the first time it has been brought to the attention of the Senate. The report, it is true, was made at the last session, but nothing was done with it except to print it and let it lie on the table. The Senator has now brought it up for consideration for the first time, and for the first time we have his views in its support. Let its further consideration, unless some Senator wishes to speak on it now, lie over to some convenient day, which will give us all an opportunity to study it and to study the report more carefully than we can yet have done.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has not failed to say several things in which in effect I concur. Just before concluding his observations, he said that a subject like this required very full and ample consideration. In that I agree, and I should more immediately agree with the remark had the Senator extended it to others, as well as ourselves, by whom this proposition must be considered. It cannot become one of the ordinances of the Constitution until it has been so much considered by the States that three-fourths of all the States shall ratify it; and that fact at this moment outweighs all the other facts that occur to me connected with it. A presidential election is to occur in about two years, without stopping to be accurate.

Mr. OGLESBY. Less than two.

Mr. CONKLING. My friend reminds me "less than two," but I speak in round numbers. If there be an emergency, if there be serious importance in this subject, all Senators will agree that its gravity is as likely to be illustrated at the next Presidential election as at any election we can now forecast. A remedy, therefore, for the evil, a mode of avoiding the danger, if danger exists, could be commended by nothing more than its timeliness, by nothing more than the fact that it would take effect on that occasion, that first occasion, that, for aught we know, most important occasion, when the need of purity of legislation will be felt. Can any Senator hope that this proposed amendment will become a part of the Constitution by the action, first of the two Houses of Congress, and then by the action of three-quarters of the States, in season to enable Congress, proceeding under the sixth subdivision of this article, "to establish tribunals for the decision of such elections as may be contested?" Surely such a result is not only improbable; it is impossible, or next door to it; and I think the honorable Senator from Indiana, commending warmly as he does this proposed amendment, does not expect from it that which will put an end to these difficulties in season for 1876. If I am right in that, we are brought not so immediately to the question when, or how, or with what result this amendment shall be considered, as with the question what we should do now, if we should do anything during this fast-ebbing session, to establish safe and certain modes of ascertaining the next presidential election.

I do not intend at this time, or probably at any time, to detain the Senate upon that subject. I venture, however, to ask the attention of the Senate, and especially of the Senator from Indiana, to the language of the Constitution upon which some comment has been made by the Senator from Ohio. We find in the Constitution as it stands these words:

> The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates—> and the votes shall then be counted—the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed.

That is his function—

That language is very spare. The words are very few. It is certainly wanting in many an amplification which would be convenient to a student of the Constitution and convenient to a legislator looking for ways in which it might be enforced; but, as the honorable Senator from Ohio very seasonably reminds us, there are certain canons of construction which help out these words. There are familiar rules, found even in the Constitution itself, but more especially rules in the light of which all written instruments, even constitutions, are to be read, which assist and aid in effectuating this provision. I will not at this time ask the Senate to listen to an opinion from me as to power conferred by the Constitution to adopt this twenty-second joint rule, but if I read article 12 with so much latitude as to convince me that the twenty-second joint rule is within its permission, I think I should be willing to rely even upon my own ingenuity then to devise ways and modes, under a reading of the Constitution as broad as that, which would go very far to avoid and guard against the danger that surrounds the count. Certainly I think few lawyers will study the twenty-second joint rule and deny that some of its provisions are at least questionable in respect of the power given by the Constitution thus to direct and govern the counting of the votes.

Returning for a moment to these words in the Constitution, we find that the President of the Senate is to do but one thing, which is to open, and of course manually to present, and be the custodian of, the returns upon which the election is to depend, which are called in this provision of the Constitution "the certificates." Then we find the language changes, and it ordains in most mandatory phrase that "the votes shall then be counted." There, I submit, is appropriate domain for legislative discretion, either by legislation or by a joint rule, if concurrent action between the two Houses rather than legislative action be preferred. I find added:

> The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President.

Those are not superficial words. They do not relate to the modus; they are not confined to the count; but they go to the ultimate result, and declare that the person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President. Stopping where I am, as I do not mean to detain the Senate, I cannot doubt, until some Senator shall adduce reasons which have never been given in my hearing, that there lies within the limits of that provision an opportunity not only to dispense with the twenty-second joint rule, but to put in its place a rule or a statute under which those words can certainly be enforced, under which the votes can be counted and counted in the presence of the two Houses, and under which the person for whom a majority of them has in truth been cast shall be the President. Of the details I say nothing; of the merits of the proposed constitutional amendment I say nothing; but I do say, and had I the power to do it and believed it to be necessary, I would bring it home to every Senator and impress it upon him, that we shall fall short in an urgent and imminent duty if the 4th of March witnesses a dissolution of these two Houses without their having devised some mode better than the twenty-second joint rule of ascertaining and recording and establishing the will of the people expressed by elections in the States as to the choice of a Chief Magistrate; and whenever any committee, whatever may be the fate ultimately of this or another constitutional amendment, will propose legislation (upon which we can act at once, and which need not be postponed to the distant by and by of ratifications in States) looking to this end, I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to address itself very promptly and diligently to that legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is great force in what the Senator from New York has said touching the doubts that may arise respecting the twenty-second joint rule. I think myself that there is constitutional power in the legislative branches of the Government to regulate the exercise of the power conferred in the Constitution respecting the election of President and Vice-President, just as in all other powers granted in the Constitution Congress has always exercised and must always exercise the authority to regulate the methods and manners through which the ends looked to in the Constitution are to be reached. We have always done that as to the courts, in many respects as to elections, and in fact respecting the exercise of almost every one of the powers granted in the Constitution. But whether it is competent for the two Houses, not acting in a legislative capacity, but each acting for itself, to provide a rule by which it is in the power of either House to prevent the counting of every vote that may be returned from a State is open to very grave question indeed.

It is plain enough, I think, that Congress cannot by a law declare that the Vice-President of the United States, or rather the President of the Senate, whoever he may be, should not open and count the returns made from the various States; but the manner of such a count, what should be regarded as in law a vote of a State, the means of ascertaining whether it is the legal vote of the State, it appears to me, must be the subject of legislative provision. And so also I think it safe to say—perhaps safer than what I have already said—that Congress may provide by law a tribunal, which in case of a dispute after the function named in the Constitution has exhausted itself of this opening and counting of the votes, shall have the power to decide who is legally elected President of the United States; not to review the action which the Constitution declares the Presiding Officer of the Senate shall take in the presence of the two Houses, but to ascertain in a method pointed out by law what are the votes that the States have given, and who therefore is the person who has received, in the language of the Constitution, the greatest number of votes.

If I am not mistaken in my recollection, I at one time prepared and presented a bill on that subject, and I have given considerable attention to it, because no man, no matter what party he belongs to, (after the experience we have had, when the candidates of a certain party received a large majority of the votes, of the disorder, the excitement, the difficulties, the disputes that arose in respect of what were called the votes of States, which, if counted or not counted, would produce no difference in the result,) can fail to see that when the counting of the vote of a particular State, or of a paper that is presented as the vote of a particular State, is to make A or B the President, there will necessarily result an excitement, a difficulty, and a disorder which every lover of his country would greatly regret, and which every legislator, so far as he has the power under the Constitution to do it, ought to provide against. I concur, therefore, most heartily in what the Senator from New York has said, that there ought to be a very careful investigation of this question, in order that, so far as we have the legislative power, if we have it at all—and I think we have—we may provide in the constitutional way for ascertaining what the will of the people of the various States may be from time to time in respect of the election of a Chief Magistrate.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Indiana is not in now and I dislike to make the motion which I rose to make, in his absence. If no Senator desires to say anything further on this subject now, I will make the motion, and if the Senator from Indiana should come in and desire it to be reconsidered I will submit to that; or perhaps the Senator can be sent for.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I should hardly like to have the question postponed in the absence of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. THURMAN. I will make my motion and then give way for the Senator's motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until the first Monday of February.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to move to take up the question pending in regard to Louisiana, but I do not wish to do so until the Senator from Indiana is present. That will supersede this as a matter of course, if it is taken up.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am quite sure that the Senator from Indiana, although he is desirous that there should be ample discussion on this question, as every Senator must desire, does wish to have it disposed of if possible without interruption. I hope therefore that no motion of the kind now proposed will be put in his absence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the further consideration of the joint resolution be postponed until the first Monday of February.

Mr. ANTHONY. Pending that motion, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 21, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. FINCK. I ask unanimous consent to present a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, and to move that it be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the recent expulsion of the members and officers of the Louisiana house of representatives by an armed force of United States soldiers, after the body had been duly organized in a manner similar to that which the courts of the State had pronounced lawful and proper, was an outrage utterly defenseless in its atrocity, and calls for the severest censure and punishment on all its actors, aiders, and abettors.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to furnish a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the governors of the several States.

GEORGE L. CONVERSE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
ALPHONSO HART,
President of the Senate.

Mr. GUNCKEL. It ought to be stated that, as they were entitled under the constitution of Ohio, the republican members of both houses protest against that resolution. That protest should be presented with the resolution.

Mr. SYPHER. I object to the reception of the resolution for the reason that it does not recite the truth.

Mr. COX. On behalf of my old State I say that every word of it is true.

Mr. PELHAM. And I say it is not true.

Objection having been made, the resolution was not received.

Mr. MOREY, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial to the House of Representatives of the United States from 52 republican members of the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to present a resolution passed by an indignation meeting held at Cincinnati, Ohio, January 16, 1875, on the interference by the military authority of the United States in Louisiana.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I make the point of order that this is neither a petition nor a memorial nor the resolution of a State Legislature, and that it cannot be received under the rules.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects, that is sufficient.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Even if it were a paper of any one of the classes which the gentleman has stated, it would not be in order to present it now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] wanted to bring in a minority report of a Legislature, a thing which was never heard of.

OHIO RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the citizens of Alleghany County, Pennsylvania, relative to the Ohio River Improvement and Transcontinental Railways; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back the petition of the Washington and Ohio Railroad Company for aid in the construction of their road to the Ohio River; and the same was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. FINCK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the memorial of republican members of the house of representatives of Louisiana was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done. A reference of that kind is not subject to reconsideration. None of the references made on the floor of bills, &c., at the request of members, can be reconsidered. The reference is made by unanimous consent, and if a gentleman loses his opportunity to object, he cannot afterward move to reconsider.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Mr. LAMPORT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Agriculture, presented a report in writing on the act to amend an act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroad and other means of transportation within the United States, approved March 3, 1873; and the same was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes;

The bill (H. R. No. 3823) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; and

The bill (H. R. No. 3911) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

CHESAPEAKE AND DELAWARE BAYS.

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the following resolution; and the same was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals:

Resolved That the Secretary of War be directed to report to this House the most feasible route for a ship canal over the narrow peninsula which separates the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays, and also approximate estimates of the cost of the same per mile, together with the probable distance saved by said canal between Baltimore and New York, the ports of New England, and all European ports, and the advantage likely to accrue from the construction of said work to the commerce of the United States in the development of our trade and commerce and the probable saving of time.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4456) to amend certain postal laws; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. LUCY R. SPEER.

On motion of Mr. BUFFINTON, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Mrs. Lucy R. Speer for a special appropriation to pay for her deceased husband's services under the act of March 3, 1873; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

J. J. BROWN.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4457) for the relief of J. J. Brown, late a first lieutenant in the Second Regiment Arkansas Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to make report to this House from the surveys already made in regard to the expediency of widening and deepening the main channel of New Haven, Connecticut, to a depth not exceeding twenty feet, and also the expediency and estimate of expense of a breakwater between the eastern shore of the entrance of said harbor and the "southwest ledge," so called, or such part of said distance as may be found most expedient or necessary for the protection of said harbor.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAINT JOSEPH'S HARBOR.

Mr. CONGER also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House with a report of the condition of Saint Joseph's Harbor and River, and what appropriation, if any, is necessary in the interest of commerce to carry on and perfect the improvements at that point.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GARFIELD. A few moments ago a message from the Senate announced the return of three of the general appropriation bills, with amendments. I ask unanimous consent that those bills be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that they be printed with the amendments of the Senate and the amendments numbered.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of resolutions of the Legislature of Wisconsin, concerning the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Wilmington, and the same were referred to the Committee on Claims.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Mr. BUNDY, by unanimous consent, introduced a substitute for House bill No. 4460, to grant to the State of Ohio, for the use and benefit of the Agricultural College at Columbus, Ohio, the unsold and unappropriated lands in said State; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN BALTIMORE.

Mr. SWANN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolutions; which were read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to ascertain and report the condition and capacity of the existing preparation of the city of Baltimore to accommodate the vast trade which is already beginning to tax the capacity of that great commercial center, and the extent and accommodation of all the public buildings heretofore authorized by the Government, whether completed or in progress of enlargement at this time; and the adequacy of the same to the national wants either now or soon to be developed.

Resolved further, That said committee be requested, should the same be deemed advisable, to procure the most reliable information upon the same from the actual results already in course of development, and that a report be made at an early day setting forth all the facts connected with this important subject, and the wants of said city of Baltimore in its connection with the centers of trade in the West and Northwest and the leading cities of the sea-board as well as the national capital, and her just claim to the national countenance and support by her relations with other commercial centers.

Resolved further, That said committee be requested in their action to consider the propriety of placing said city of Baltimore upon a fair and equal footing with all other cities having the same claims to the national favor and support; and that said committee be instructed to report to this House such recommendation for custom-house, post-office, and other necessary facilities as may be demanded by the growing trade of said city, as the result of said investigation may prove just and equal, and in accordance with the pressing wants of so large a class of the people.

Mr. SWANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. PARSONS. I have here a memorial of the national banks of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, in relation to the taxation of national banks. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and be printed.

Mr. SENER. I object to taking up the time of the House by reading such a paper.

Mr. PARSONS. Then I ask that it be referred and printed, and also printed in the RECORD.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, representatives of national banks in the city of Cleveland, respectfully represent that the taxes assessed on national banks in Ohio are exorbitant, unequal, unjust, and oppressive.

Exorbitant, inasmuch as they are not only assessed for county, State, and municipal purposes, but also by the General Government, on capital stock, circulation, and deposits.

Unequal, inasmuch as money invested in bank stock is required to pay three or four times as much tax as money invested in real estate or any other species of property.

Unjust, inasmuch as State banks, savings-banks, and private bankers, with whom national banks have to compete for business, are more lightly taxed, if at all, and enjoy immunities not guaranteed to national banks.

Oppressive, inasmuch as the tax in the aggregate amounts to nearly, if not quite, 5 per cent. on the capital stock, while they are restricted to the legal rate of interest, which in Ohio is 6 per cent., or by contract 8 per cent.

We therefore beg you will so modify the national-bank act as to relieve national banks from excessive taxation.

ROBERT HANNA,
President Ohio National Bank.
JOHN F. WHITELAW,
Cashier National City Bank of Cleveland.
A. K. SPENCER,
Cashier First National Bank of Cleveland.
J. COLWELL,
Cashier Commercial National Bank of Cleveland.
W. L. CUTLER,
Cashier Merchants' National Bank of Cleveland.
H. GARRETSON,
President Second National Bank of Cleveland.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN JERSEY CITY.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a bill (H. R. No. 4458) relating to a site for a public building at Jersey City, New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. That will be the order.

ALFRED FRY.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a bill for the relief of the heirs of Alfred Fry.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The bill provides that an act entitled "An act for the relief of Alfred Fry," approved June 20, 1874, shall be amended so as to read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money now appropriated or hereafter to be appropriated for the payment of the Army, to the administrator of the estate of Alfred Fry, deceased, late captain Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, for the use of the heirs of said Alfred Fry, the pay and emoluments of a captain of infantry from the 30th day of August, 1863, the date of his commission, to the 17th day of March, 1865, the date the said Alfred Fry was mustered as captain, as if the said Alfred Fry had been mustered as captain on the date of his commission, first deducting whatever sum may have been paid him as lieutenant during the period for which pay is hereby allowed as captain.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Does this bill come from any committee?

Mr. PACKARD. It does substantially. The facts about the case are these——

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. DONNAN. If my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. YOUNG,] will hear me one moment I am sure he will not object to this bill. A bill was passed by the last Congress for the relief of Captain Fry, and just before it became a law the applicant for whose relief it was passed died. This bill is simply to so amend the law that the proceeds may go to his heirs.

Mr. SPEER and others. That is right.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 4459) was received, read three times, and passed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DONNAN. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing. I report the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed twenty-five hundred extra copies of the report of the Commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, with the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on the same subject, and accompanying documents, for the use of the said commissioners.

It will be noticed that this is not for the use of the House, but for the commissioners. The expense of printing is trifling—between eight and nine cents a copy.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I now call for the regular order.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the privileged motion which came over from last evening. The Indian appropriation bill, upon the question of its engrossment and third reading, was rejected by the House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] moved to reconsider that vote, and the pending question is upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let me submit a proposition which perhaps will be acceptable.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I object to any proposition. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Then let the bill go.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. SPEER called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered; and the question is upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the Indian appropriation bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 81, nays 165, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arthur, Atkins, Begole, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Caldwell, Cannon, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clymer, Coburn, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crossland, Danford, Durham, Farwell, Finck, Fort, Foster, Glover, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Holman, Howe, Knapp, Lawson, Magee, Martin, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Neal, O'Brien, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pierce, Randall, Read, Ellis H. Roberts, Ross, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Sener, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stephens, Storm, Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Ashe, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Berry, Biery, Bowen, Bright, Buckner, Bundy, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crittenden, Crooke, Crounse, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, De Witt, Dobbins, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Freeman, Garfield, Giddings, Gunter, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lawrence, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Luttrell, Lynch, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, McLean, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Nesmith, Niles, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Perry, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, Robbins, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, Small, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, St. John, Stone, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Sypher, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, James Wilson, Woodworth, and John D. Young—165.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Banning, Barnum, Barry, Bass, Beck, Bradley, Benjamin F. Butler, Clinton L. Cobb, Crutchfield, Curtis, Duell, Eden, Eldredge, Frye, Herndon, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Lansing, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Niblack, Pendleton, Phillips, Purman, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Schell, Smart, George L. Smith, Stowell, Charles R. Thomas, Tyner, Walls, Wheeler, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—42.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs: Will the House reconsider the vote by which it refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it in order now to move a recommitment of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because that order has been partly executed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Is not the operation of the previous question now exhausted?

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs immediately, whether the House will order the engrossment of the bill. That question not having been disposed of, the operation of the previous question is not exhausted until that question is taken.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Is it in order now to move to recommit the bill with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because the previous question was partly executed—on two separate amendments.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But we reconsidered all that action, and we stand now where we did before the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. No; the House has simply reconsidered the question whether the bill shall be ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. In other words, the only way to defeat the Choctaw claim is to vote down the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so state.

Mr. CONGER. Is it too late to reconsider the vote by which the Choctaw amendment was adopted?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider was in that case made and laid on the table.

Mr. RANDALL. After we shall again have voted upon the engrossment of the bill, will not the previous question be then exhausted?

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. RANDALL. Then a motion to recommit will be in order.

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit will be in order after the engrossment has been ordered. The Chair will state the precise process, so that members may vote intelligently. The question is now, will the House order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time? If the House should do so, then it will be the right of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE,] who has charge of the bill, to call the previous question upon the passage of the bill. Should the House refuse to second the previous question upon the passage of the bill, then the motion to recommit with or without instructions will be in order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. But, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the motion to recommit with instructions could not be made before there was a vote by tellers simply on the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It could not.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. So that, if upon that vote the previous question should be ordered, then the motion which I indicated yesterday I would like to make would be shut out.

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. CESSNA. Let us shut it out.

Mr. RANDALL. But the members who gave the 120 votes yesterday could, if they desire to do so, vote down the previous question, and then the motion of the gentleman from Maine would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that this is a very abstract question; the point is very plain.

Mr. SHANKS. Is it in order, under the guise of parliamentary inquiries, to get in speeches upon the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not parliamentary so to do.

Mr. SHANKS. Then I object to any further proceeding of that kind.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. We cannot get them in in any other way.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If we second the demand for the previous question, can we not have the yeas and nays on ordering the main question?

The SPEAKER. Of course, that is the A B C of the rule. The question now recurs on reconsidering the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 54.

Mr. SENER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 17 only voting in the affirmative.

So the House reconsidered the vote by which the engrossment and third reading of the bill were refused.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I demand the previous question on the pending motion.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, on which the previous question is still operating.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is voted down, will it be in order to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that three times.

The Speaker appointed Mr. LOUGHRIDGE and Mr. RANDALL as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 104.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I now move the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back as it now stands before the House with the exception of the so-called Choctaw amendment, and on that motion demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is it in order to move also to include the Chickasaw amendment?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not insist on that amendment, as it will only complicate this still further. The Chickasaw is a small matter, and has no such points of objection as the Choctaw amendment.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will insist on his amendment.

Mr. SHANKS. I have advocated the Choctaw claim because I know it is just. If one is out I want the other out also. I want everything out that is honest if you strike out the Choctaw claim.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I did not vote for the Chickasaw claim. My only object is to get out the big claim. I have no objection to the amendment if the House choose to vote on it.

Mr. CONGER. Do the instructions include the Chickasaw amendment?

The SPEAKER. They do not.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded, in order to get that amendment included.

The House refused to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded—42 only voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of Mr. HALE, of Maine, to recommit with instructions.

Mr. SHANKS. What becomes of the Chickasaw amendment?

The SPEAKER. The House has refused to include that in the instructions.

Mr. SHANKS. I am sorry it did.

Mr. HANCOCK. I demand the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 120, nays 130, not voting 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Archer, Arthur, Banning, Barber, Bass, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Cannon, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clymer, Coburn, Conger, Cook, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crounse, Curtis, Danford, Donnan, Durham, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Finck, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Holman, Howe, Hurlbut, Kasson, Kelley, Knapp, Lawson, Lofland, Lynch, Magee, Martin, McCrary, James W. McDill, McNulta, Merriam, Monroe, Morrison, Myers, Neal, O'Brien, O'Neill, Packard, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pierce, Pike, Potter, Randall, Read, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stephens, Storm, Strawbridge, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Thompson, Todd, Waldron, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Wolfe, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—120.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Atkins, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Beck, Berry, Bowen, Bright, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Corwin, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Crutchfield, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Garfield, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hagans, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Joseph R. Hawley, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunter, Hyde, Hynes, Kellogg, Lamar, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Maynard, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Moore, Morey, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Isaac C. S. Williams, William Williams, Willie, and John D. Young—130.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Barnum, Bradley, Duell, Eden, Frye, Gooch, Harrison, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Lamison, Lawrence, Luttrell, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Parsons, Phelps, Purman, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Small, Smart, George L. Smith, Christopher Y. Thomas, Tyner, Walls, Wheeler, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Wood—38.

So the House refused to recommit with instructions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Pending the vote on the passage of the bill the gentleman from Indiana moves to lay it upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is a motion to recommit without instructions in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because the next vote will be on the passage of the bill, the previous question operating clear through.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote?

The SPEAKER. No, as it has been partly executed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the motion to lay upon the table, as that is the only vote which will accomplish the object.

Mr. SPEER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 114, nays 132, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Bass, Beck, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Caldwell, Cannon, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clymer, Coburn, Conger, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Curtis, Danford, Donnan, Durham, Finck, Fort, Foster, Glover, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs, will the House pass the bill?

Mr. CLYMER and Mr. SPEER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 120, nays 126, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Berry, Bowen, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Corwin, Crooke, Crutchfield, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, DeWitt, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Freeman, Garfield, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. So the House refused to pass the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make a suggestion to the House, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will allow me.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I ask the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOLMAN. I renew my motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill and to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. And on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 37, a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion to reconsider and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Which way did the gentleman vote?

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair to make that inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL. I was asking the gentleman through the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Iowa vote on the prevailing side?

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I did not. I desire to ask the Chair if the gentleman from Indiana can withdraw his motion after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The SPEAKER. He can.

MRS. MARY L. WOOLSEY.

On motion of Mr. SCOFIELD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Mrs. Mary L. Woolsey, widow of M. B. Woolsey, late a commodore in the United States Navy; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HYDE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote on the prevailing side?

Mr. HYDE. I did.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASSON. Before the vote is taken I ask the Chair to state the position in which this motion, if it is carried, will leave the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is a proper parliamentary inquiry. The effect of the vote, if the House lays the motion to reconsider upon the table, is that the bill is absolutely dead beyond the power of the House to take it up except by unanimous consent or upon a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does it not leave the bill exactly where the House has left it by the last vote?

The SPEAKER. It leaves the bill defeated.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Where the House left it?

The SPEAKER. No; the House by the vote last taken left it open to reconsideration; but when the House by a vote lays on the table the motion to reconsider, it leaves the bill defeated.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What is the position of the bill if the House does not reconsider its last vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not apprehend the question of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The vote just taken, unless it be reconsidered, kills the bill.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Tabling the motion to reconsider that vote does nothing more than that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair still fails to see the distinction which the gentleman from Maine intends to make. Of course the adoption of the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider kills the bill beyond the power of the House to revive it.

Mr. SHANKS. It buries the dead bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that so plain a parliamentary point as this should be discussed. Every one who knows the principia of parliamentary law knows that if a bill is lost and a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was lost is laid upon the table, the bill is dead.

Mr. KASSON. When I put my question to the Chair I appreciated the parliamentary position of the question; but I thought that some members of the House did not. I beg leave now to ask this question: Whether the member of the Committee on Appropriations who has charge of this bill will, if the vote just taken is reconsidered, allow us to vote on the bill if we can get at it, as we can, I think, without the Choctaw clause in it, or does he intend to force the Choctaw provision on us?

Mr. SHANKS. That would require unanimous consent, which cannot be had.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KASSON. I ask my colleague, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE,] who is in charge of this bill, for an answer to my question.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I will answer it. We have not forced the Choctaw clause on the House. The House by a majority of 40 votes put it in the bill yesterday. How, then, are we forcing it on the gentleman or on the House?

Mr. KASSON. That was not on a full vote, because all the votes taken this morning indicate that the House wants to get rid of this Choctaw clause.

Mr. SHANKS. The House refused by a large majority to refer the bill back to the committee with instructions to strike out the provision in relation to the Choctaw claim.

Mr. SENER. Is not all this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is; but the Chair will answer any questions which tend to explain the parliamentary effect of a vote.

Mr. SENER. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The question I desire to ask is, if the motion to reconsider is laid on the table and thus the bill is killed beyond redemption, what right has the Committee on Appropriations in the premises? Can it at any time report a new Indian bill or do we have to wait for the call of that committee? That is the question I want determined. If the House is willing to take the responsibility of killing all these appropriations for the Indians, let it be done.

Mr. RANDALL. The House takes no such responsibility.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The committee can report a new bill tomorrow.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I would like to have the Speaker answer my question. I trust my friend from Maine in some things; but not in everything.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. If this motion be not adopted, will it then be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, so that we may strike out the Choctaw clause or have a vote on that question directly?

The SPEAKER. If the House should reconsider the vote by which it refused to pass the bill, it is then divested of the previous question, but not far enough back to allow an amendment. The amendable stage of a bill is when it is upon its engrossment and third reading. If the bill be carried beyond that point, it is not in the power of the House to adopt an amendment to it unless by unanimous consent. But it is in the power of the House to recommit this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or to any standing committee with or without instructions.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I desire to say one thing in connection with the language used by the Chair, which was very strong. The Chair said that if this motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was carried, then this appropriation bill was killed beyond resurrection.

The SPEAKER. Just as much as if it had never existed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Does the Chair mean by that to say that it is not within the province of the Committee on Appropriations to report ab initio an Indian appropriation bill, without this Choctaw claim, if that committee chooses to do so?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say anything about any bill hereafter to be reported; the Chair was talking about this bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Is it not within the power of the Committee on Appropriations to report such a bill?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary point for the Chair to rule upon now. Whether the Committee on Appropriations may or may not report a bill simply for the Chair to rule it out is not a parliamentary question. But there is never any place where the House of Representatives can get itself that a majority is not perfectly competent to do what they want to do. If the majority of the House wish to pass this bill without the Choctaw claim in it, it is perfectly competent for the majority to do so.

Mr. SCOFIELD. If the Chair will state in this case how that can be done, he will oblige some members here, because there is an apparent majority who want to vote for the bill; and there appears also to be a majority in favor of the Choctaw claim.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take some time to explain the situation. If the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] had prevailed to recommit this bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back without the Choctaw claim, it would then have required unanimous consent to consider it in the House. Under the rule it would have to go to the Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Appropriations is privileged to report at any time for reference only. Therefore had that motion prevailed the House would have got itself right back where it stood yesterday in Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That is what I expected when I made the motion.

The SPEAKER. Should the House reconsider the vote whereby it refused to pass this bill, and should then recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it can then do with it what it pleases, and will be in the same situation that it was in when the bill was before in Committee of the Whole. That is the mode the rules plainly point out in such cases; and it is for the majority of the House to so order or not as they please.

The Chair has gone a little further perhaps than is his proper province in the way of suggestion. But he has done so because he has thought there may be some members who are a little confused in regard to the situation. If the House shall table the motion to reconsider, of course this bill will then be absolutely beyond the power of the House to touch. And now, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has put a supposititious case which the Chair very seldom rules upon, the Chair will rule that the Committee on Appropriations are authorized to report sundry enumerated appropriation bills, among which is the Indian appropriation bill. Having reported the Indian appropriation bill, if the House chooses to dispose of that bill in any way, to refer it, to table it, to defeat it in any manner, the Chair does not know where the rule gives the Committee on Appropriations the right to report another bill of the kind during the same session.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It would require a suspension of the rules to permit them to report such a bill?

The SPEAKER. A majority of the House can to-day control the whole matter. It is now quite within the power of the majority to control this bill, to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which committee can report it back to the House without the Choctaw claim.

Mr. FORT. We can reconsider the vote whereby the House refused to pass the bill and then recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of Union.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; because if the vote by which the House refuses to pass the bill is reconsidered, then the bill is divested of the previous question, because the previous question will have then been exhausted. The question now is, "Will the House lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote refusing to pass the bill?"

Mr. RANDALL. Will the Speaker cite any instance in support of such a ruling as that just made by him, where an appropriation bill having been defeated, the Committee on Appropriations was therefore deprived of the right subsequently to report another?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say that they would be deprived of the right to report it. But the Chair has never known in his experience in the House, which is just coequal with that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] an instance where an appropriation bill was defeated, except one, and that on the last day of the session.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Did the Chair ever know an instance of such an amendment as this being put on an appropriation bill?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I can give the gentleman an instance where two railroad companies in New England got a grab at the Treasury by an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I have the right, I will withdraw the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and will call the yeas and nays on the direct motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to do that.

Mr. KASSON. We can reconsider without the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 13 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to reconsider; and upon a division there were—ayes 109, noes 61.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. SPEER said: Is it in order to ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. That is not now in order, because the gentleman allowed the decision of the Chair that the yeas and nays had not been ordered to stand. The gentleman can call for tellers on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SPEER. I do not call for that.

The SPEAKER. Then the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

Mr. FORT. If in order, I now move to recommit this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would not be the parliamentary process. The significance of the vote which has just been taken is that the House desires to vote upon a motion to recommit.

Mr. FORT. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole, and on that motion I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The House having voted to reconsider, the question recurs, "Shall the bill pass?" pending which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HYNES. Is a motion to recommit in order after the third reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. O, yes; entirely so.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. A member has suggested a recommitment to the Committee of the Whole with instructions; but that is not necessary. The Committee of the Whole being composed of precisely the same members as the House, it is not usual to add instructions to a motion to recommit, as is often done upon a reference or recommitment to one of the standing committees.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. But is it proper to offer an amendment instructing the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never known an instance of that kind, because, as has just been remarked, the Committee of the Whole comprises precisely the same members as the House; and to instruct the Committee of the Whole would be the House instructing itself.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Besides, the gentleman has once moved to recommit with instructions, and that motion has been voted down.

Mr. SPEER. On this question we had better have the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. When the bill is reported back to the House, what will be the order of proceeding?

The SPEAKER. The proceeding will begin de novo.

Mr. MAYNARD. If this bill goes back to the Committee of the Whole, will it not be subject to be revised from the beginning? Shall we not have to go through the consideration of the whole text of the bill again?

The SPEAKER. On a strict ruling that would be so. If any gentleman should object to the previous work of the Committee of the Whole being regarded as conclusive, it would be within his power to force the Committee of the Whole to go through with the bill again. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MAYNARD. In other words, it might take another week to get where we are now.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. FORT to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, there were—ayes 109, noes 65.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 26, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. The vote upon ordering the yeas and nays is so close that the Chair will direct the question to be determined by tellers. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FORT, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. PARKER, will act as such.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 44, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report more than one-fifth of the last vote as voting for the yeas and nays; and they will be considered as ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 103, not voting 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Arthur, Barber, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Caldwell, Cannon, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Crounse, Curtis, Danford, Donnan, Durham, Eames, Farwell, Field, Finck, Fort, Foster, Glover, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, Holman, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Kasson, Kelley, Knapp, Lamport, Lawrence, Lowndes, Lynch, Martin, McCrary, James W. McDill, McNulta, Merriam, Milliken, Monroe, Morrison, Myers, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Packard, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Phelps, Pierce, Pike, Potter, Randall, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, William A. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stanard, Storm, Strawbridge, Taylor, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, Whitehouse, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Wolfe, and Wood—140.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Barrere, Barry, Beck, Berry, Bowen, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Comingo, Cook, Crutchfield, Darrall, Davis, DeWitt, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eldredge, Garfield, Giddings, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Hancock, Harmer, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hynes, Kellogg, Lamar, Lamison, Lawson, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Luttrell, Magee, Maynard, McLean, Mills, Moore, Morey Negley, Niles, Nunn, Orth, Isaac C. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Rapier, Richmond, Rusk, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sloan, J. Ambler Smith, Snyder, Standiford, Starkweather, St. John, Stone, Strait, Swann, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Townsend, Waddell, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Whitthorne, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, Willie, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—103.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banning, Barnum, Bass, Bradley, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Dawes, Duell, Eden, Freeman, Frye, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Lansing, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Parsons, Purman, Ransier, Ray, Read, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Sawyer, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Sheldon, Sloss, Smart, George L. Smith, Stephens, Stowell, Sypher, Tremain, Vance, Walls, Wheeler, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—45.

So the bill was recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. As this proceeding is somewhat unusual, the Chair will take the opportunity of saying that the bill as it now goes to the Committee of the Whole goes as though it were entirely a new bill, and it is therefore in order to strike out anything that is in it. It is in the power of a majority of the committee to amend it just as may be deemed fit.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. KASSON. Pending that motion, I hope the gentleman will move to close debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to recognize the gentleman who moved to recommit.

Mr. GARFIELD. He allows me to make my motion. I also move all debate be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Make it one minute.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move all debate be limited to one minute. Amendments of course will be in order.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act

(S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds; when the Speaker signed the same.

CHARLES A. WETMORE.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of privilege which will occasion, I think, no debate. I have in my hand a communication addressed to the Speaker by Charles A. Wetmore. It has been laid before the Committee on Ways and Means, and in their opinion is a sufficient apology for the performance of yesterday, and if it should be satisfactory to the House I move he be discharged from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1875.

SIR: I deem it due to the House of Representatives, the Committee on Ways and Means, and myself to make the following explanation:

On yesterday I was called to the bar of the House to answer a certain question which I had refused to answer before the Committee on Ways and Means. The question being propounded to me by the Speaker, considering myself still under oath, I gave as full and complete an answer as was, or is in my power. Exception, however, was taken to accompanying remarks intended by me to explain my failure to answer fully before the committee, by which remarks I certainly intended no disrespect to the House or any of its members.

The impression which I wished to convey concerning the proceedings before the committee was that they had had the effect to confuse my recollection and to prevent intelligent answers. I am not sure that some of my impressions of what occurred in the committee were correct—I mean those to which, when I related them, exceptions may have been taken. In making my statement I did not intend to do any injustice to the committee or any of its members, yet frankly admit that I may have done so.

So far as the House of Representatives is concerned, I did not intend to cast any reproach upon it; on the contrary, I felt grateful to it for giving me time to answer, and so desired to express myself. If my remarks conveyed any other impression, it was unintentional, and I regret it—and I so, with respect to the House, ask that they may be construed.

Knowing of nothing else that I can do, I respectfully ask for a reconsideration of my case.

Respectfully,

CHAS. A. WETMORE.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. Charles A. Wetmore was ordered to be discharged from custody.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HON. GEORGE Q. CANNON, DELEGATE FROM UTAH.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, from the Committee on Elections, submitted a report in the matter of GEORGE Q. CANNON, Delegate from Utah; which was ordered to be printed, and laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the Indian appropriation bill goes to the Committee of the Whole as a new bill, the limitation applies only to the general debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not propose to cut off the five-minute debate on amendments.

The SPEAKER. It is not in the power of the House to limit the five-minute debate until after it has begun.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to get the House in committee and after one minute to have the bill open to amendment under the five-minute rule. I do not suppose any further general debate is desired.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose there has been a struggle here in good faith, and when in Committee of the Whole we will have a chance to settle it without external reasons or delay of the session.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 88.

So the House refused to adjourn.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. MAYNARD. We have already consumed a good deal of time on the Indian appropriation bill, and I rise now for the purpose of making a privileged report.

Mr. GARFIELD. Can this report come in pending my motion?

The SPEAKER. The rule is very strict as to the high privilege of a conference report. It is in order at any time except when the rules are suspended.

Mr. GARFIELD. My motion is to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. But that does not suspend them. The Clerk will read the rule on the subject, because we may have frequent occasion to know what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indeed, under the practice, reports of conference committees are received at any time, (except when the rules are suspended,) even during the pendency of a motion to adjourn or to adjourn over, and, like the motion to go to the Speaker's table, may interrupt a member who is on the floor speaking.

The SPEAKER. It is due the Chair should state, this privilege made so very high relates only to the making of the conference report. It does not force upon the House the consideration of it. The House can postpone it to any day.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the question of consideration, then.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] submits the following conference report on the tax and tariff bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3572) "to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, and 36; and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 15, and 16.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out the words: "Provided, also, That there shall be an allowance of 5 per cent. and no more, on all effervescing wines, liquors, cordials, and distilled spirits in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity in lieu of breakage;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its sixth amendment, and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out with an amendment as follows: Strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its thirtieth amendment, and agree to the section proposed to be stricken out with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 23 after "States," in line 17, page 14, and insert in lieu thereof the words "when such persons are designated or acting as officers or deputies or persons having the custody or disposition of any public money;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirty-third amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "23" (the number of the section) insert "24;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirty-fourth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "24" (the number of the section) insert "25;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the thirty-fifth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "25" (the number of the section) insert "26;" and the Senate agree to the same.

They further recommend that in section 7, page 5, line 21, after the word "returned" the word "empty" be inserted; that in section 7, page 5, line 17, "1874" be stricken out and in lieu thereof "1875" inserted; that in section 14, page 9, line 17, "1874" be stricken out and "1875" inserted in lieu thereof.

HORACE MAYNARD,
HENRY H. STARKWEATHER,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN SHERMAN,
FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

GENERAL SAMUEL W. CRAWFORD.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, United States Army.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] raises the question of the consideration at this time of the report of the committee of conference which has just been presented.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do so on two grounds: the first is that, in order that we may judge of the merits of this report, we should have the chance to see it in print, so as to know what the conference report is. And in the second place the House is now in a critical situation in regard to the Indian appropriation bill, and we ought if possible to get to an adjustment of that matter before we have drifted farther away from it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say, so far as the printing is concerned, that the conference report was printed in the RECORD of yesterday in the proceedings of the Senate. So far as the other point of the gentleman from Ohio is concerned, we have given more than a week, to the exclusion of the morning hour, to the Committee on Appropriations in the consideration of the Indian bill; and after we have given them all that time members of the committee come here after every amendment has been acted on in the House and engineer its defeat. When they have done that I think they are not in a good attitude to throw that bill now in the way of the consideration of this conference report.

Mr. COX. I desire to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Debate on the question of consideration can only be by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think the report ought to be printed before we are called upon to act upon it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PELHAM. I object to any further debate.

The question being taken on the question of consideration, there were—ayes 72, noes 60.

Mr. COX. Will it be in order for me to enter a motion to lay the conference report on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never entertained a motion to lay a conference report on the table. The question is taken directly on agreeing to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. As no quorum voted, the Chair orders tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman who makes the report, Mr. MAYNARD.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 108, noes not counted.

So the House agreed to consider the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAYNARD. This bill, known on our files as House bill No. 3572, was passed in the House on the 1st of June, 1874. As it passed the House it contained twenty-nine sections, involving a great many different subjects, beginning in the first section with the duty on silk goods, and concluding with a tax upon all sales of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion and coin, and other securities. It went to the Senate. It there received between thirty and forty different amendments. Those amendments, for the most part, were merely verbal. The substantial amendments amounted in all to not more than five or six. Nothing was added to the bill. The amendments were in the nature of subtractions doing away with the provisions of the bill as we passed it.

The bill came back to the House with the amendments. They were non-concurred in. It was sent to a committee of conference near the close of the last session. After undergoing some slight discussion, the report was disagreed to, and a new conference ordered by the House; and conferees were appointed. The Senate took no action on the subject at the last session. Previous to the adjournment or recess in December of the present session, the Senate granted the conference, and appointed conferees; and the committee of conference have been giving the subject such attention and time as they had at their command while attending to other duties.

The points mainly in dispute between the two Houses appertain to the duties on imported wine and on hops, and the provision allowing the producer of tobacco to sell to the amount of $100; and the tax of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on the sale of bonds, gold and silver bullion, and other securities.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Did the committee strike out the provision, as to the tax on the sales of gold and bonds?

Mr. MAYNARD. It did. The first question of the tax on wines was one that interested the wine producers of the country, and petitions were submitted to us which I hold in my hand, asking us to concur in the Senate amendment as satisfactory to the wine producing interests of the country. The committee agreed to the Senate amendments, leaving, as will be seen by the report, the duty on all wines imported in casks at 40 cents a gallon, and on all still wines imported in bottles at $1.60 a gallon.

Upon the subject of hops, which was much debated in the House, and upon which there was much interest felt, the House had fixed the duty at 10 cents a pound. The Senate had stricken that out, leaving the duty as it now stands, at 5 cents a pound. The committee of conference compromised the difference, by fixing it, as they did in the report, at 8 cents a pound.

The proposition to exempt $100 worth of tobacco, in the hands of the producer, received very strenuous opposition from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who appeared in person before the conference committee and protested against it, and was able by his representations to overcome the earnest expostulations of those who favored it.

The conferees on the part of the Senate refused, as they had done in the previous conference, to concede this, and regarding the bill as very valuable and very important in those portions of it which had been concurred in by both Houses of Congress, the conferees on the part of the House, not having changed their own opinion as to the propriety of this measure, conceded to the conferees on the part of the Senate this point in order thereby to save those portions of the bill in which both Houses had agreed. We concurred in the amendment of the Senate, which practically leaves the law as it now stands.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What was the action of the committee as to the amendment to section 9?

Mr. MAYNARD. The amendment to section 9 was concurred in. It was a slight amendment inserting the word "and" between the words "barrels" and "grain-bags," and a change in the phraseology of the last sentence. The twenty-ninth section of the bill provides that on and after the 1st day of July next there shall be levied and paid a tax on all sales of stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities, at the rate of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on the amount of the sale thereof; that every person, firm, or corporation engaged in the business of selling stocks, bonds, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities, either for their own account or on the account of others, shall keep a true and accurate record thereof, under oath, that the same is true and correct, to the collector of the district where such business is carried on, on or before the 1st and 15th day of each month, and the collector shall thereupon assess and collect a tax of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on the gross amount of such sales. The said list or return shall be made in such form or manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Senate conferees, after much consideration, adhered to their amendment striking out this section, and the conferees on the part of the House receded for the same reason that they had receded from the provision in relation to tobacco, in order to save those portions of the bill upon which both Houses had agreed and which we thought to be very important legislation.

There is one other provision of the bill to which it is necessary to refer. The Senate had provided that the law should go into effect at the commencement of the "present fiscal year." Inasmuch as the "present fiscal year" has partly passed, the Senate receded from their amendment and agreed that the bill should take effect from the day of its passage in the manner in which it had been fixed by the House of Representatives as originally passed. They were the more in favor of this conclusion from the fact that the bill had been pending and known to be pending by the country for something over six months, and the commerce of the country had full notice of its provisions and of the probability that it would become a law, because most of its provisions had been agreed upon by both Houses.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD. I rise to a question of order. It is impossible in the prevailing confusion to hear what is taking place here. This is an important question, and we want to understand it.

The SPEAKER. Members of the House will be in order.

Mr. BURCHARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the only material difference between this conference report and the conference report of last session is not an increase in the duty on hops? Allow me to say that the report of the conference committee at the last session was voted down by this House by a vote of 49 yeas to 136 nays. I understand that the only material difference between the report then voted down and this report is that the members of the conference committee on the part of the House have agreed to compromise by reporting in favor of making the duty on hops 8 cents.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is one of the differences. Another, I have already stated, is as to the time when the act shall take effect. Another difference relates to the twenty-third section of the bill, striken out by the Senate altogether, and stricken out by the last conference. That section is now retained with the phraseology slightly modified. It relates to punishment for frauds in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Parties had been previously allowed to escape punishment for such frauds on the ground that they were not officers of the Government.

The committee agreed to increase the duty on hops for the reason that the House had by a decided vote increased it, and the conferees representing the sense of the House wanted to get from the Senate such concession as their conferees would make looking in the direction of an increase.

Mr. COX. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the House voted for an increase of the duty on hops? When did they vote that?

Mr. MAYNARD. On the first day of June, A. D. 1874.

Mr. COX. Was the question debated here?

Mr. MAYNARD. Yes; and the bill passed the House in that shape.

Mr. COX. Then I understand that the conference committee have raised the duty on hops 3 cents.

Mr. MAYNARD. Yes, sir. My associate from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] desires to be heard for ten minutes, and I yield to him for that time.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the conference committee that had this bill under consideration and I declined to sign the report because the House conferees have stricken out on the demand of the Senate everything that was of value in the bill, and have accepted, in my judgment, all the things the Senate had put into it that ought not to have been agreed to. I do not know of hardly a single amendment to the law that is beneficial; if there is any such it is of such slight value that this House ought not now to agree to this report or pass a bill in this form.

To begin with, the whole frame-work of the law which we are now seeking to pass is incongruous. Congress has adopted what are known as the Revised Statutes, and this bill, instead of referring to the proper section of those Revised Statutes, refers to sections of statutes which have become obsolete and a reference to which ought not to be put into our legislation. Now, that is one good reason why we should not pass the bill in its present shape.

The Secretary of the Treasury has advised us that the draught of a bill will be sent to the Committee on Ways and Means in a very few days for our consideration in which can be inserted all the provisions of this bill that are of any value, and in a shape that will be creditable to the House and creditable to the Senate, instead of the incongruous measure we are now called upon to pass. That alone if nothing else ought to defeat this report. Besides, as I think I heard very indistinctly in the confusion the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] say a few moments ago, this is substantially the same report, at least without any beneficial change, that on the 22d of June, 1874, the House rejected by a vote of 136 nays to 49 yeas on the call of the yeas and nays. That is true. There is not in the report presented to-day a single modification of that report which will be of any benefit to the country; there is hardly any change in it of any sort, except the difference between 5 cents and 8 cents per pound on hops; and that increase of tariff will be injury instead of benefit to the country. There is no sense in an increase of 3 cents per pound on hops; it is therefore that much worse than when we voted down the report of a former committee of conference by 136 to 49. Under the law now hops are subject to a duty of 5 cents per pound. The House fixed a duty of 10 cents per pound. The Senate struck out that portion of the bill and the committee of conference have agreed to report 8 cents per pound, rejecting about the only good thing the Senate did.

The House will observe that the few things that are changed are all in the interest of protection and a few men; none of them in the interest of the revenue or of the country. In order to get clear of a difficulty which had sprung up in regard to mixed-silk goods, complaint having been made that a few threads of cotton were sometimes inserted to pass goods really all silk as mixed, the House provided that the act should not apply to goods, wares, and merchandise having as a component material thereof 25 per cent. or over of cotton, flax, wool, or worsted. That clearly defined the line of mixed goods on a just basis. The Senate inserted the words "25 per cent. in value" instead of the words "25 per cent. of material." Now what is the meaning of this?

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] spoke of that as a very slight matter. I tell you it is one of the gravest matters in this whole report. It is a little bit of a swindle, to speak in the vernacular. Twenty-five per cent. in value means that all the mixed-silk goods that have less than seven-eighths of cotton in material shall be increased in duty from 50 per cent. to 60 per cent., or an additional tariff tax of 20 per cent. In regard to a great many articles that means absolute prohibition of importation, and of course no revenue from them, giving the monopoly to a few men and depleting the Treasury.

Cotton is worth now not over 20 cents per pound. Our statistics show that raw silk is worth over $5 per pound that is now duty free and constitutes about half the value of silk fabrics. Now, if you strike out "25 per cent. in material" and insert "25 per cent. in value," with cotton at 20 cents per pound and silk at $5 per pound, all goods that do not contain more than seven-eighths cotton are by this amendment to the tariff, which nobody is supposed to understand, and is treated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] as trivial, raised from a duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem to 60 per cent. ad valorem; and that, as I said, for the benefit of three or four manufacturers, as it will lead to the absolute exclusion of imported mixed-silk goods as well as ribbons, buttons, and gum elastic mixtures of silk, from which we are now deriving a considerable revenue, as may be readily seen from the statistical tables. We are now importing $8,054,000 worth of buttons, ribbons, India rubber, and mixed goods, and receive therefrom a revenue of $4,027,000. If you raise the duty upon those goods from 50 per cent. up to 60 per cent., you will give a monopoly of their manufacture to a few men and exclude the importation of those goods, thus cutting down the revenue largely instead of increasing it as might at first blush be supposed.

The words "in value" are very important words which are put in in the interest of two or three men in the State of New Jersey alone; and all the people of the country who use their mixed goods of silk, or silk goods in the form of ribbon, buttons, gum elastic goods, or any other form are to be taxed that much more, and the revenues are to be cut down to that much less for the benefit of those few men. That item alone, which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] took care not to speak about, will, in my judgment, cause a loss of revenue of at least $2,000,000 by requiring the goods that contain not more than seven-eighths cotton to pay 60 per cent. ad valorem duty instead of 50 per cent. Our information is that many articles of that class can hardly bear the tariff they are now made to bear. That is one good reason, I think, why the House voted down the report before.

Then, again—for I have time only to say a few words about two or three of these items—when Congress remodeled the internal revenue law some years ago, both in the last Congress and at the first session of this Congress, the House insisted upon and passed a provision allowing the smaller raisers of tobacco to sell directly to consumers to the amount of $100 a year. That was done by the last Congress. Every member of the Committee on Ways and Means will bear be out in saying that that was done by express agreement with the manufacturers, with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and with the officers of the Government. When we changed the tax from 16 and 32 cents per pound to a uniform rate of 20 cents per pound upon all sorts of tobacco, and imposed a license of $500 instead of $25 on retail dealers in leaf tobacco, the agreement was made that as we made it impossible for any man to retail leaf tobacco, the producer should have the right to sell $100 worth a year directly to consumers. That provision we put in this bill when we passed it. Then the manufacturers rushed to the Senate, where they of course made a great clamor, and said that that provision would interfere with the revenue, and they had it stricken out. This House again put it in, because it was the agreement. We said to these gentlemen, "If you will restore the retail license back to $25, as it was, reducing it from $500, where it is now, we will let the provision go." But no; they have things their own way and intend to hold them so. They can now go to every poor man, white or black, who has a little patch of tobacco and who cannot take his product to the market town, where they only buy by the hogshead, and they can and do force him to sell his crop to them and their agents at one-half or one-third of its value. They have acted in bad faith and in violation of their agreement after getting the retail license put up so that leaf tobacco cannot be sold except to them, are now demanding the last dollar from the poor men who are cultivating their small tobacco patches; they will not even allow them to sell $50 or $100 worth of tobacco at home, because they can now force them to sell it to them for little or nothing. This is the provision which the Senate has struck out; and two members of this House are ready to agree to that, I am sorry to say.

We want another chance at this matter. Let this report be voted down; let the subject of tariff and internal revenue come up in regular order before the committee, as it will I suppose in less than a week; let the Committee on Ways and Means discuss it and bring the proof of all these facts before the House, as they will; and then the House will see why this provision was struck out in the interest of a few men who want to enrich themselves at the expense of the poverty-stricken people of the tobacco-raising regions.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to know, for my own information, whether or not this bill will afford any increase of revenue?

Mr. BECK. I think it diminishes the revenue. That is my deliberate opinion. I think it is a measure of protection, which will operate to exclude absolutely many articles. The class of mixed silks is a good illustration of this.

One other point. This House demanded by section 29 of the bill that there should be a tax upon sales of stocks, gold and silver bullion, coin, and other securities of $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent., under certain limitations; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue told us that he could collect this tax; that his machinery enabled him to do it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not think I can yield further to the gentleman; I desire to yield to other members of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BECK. Give me one minute more to explain this section. This section was prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who gave the positive assurance that he could collect this tax from the stock-gamblers, while exempting the men who in the course of business are required to buy gold for legitimate purposes. He stated that this tax would yield a revenue of $12,000,000 annually. Yet, although the House insisted on that provision, our conferees have agreed with the Senate in striking it out, because it reaches the rich men—the stock-gamblers of the country—and proposes to lay fresh taxes on legitimate industries.

I say there is hardly a meritorious feature in this bill; and any man who voted against it last session and votes for it now ought to rise and tell the House why he does so. The bill is certainly not improved, and a bill will be presented soon which can be fully discussed and put in shape to benefit the country and increase its revenues.

Mr. MAYNARD. I yield to his colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, as one of the members of the committee from which this bill originated, I deem it necessary to express my dissent from the statements of my colleague on the committee [Mr. BECK] touching the effect of the bill. He has expressed the opinion that it will reduce instead of increase the revenue. So far as this from being its effect, all that was said at the time it was introduced by the committee touching the prospective increase of revenue is more than sustained by the present condition of our finances with reference to customs duties. Take for example the duties upon wines. The recent liberal production abroad has so diminished the price that this article will come in in enormous quantities. It is now coming in at the existing low rate, instead of 40 cents per gallon, specific duty, proposed in this bill. We estimated, in the former condition of facts, that we should get $1,000,000 increase of revenue by substituting the specific duty of forty cents for the ad valorem duty then and now in force. Owing to the fact I have stated, we shall get more than $1,000,000 additional revenue from this specific duty on wines.

Again, it is said that this bill contains nothing that the country desires beyond what is embraced in the existing law. I dissent from this statement. Take for example that which interested very many of us from the West and the Northwest—the duty on jute butts—a production which, as was stated at the last session, had been practically destroyed by reason of the sudden taking off of the duty as it had existed for many years. Letters and other applications came from the West and the Northwest asking us to fix the duty as it had been maintained for many years. The bill as reported, and as it now comes from the conference committee, puts back that duty as it was, and thus tends to restore that agricultural interest.

Then, again, there was difficulty in the exportation of tobacco by the failure of proper provisions for forwarding it in bond and for taking new bonds at the place of export. This bill provides for that and meets an important want of trade.

There are other provisions of general benefit of which I should be glad to remind the House if there were time, but there is not. I have only to say that all the provisions for the general benefit of trade, and particularly exports contained in the bill formerly, are retained in its present form.

As to the proposed exemption for the benefit of small tobacco-growers, I was anxious that that provision should be secured if possible; but it is positively asserted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the introduction of such a provision as was passed by the House, and which has now been excluded by the conference committee, would largely defeat the revenue we already receive from manufactured tobacco.

It would disorganize the system, which is now perfect in its results in collecting the tax, and for that reason, though reluctantly, I am obliged myself to concur with the Senate instead of insisting on the action of the Committee on Ways and Means which put this exemption of the raw material in the bill as originally reported.

Then, sir, in brief, not to take up too much time, there is, according to my estimate, nearer two millions than one million of additional revenue in the bill. There is encouragement to the tobacco export trade of the country. There is the restoration of what is simply just to the large growers of flax in the Northwest, which was taken off in a preceding Congress. With these advantages, although it does not contain all I desire, I deem it my duty to support the bill as now reported by the conference committee.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, for five minutes.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker, there was one objection made last session which is not obviated by the report of the conference committee. It is that alluded to by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] to insert the words "in value," which in fact raises the duty on a class of silk-mixed goods from 50 to 60 per cent. ad valorem on a cheaper grade of goods, which heretofore have been imported at that rate. I am assured by importing merchants familiar with the subject that it will amount to an absolute prohibition of that class of goods. Nearly $8,000,000 in value of that class were imported during the last fiscal year. I do not see why the present rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem, being an enormous protection, should at this time be increased. The raw material, which is free, is equal at least to one-half of the value of the product, and giving 50 per cent. ad valorem rate of duty on the finished product, you give in all 100 per cent. protection upon the value added by the manufacturer. Why, then, in behalf of reasonable protection, should you increase it to 120 per cent.? For that reason alone I am opposed to concurring in the report of the committee of conference. This was one of the objections taken to the report at the last session of Congress, when it was voted down by 49 yeas to 136 nays.

There is a small protection I know in the compromise on hops. Hops were by the House bill raised from 5 to 10 cents a pound. The committee of conference at the last session agreed to the Senate amendment to strike out the increase from 5 to 10 cents. On that little thing of hops, of which there are not imported more than a few thousand bales at the present time, they got together and now come before the House and ask you to reverse your decision and vote for this conference report which you substantially voted down at the last session.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who is also a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I wish to dissent from the judgment expressed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] that this bill would diminish the revenue or that the modification of duty on silk would diminish it. It will, I apprehend, increase the revenue, while it is in itself a proper measure.

He used the word "steal," and said it was to furnish three men in New Jersey an opportunity to rob the people. Sir, it is to prevent an organized system of stealing from the revenues of the United States. Silk manufacture now exists largely in New Jersey, and more largely in Connecticut; largely in New York, quite largely in Pennsylvania, and California; and, strange to say, in Kansas, where it has been established by a community of French silk-makers who settled there three years ago. My friend from that State says the establishment is in his district, and I trust it is prosperous. Now, Mr. Speaker, this relates to silk goods, and I call the attention of the House to the fact, because the most costly silk goods brought into the country are velvet ribbons. The lining, or back, as it is technically called, is made of cotton, flax, or jute, and by making that weigh one-quarter of the weight of the whole ribbon the duty on those kinds is reduced from 60 to 50 per cent., and foreign manufacturers will so adjust the weight of the back and face that those most costly ribbons will come in at the lower rate of duty.

It is, again, to rectify a judicial decision, which has determined ribbons which go under a commercial designation of the name of the maker, the name of the town in which they are made, or the name of the fancy designation given to them, are not in the eye of the law silk ribbons. What is the result? The fine silk goods are shipped not as silk goods but by their commercial designation, and they come in at 50 per cent. Take a silk-lace shawl. It is all silk, but it bears a commercial designation, and it comes in at 50 per cent. When a shawl is shoddied to the extent of 33 per cent., that is of silk unmixed to that extent, it is invoiced as a silk shawl, and the custom-house records are produced to prove to unskillful people these shoddy goods are pure silk because they go through the custom-house, paying 60 per cent. duty. Thus the revenue is robbed on one hand and a certificate of fraud is used to enable importers to rob their customers. So that as to stealing, I say this bill, so far as this section is concerned, might be entitled a bill to prevent stealing from the Treasury of the United States and stealing from unskilled judges of silk goods among the people of the United States, by foreign manufacturers and importers. I hurl back the charge of theft, and I brand those who oppose this provision as maintaining an open door for free drafts upon the Treasury and the purses of the people of our country.

The gentleman referred to the tax upon tobacco. He knows, as every old member of this House knows, that I have steadily opposed the imposition of internal taxes, and that I have steadily sought to relieve them wherever I can. And I do so because any system of internal taxation involves the country in hardships such as this of denying the farmer the power to sell his own tobacco in open market. If he does so in competition with the heavily taxed manufacturer, you make the manufacturer pay you a tax of 20 cents per pound, and then if you permit the farmer to bring his unmanufactured tobacco into competition with him you defraud your own revenues or you ruin your manufacturers.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eighteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to ask him whether the section relating to the duty on silk is at all a matter of difference between the House and the Senate?

Mr. MAYNARD. Not at all; except as regards the insertion in the proviso of the words "in value," which were supposed to make it germane to the previous section of the bill, providing for the duty on all goods made of silk of which silk is the component material of chief value.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Has not this section been substantially adopted by the House after full discussion as well as by the Senate?

Mr. MAYNARD. That is the only change in that regard. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] As several other gentlemen desire to say a few words, I cannot yield him more of my limited time.

Mr. COX. I opposed this bill before when it was here. It has the name of being a little tariff bill, and I suppose I must be satisfied with having a little time to consider it. This bill, indeed, has nothing in it worth considering. It does not make any revenue. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who undertook to make a calculation of the revenue that would be derived from it, based his computation on the increase in the duties on wines. I believe that by checking importation it will have just the other effect.

There is no revenue in this bill. I offered a resolution in the House some time ago in regard to the anticipated deficit in the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury will perhaps in a few days answer that resolution and rectify his estimates. We are not getting in as much money as was expected. There ought to be a new bill. And why not bring into that new bill all these matters which are in this little miserable jobbing bill?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. KELLOGG. Having only two minutes, I have to make a very short speech. I will say in the outset that I have no earthly interest in this bill for myself or for my constituents; for the only thing I tried to get in was rejected without any good reason. But I do not think the bill should be rejected on the ground merely that it is a little bill and does not cover all the interests it ought to do. I would remind my friend from New York [Mr. COX] that the maxim "de minimis non curat lex" is not always regarded by this House, any more than some other more important legal maxims.

As to what my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has said, that increasing the duty from 50 to 60 per cent. will diminish the revenues, I want to call his attention to the fact that, for nine months after the passage of the law by the last Congress making the 10 per cent. reduction on a large class of manufactured articles, not only was the revenue diminished, but the amount of importation of those very classes of goods on which the duty was so reduced was in fact diminished. I say you cannot always take the view which has been suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, for sometimes, when you reduce the rate of tariff upon goods we make in this country, you diminish the importation of foreign goods of the same character or class. Such has been the history of the tariff during the last few years. When you cut down the duties on a large class of our manufactures 10 per cent., you not only reduced the amount of our revenue on those goods, but you also had actually a less amount of goods imported of the same character under that reduction than had been imported during the corresponding period in any of the three previous years. And this period of nine months under the operation of that reduction was before the panic of the fall of 1873, so you cannot lay it to that. When our own manufacturing industry is prosperous and people have plenty of work at good wages, they have money to buy foreign goods with and they will buy them; and while you encourage our own labor by a higher rate of duty, you will produce more at home and buy more abroad at the same time.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. As regards the operation of this bill, especially of its first section with such information as I have, I feel obliged to say that it seems to me entirely inadequate as a remedy for existing evils. What does the bill do? It practically prohibits all importations of textile fabrics composed of mixed materials which contain more than 75 per cent. in value of silk. Nobody in the world, when a line is drawn like that, would import a piece of goods of mixed materials subject to the 60 per cent. duty.

What further does the bill do? It hands over the remainder of textile fabrics composed of mixed materials to the uncovenanted mercies of the code which was passed here last year. And what does the code do with these mixed fabrics? I am aware that learned gentlemen in this House affirm that the code has not advanced the duties on imports. But merchants know very well when they have to give checks for 50 per cent. duties instead of 35 per cent. that it makes a difference with their bank account and their profit and loss account. And I desire further to say that the falling off in the revenue in New York to-day is because the merchants have lost money on nearly all textile fabrics of mixed materials imported under the administration of the code; and nothing in my judgment is more certain than the exclusion of a large proportion of such fabrics, so long as present rates of duty are exacted. It is high time, sir, to stop patching up our old and odious tariff laws.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty which the first section of this bill is intended to correct is in the construction of the law. This first section brings the law back to the construction which existed before the new method of the Treasury Department, some few years ago, construing everything against the Government. It does not alter the law one particle from what it was intended to be originally or from the way it was administered up to the time when the Treasury Department, under a new construction, permitted men to import silks by another name with a little portion of thread or cotton or some other material in them; and when they had got them in at a 50 per cent. duty, by means of this thread as a part of them, instead of at 60 per cent. duty as silks, they turned round and advertised them as warranted all silk. We had before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I had here in the House case after case of such identical advertisements of goods which had been put in through the custom-house at New York as something else than silk goods, marked "mixed," as my friend from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] says, and those identical goods were advertised by the same men as "warranted all silk" after they had been got in.

The object of this provision is to define what amount of mixture shall reduce the duty on the goods 10 per cent. or 25 per cent. on the value; and that the duty on them shall not be reduced 10 per cent. because there is a thread of cotton running along the edge, and then they advertise the goods as "warranted all silk." That is the way in which the merchants of New York have succeeded up to the time this bill was reported in getting along and saving themselves losing money!

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is opposed to this bill, he says, because it will diminish the revenue. My friend from Kentucky has always been willing to go for this bill provided the tobacco feature was out of it.

Mr. BECK. No, sir.

Mr. DAWES. I have always understood his opposition to be to the tobacco clause, but he combines with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] in making an attack upon the clause in relation to silks, hoping to use that as a lever to help the tobacco interest. Now, sir, in reference to the clause of the bill in relation to tobacco, I desire to say that the very departmental law which my friend from Kentucky is struggling to maintain would let in an immense amount of tobacco free from duty, and would take more than $1,000,000 on that very item, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says, right out of the Treasury; and yet my friend from Kentucky makes that a chief argument why this bill should not pass.

Mr. Speaker, I have only a word more to say, and it is this: I had hoped before this time to be able to present to the House a statement of the condition of the Treasury, and to invoke its action in some manner to increase its revenue. This bill, according to all the computations of the Treasury Department, will increase the revenue $1,000,000 in one way or another, and it will also bring the administration of the law back to what it was designed to be. But, sir, we have got to do something more in due time. It is recommended by high authority that we raise all the duties 10 per cent. It is argued that the reduction of 10 per cent. made two years ago must be repealed. I am not quite certain but that we shall be compelled to do that; at any rate I am quite sure we shall be compelled to put the duty back on tea and coffee, and either repeal the reduction of 10 per cent. or put something more upon whisky. This is a case in which we can get $1,000,000 by bringing the law back to its original construction in this respect, and also by the amendment in relation to the duties on wine, on which all parties stand agreed.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means a question.

Mr. DAWES. What is it?

Mr. BECK. It is whether the Committee on Ways and Means, in order to get clear of this difficulty about cotton thread in silk goods, did not agree to place the duty at 25 per cent. on the material, when the Senate made it 25 per cent. on the value?

Mr. DAWES. No, sir. The Committee on Ways and Means agreed to make the duty 25 per cent. without either the word "material" or "value." I believe that this is just the same phraseology as is now in the bill. Twenty-five per cent. could not mean 25 per cent. on the quantity. It must mean 25 per cent. either on the quantity or the value, and 25 per cent. on the quantity is an absurdity. The word "value" is put in so that the ingenuity of the gentlemen who are losing so much money on silk goods may not get around it.

Now, suppose the construction of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] is correct, that it does raise the duty upon this class of goods 10 per cent.; what is it on? It is on silks. It is not bread; it is silks. It is not coffee; it is not a necessity of life; it is on a luxury of life; and never one yard less of silks will be imported into this country because there is 10 per cent. more of duty upon them. Silks are for the rich, and the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Illinois are endeavoring to spare these rich men, these millionaires who pay so much and would be obliged under this bill to pay 10 per cent. more on their silks, when if you do spare them you must turn round and put the tax upon the tobacco, the corn, and the whisky of the poor day laborer. It is one or the other. You must put it upon the silks of the rich or the food of the day laborer. For one I prefer to put it upon the silks of the rich.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLOGG. Before the gentleman takes his seat will he answer one question?

Mr. DAWES. The Speaker has rapped me down.

Many MEMBERS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. MAYNARD. The principal objection I have heard to this report is one which relates to the matter of the duty on silk goods. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] has responded to that point so fully that I do not deem it necessary to add anything except to say that if there is anything that can bear to be taxed for the support of this Government it is the article of silk, and the wearers of silk can well afford to pay the taxes. I now call the previous question upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. And I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. KELLEY. O, no; let us dispose of this matter now,

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 37, noes 81.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BANNING called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being upon a division ayes 16; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. BANNING. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken on ordering tellers, and there were 16 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were not ordered.

The motion to adjourn was accordingly not agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the previous question upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BANNING. I move to lay the report upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never entertained a motion to lay on the table a report of a committee of conference. The same object is attained by taking the direct vote on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. COX. I call for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the report.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; upon a division—ayes 53, noes 37.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the report of the committee of conference, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 99, not voting 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Eames, Farwell, Field, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Gooch, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamport, Lansing, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Lowe, Lowndes, Luttrell, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, McNulta, Merriam, Monroe, Myers, Negley, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Page, Parsons, Pendleton, Pierce, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—137.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Burchard, Caldwell, Cannon, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Davis, Dunnell, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Fort, Giddings, Glover, Gunckel, Gunter, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hyde, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Loughridge, Magee, James W. McDill, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Nunn, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Perry, Phillips, Potter, Rainey, Randall, Read, Robbins, Milton Sayler, Sener, Sheats, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Stanard, Standiford, Stone, Storm, Strait, Swann, Thornburgh, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—99.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barnum, Bradley, Benjamin F. Butler, Clinton L. Cobb, Corwin, Cotton, Curtis, Darrall, DeWitt, Duell, Eden, Frye, Robert S. Hale, Hays, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hunton, Kendall, Killinger, Lawrence, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Moore, Morey, Nesmith, Niles, Pelham, Phelps, Pratt, Purman, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Sloan, Sloss, Smart, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Stephens, Waldron, Walls, Wheeler, White, Ephraim K. Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—52.

So the report was agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. MOORE said: On this question I am paired with my friend from Virginia, General HUNTON. If present, he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. BANNING. I will change my vote from "no" to "ay," so that I may be able to move a reconsideration.

After the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Pending that motion I move that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 64.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. BANNING said: I believe no quorum has voted. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn can be determined without a quorum voting; but before any other business can be transacted, it must be developed that a quorum is present.

Mr. MAYNARD. Would not the vote on my motion determine whether there is a quorum here or not?

The SPEAKER. That is true. But any gentleman has the right to have the question of adjournment determined by tellers, if the House shall order tellers; and as no quorum voted upon a division the Chair will designate the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 14, noes not counted.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. MAYNARD to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. SPEER. Did the last vote show a quorum voting?

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn can be decided without a quorum; but of course nothing can be decided in the way of business in the absence of a quorum. Now, the vote which is pending may disclose that. The question cannot be decided except by a quorum. If the House chooses to interpose a call of the House, it may do so.

Mr. SPEER. When the last vote disclosed the want of a quorum, is it not within the province of any member to object to the House proceeding with business?

The SPEAKER. He may do so by interposing a motion, the vote on which will show whether a quorum is present; but he cannot arrest business by simply rising and objecting, and then sitting down. No quorum having voted upon the last vote, it is within the power of any member to move a call of the House.

Mr. SPEER. I do not wish to have a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will see that the difficulty unravels itself, because the pending question cannot be decided without a quorum.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, there were—ayes 83, noes 19.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BANNING. I move that the House now adjourn; and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 129, not voting 106; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Archer, Ashe, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Burchard, Caldwell, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Finck, Giddings, Gunter, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Holman, Lamar, Magee, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Potter, Read, Robbins, Milton Sayler, John Q. Smith, Southard, Stanard, Standiford, Stone, Storm, Vance, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Willie, Wood, and John D. Young—53.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Begole, Biery, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Corwin, Crooke, Crounse, Danford, Dobbins, Donnan, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hoskins, Houghton, Hubbell, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamport, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Lowe, Lowndes, Luttrell, Lynch, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, McNulta, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Negley, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Packard, Packer, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Phillips, Pierce, Poland, Rainey, Randall, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheldon, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, Snyder, Speer, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodworth—129.

NOT VOTING.—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Atkins, Barber, Barnum, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Bradley, Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Dawes, DeWitt, Duell, Eden, Eldredge, Farwell, Frye, Glover, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, John T. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Hays, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Howe, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Lamison, Lansing, Leach, Loughridge, Marshall, Martin, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McKee, Mitchell, Morey, Nesmith, Niles, Nunn, Orth, Hosea W. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Purman, Richmond, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Sheats, Sherwood, Sloan, Sloss, Smart, George L. Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Stephens, Swann, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Tremain, Tyner, Waddell, Waldron, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Charles G. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, and Pierce M. B. Young—106.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HEREFORD said: On this question I am paired with the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. PIKE, who if present would vote "no," while I should vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced, as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs, will the House lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to?

Mr. SPEER. Were the yeas and nays demanded on this question?

The SPEAKER. They have been ordered.

Mr. SPEER. I hope then the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn.

Mr. MAYNARD. The last vote sufficiently tests the sense of the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order for the yeas and nays will be rescinded.

There was no objection.

The question being taken, the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SPEER. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee: A paper for the establishment of a post-route in Tennessee, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CANNON, of Utah: The petition of citizens of Salt Lake City, Utah, for the passage of the bill defining a gross of matches, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The petition of James Ellis, United States Navy, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of W. J. Frizzell, William Towers, Margaret Gormley, and others, that the Court of Claims may have jurisdiction of their claims, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of Harvey Parish, of Romeo, Michigan, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENDEE: Resolutions of the Legislature of Vermont, relating to reciprocity in trade with the Dominion of Canada, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCRARY: The petition of Hester Coleman, dependent mother of William B. and James E. Coleman, deceased, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Lieutenant John P. Walker, for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon his new and improved plan of towage upon canals, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. McNULTA: The petition of Elizabeth Lanning, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Alexander Worrall, to be reimbursed money paid under certain judgments and decrees, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania: The petition of 332 employés of the Chesnut Hill Iron Ore Company, of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, for the restoration of the 10 per cent. reduction of duty made by act of 1872, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STRAWBRIDGE: The petition of James Sturdevant, of Bradford County, Pennsylvania, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of 30 Union soldiers, for increase of pension to twenty-four dollars a month for those who have lost a leg below the knee or an arm below the elbow, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of Hamilton Ryan, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 22, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Hon. JOHN P. JONES, from the State of Nevada, appeared in his seat to-day.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented the credentials of Hon. THOMAS F. BAYARD, chosen by the Legislature of Delaware as Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4459) for the relief of the heirs of Alfred Fry: in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3572) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed enrolled bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds; which was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCOTT presented the memorial of J. B. Moorhead, and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee or any revival of the internal taxes, and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties on foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SARGENT. I hold in my hand a statement and some affidavits—the statement made by F. V. Hayden, United States geologist, and affidavits of parties showing that about two years since, while some money was necessarily being transported by stage from Virginia City, in Montana Territory, to Fort Hall, to defray the expenses of the expedition, a highway robbery was committed on all the passengers, and among others upon his clerk, who had this amount with him for this purpose, and he asks that he may be relieved from liability in the settlement of his accounts. As this is not a claim to take money from the Treasury, I do not ask that the matter be sent to the Committee on Claims, but that it be sent to the Committee on Finance, who perhaps can best judge whether relief should be granted. I present the papers and move that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

To motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the memorial of H. Mendenhall and others, of Delaware, praying for a repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties upon foreign goods made by the act of 1872, and remonstrating against the restoration of the duties upon tea and coffee. I think it proper to state that I present the petition as it is from some of my constituents, not concurring in the prayer. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON presented a petition of citizens of Arkansas, praying for the establishment of additional mail-routes in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Union soldiers and citizens of Arkansas, praying for an amendment to the homestead laws; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the memorial of H. J. Chapman, civil engineer, praying the adoption of his accompanying plans and specifications for the permanent improvement of the Willamette River, in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and a petition of the Philadelphia County Medical Society, praying for such legislation as will better promote the efficiency of the medical staff of the Army; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARVEY presented a memorial of settlers in the Des Moines Valley, Iowa, asking for redress of grievances and for protection in their rights to certain odd sections of land in that valley; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CANADIAN RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, relating to reciprocity in trade with the Dominion of Canada; which I ask may be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution relating to reciprocity in trade with the Dominion of Canada.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That, having an intelligent regard for the best interests of Vermont, as well as the whole country, it is the duty of our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence against the consummation of any treaty relating to reciprocity in trade with the Dominion of Canada, and to insist that the subject of trade and commercial intercouse with Canada, as well as with all other foreign countries, is not a proper matter of treaty stipulation, but belongs to Congress, and should be wisely regulated by judicious legislation.

Resolved, That in common with the Canadian people we earnestly desire and hope for the early completion of the ship-canal connecting the waters of the Saint Lawrence and Hudson Rivers with Lake Champlain, as forming an important line of communication between the great cities on the Atlantic sea-board and the grain and lumber regions of Canada and the Northwest, and in this work we invite the co-operation respectively of the governments of the Dominion of Canada and the United States.

Resolved, That the governor of this State be, and is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of these joint resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress; also a copy each to the President of the United States and the governor-general of the Dominion of Canada.

LYMAN G. HINCKLEY,
President of the Senate.
H. HENRY POWERS,
Speaker of House of Representatives.

STATE OF VERMONT,
Office of Secretary of State.

I, George Nichols, secretary of state of the State of Vermont, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of joint resolutions adopted by the General Assembly at its biennial session A. D. 1874.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the seal of the office at Montpelier this 1st day of January A. D. 1875.

[L. S.]

GEORGE NICHOLS,
Secretary of State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that these resolutions be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and in making this motion I wish to say that while I shall most cheerfully obey the instructions of the Legislature of the State of Vermont touching resistance to this treaty or any other treaty which they may, so far as I can now foresee, be likely to express an opinion upon, I cannot allow the occasion to pass without stating that I think the Legislature of Vermont is in error in that part of its resolutions in which it states "that the subject of trade and commercial intercourse with Canada, as well as with all other foreign countries, is not a proper matter of treaty stipulation." I think that by the Constitution of the United States there may be many treaties on subjects of trade and commercial intercourse which are the proper constitutional matters of treaty stipulation, and in that respect I am sorry to feel obliged to differ with that body of gentlemen, for whom, individually and collectively, I have the best possible reasons for having a very high respect.

The first President of the United States, General Washington, on the 30th day of March, 1796, transmitted to the House of Representatives a message upon this very subject, a part of which I ask may be read, which I have marked in the volume I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The course which the debate has taken on the resolution of the House leads to some observations on the mode of making treaties under the Constitution of the United States.

Having been a member of the general convention, and knowing the principles on which the Constitution was formed, I have ever entertained but one opinion on this subject, and from the first establishment of the Government to this moment my conduct has exemplified that opinion, that the power of making treaties is exclusively with the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and that every treaty so made and promulgated thenceforward becomes the law of the land. It is thus that the treaty-making power has been understood by foreign nations, and in all the treaties made with them we have declared and they have believed that when ratified by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, they become obligatory. In this construction of the Constitution every House of Representatives has heretofore acquiesced, and until the present time not a doubt or suspicion has appeared to my knowledge that this construction was not the true one. Nay, they have more than acquiesced; for until now, without controverting the obligation of such treaties, they have made all the requisite provisions for carrying them into effect.

There is also reason to believe that this construction agrees with the opinions entertained by the State conventions, when they were deliberating on the Constitution, especially by those who objected to it, because there was not required in commercial treaties the consent of two-thirds of the whole number of the members of the Senate instead of two-thirds of the Senators present, and because, in treaties respecting territorial and certain other rights and claims, the concurrence of three-fourths of the whole number of the members of both Houses respectively was not made necessary.

It is a fact, declared by the general convention and universally understood, that the Constitution of the United States was the result of a spirit of amity and mutual concession. And it is well known that, under this influence, the smaller States were admitted to an equal representation in the Senate with the larger States; and that this branch of the Government was invested with great powers; for, on the equal participation of those powers, the sovereignty and political safety of the smaller States were deemed essentially to depend.

If other proofs than these and the plain letter of the Constitution itself be necessary to ascertain the point under consideration, they may be found in the journals of the general convention, which I have deposited in the office of the Department of State. In those journals it will appear that a proposition was made "that no treaty should be binding on the United States which was not ratified by a law," and that the proposition was explicitly rejected.

As, therefore, it is perfectly clear to my understanding that the assent of the House of Representatives is not necessary to the validity of a treaty; as the treaty with Great Britain exhibits in itself all the objects requiring legislative provision, and on these the papers called for can throw no light; and as it is essential to the due administration of the Government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my office, under all the circumstances of this case, forbid a compliance with your request.

G. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, March 30, 1796.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In February, 1816, this question again arose between the two Houses of Congress on the treaty of trade and commerce with the government of Great Britain, and it was brought to a conference; and in order to show the Senate precisely what the conferees on the two sides stated the true interpretation of the Constitution to be, I beg leave to read a very short paragraph from each, because I know how precious time is, and I do not intend to enlarge on this topic. The conferees of the Senate reported on this topic in this way:

The conferees of the Senate did not contest, but admitted the doctrine, that of treaties made in pursuance of the Constitution some may not and that others may call for legislative provisions to secure their execution, which provision Congress, in all such cases, is bound to make. But they did contend that the convention under consideration requires no such legislative provisions, because it does no more than suspend the alien disability of British subjects in commercial affairs in return for the like suspension in favor of American citizens; that such matter of alien disability falls within the peculiar province of the treaty power to adjust; that it cannot be securely adjusted in any other way, and that a treaty duly made, and adjusting the same, is conclusive, and by its own authority suspends or removes antecedent laws that are contrary to its provisions.

The conferees on the part of the House of Representatives stated their case in this way:

They are persuaded that the House of Representatives does not assert the pretension that no treaty can be made without their assent; nor do they contend that in all cases legislative aid is indispensably necessary, either to give validity to a treaty, or to carry it into execution. On the contrary, they are believed to admit that to some, nay many treaties, no legislative sanction is required, no legislative aid is necessary.

On the other hand, the committee are not less satisfied that it is by no means the intention of the Senate to assert the treaty-making power to be in all cases independent of the legislative authority. So far from it, that they are believed to acknowledge the necessity of legislative enactment to carry into execution all treaties which contain stipulations requiring appropriations, or which might bind the nation to lay taxes, to raise armies, to support navies, to grant subsidies, to create States, or to cede territory; if indeed this power exists in the Government at all. In some or all of these cases, and probably in many others, it is conceived to be admitted, that the legislative body must act, in order to give effect and operation to a treaty; and if in any case it be necessary, it may confidently be asserted that there is no difference in principle between the Houses; the difference is only in the application of the principle.

Accordingly on that occasion the House, apparently as a matter of duty, passed a bill to make the legislative provisions supposed to be necessary by them to carry this treaty, which had been made and which was binding between the Government of the United States and Great Britain, into effect. I know that in 1844 in this body Mr. Choate on one occasion and Mr. Archer on another, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported on the Zollverein treaty that a commercial treaty was not apparently within the competence of the Senate to make, although probably in the history of the country down to that time a dozen at least of such treaties had been made, beginning with the treaty of Jay and coming down to that time, which covered the very topic upon which they spoke. I now ask your attention for a single moment to the decisions of the Supreme Court on the subject of the relation of the treaty-making power to the legislative power. The first is Foster vs. Neilson, decided by Chief Justice Marshall and his associates in the year 1829. They say:

A treaty is, in its nature, a contract between two nations, not a legislative act. It does not generally effect, of itself, the object to be accomplished, especially so far as its operation is infraterritorial; but is carried into execution by the sovereign power of the respective parties to the instrument.

In the United States, a different principle is established. Our Constitution declares a treaty to be the law of the land. It is, consequently, to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the Legislature, whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not the judicial department; and the Legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court.

The article under consideration does not declare that all the grants made by His Catholic Majesty before the 24th of January, 1818, shall be valid to the same extent as if the ceded territories had remained under his dominion. It does not say that those grants are hereby confirmed. Had such been its language, it would have acted directly on the subject, and would have repealed those acts of Congress which were repugnant to it; but the language is, that those grants shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession.

Then the court goes on to say that that particular language is only a promise on the part of the treaty-making power that the sovereign will shall be brought into exercise to confirm those grants by proper acts of legislation.

In the year 1870, in the Cherokee tobacco case, the Supreme Court of the United States, by Mr. Justice Swayne, again decided:

The effect of treaties and acts of Congress, when in conflict, is not settled by the Constitution. But the question is not involved in any doubt as to its proper solution. A treaty may supersede a prior act of Congress, and an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty. In the cases referred to these principles were applied to treaties with foreign nations.

It then appears clear to me that the function of the treaty-making power granted under the Constitution is just as supreme in respect of the subjects to which it applies as is the legislative grant of power or the judicial grant of power; and therefore that any treaty which according to the understood course of nations covered a topic which might be, in the ordinary course of treaty-making powers, the subject of a treaty, as treaties of alliance and of commerce and of war always had been, the treaty is complete in itself so far as to bind the nation to carry it out. It may still require that there shall be an act of Congress to raise money or to raise armies if it be a treaty of alliance; it may still require, in order to make it effectual and to carry it into execution, if it be a treaty of commerce, that the legislative power of the Government must be invoked to regulate the tariff laws. That may be perfectly true; but the simple question is one of constitutional power, whether the treaty binds the nation to do the thing which the treaty itself has provided it shall do. If the nation does not choose to do it, of course other remedies must be resorted to. But to say, as these resolutions appear to have said, that it is not within the constitutional competence of the Senate, of the President, and two-thirds of the States represented by the Senate, acting under that clause of the Constitution, to make any treaty upon the subject of commercial intercourse or of trade, is in my opinion to say that which the Constitution does not warrant, and to do that, if it were carried out, which President Washington thought would be injurious to the common interest of the whole country, and would impair the right of the various States, as States interested in protecting the integrity and safety and peace of the whole Union, to exercise as such States their power touching all matters of foreign relations.

But, as I have said, Mr. President, the time does not allow me to pursue this subject. So far as regards the object which the Legislature of my honored State has in view—that is, to ask me to vote against the ratification of this treaty—as I said before, I shall most cheerfully do it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I was not aware that my colleague was about to discuss this subject this morning, but I must say that I shall take the earliest opportunity that the Senate affords me to discuss the whole question which is involved in the proposition mentioned in the resolutions. It seems to me that the resolutions of the State of Vermont particularly refer to the Canadian reciprocity treaty, which has been proposed and which has been published and the injunction of secrecy removed therefrom.

That being so, I shall undertake to show, whenever the question shall properly come up, that reciprocity treaties were compacts unknown at the time of the adoption of the Constitution; that they are directly in the teeth of the Constitution so far as power to regulate commerce has been committed entirely to Congress and to Congress alone. If the President and Senate alone may usurp the power of making treaties interfering with the revenues of the country and compel the House of Representatives to pass laws in accordance with such treaties, it would certainly be done in defiance of this passage of the Constitution, namely:

The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and the Indian tribes.

It seems perfectly clear that the Senate and the President cannot make a treaty that shall compel the House either to raise or to diminish tariff duties.

But I am not disposed to consume time this morning. This is a question that requires careful thought and some investigation. I do not believe that we are to make a reciprocity treaty valid by the consent of the House. Can the House give away its constitutional rights and privileges? The present House might give away its constitutional power for the time being, but it could reassert it at any moment, and it could not grant or give away any power of a coming House of Representatives. The power clearly and legitimately belongs to the House of Representatives to originate revenue bills, and the entire Congress alone has control of the subject of regulating commerce as much as Congress has the power to coin money or to pass naturalization laws. If the Senate and the President may take this upon themselves, they may take it upon themselves to coin money, to regulate the naturalization laws, or almost anything else.

I decline, however, to go further into this subject now; but I think so far as the resolutions of the State of Vermont go, they were intended to apply to reciprocity treaties; and so far as that is concerned, I shall hope to satisfy a majority of the Senate that the State of Vermont is entirely right in the ground it has taken. I am very certain that a majority of the House of Representatives will be fully in accord with the State of Vermont.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, it was Ordered, That the petitions and papers of citizens of Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, asking for the erection of a public building in that city, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Daniel J. Browne be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Mr. Pinchback, Senator elect from Louisiana, and ask that they be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, January 13, 1875.

I, William Pitt Kellogg, governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that on Tuesday, the 12th day of January, 1875, the senate of the State of Louisiana met in regular session and proceeded to vote for a Senator to represent the State in the Senate of the United States for the term expiring on the 4th day of March, 1879, whereupon Pinckney B. S. Pinchback received a majority of all the votes cast.

I further certify that on the same day the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana also met in regular session, and proceeded to vote for a Senator to represent the State in the Senate of the United States for the term expiring as above mentioned, whereupon Pinckney B. S. Pinchback received a majority of all the votes cast.

I also further certify that on Wednesday, the 13th day of January, 1875, the two houses met in joint session and compared their respective journals of the previous day, whereupon Pinckney B. S. Pinchback was declared duly elected to represent the State of Louisiana in the Senate of the United States for the term expiring March 4, 1879.

Given under my hand and the seal of the State this 13th day of January, A. D. 1875, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-ninth.

[L. S.] WM. P. KELLOGG.

By the governor.
P. G. DESLONDE, Secretary of State.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the credentials just read, together with all the papers relating to the subject on the files of the Secretary, be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to know the scope of that motion. The credentials, or what purported to be the credentials, of this person were presented two years ago. They were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Afterward the committee was discharged from their consideration. Subsequently to that the Senator from Indiana moved to refer them again to the committee, and that motion has never been disposed of. What I wish to know is whether the motion of my colleague includes all the papers, those heretofore presented as well as those just presented. I suppose it is proper to include them all.

Mr. SHERMAN. My motion does include them all; and it is manifestly impossible for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to consider the legal effect of these papers unless they have all the papers in the case, and therefore I make my motion broad enough to comprehend all papers in regard to the election of the Senator from Louisiana, that all be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. THURMAN. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4119) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant a patent for certain land in the Territory of Arizona, to report it without amendment and to ask the Senate to consider it now. It will take but two minutes to read it and pass it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, Mr. President, that will not do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. CAMERON from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4443) in regard to the visit of his Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back a resolution of the American Seamen's Society of New York, in favor of the erection of a merchant-marine hospital at the port of New York, and to ask to be discharged from its further consideration. I will state that there is a bill before the Committee on Commerce which if it should pass would probably make our marine hospitals self-supporting; and while the Secretary of the Treasury is opposed to any appropriation at the present time to erect a marine hospital, if that bill from the Committee on Commerce should pass, perhaps in another year the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would receive such information as would enable them to report in favor of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on discharging the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1019) to make an appropriation for public buildings at Covington, Kentucky, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4163) to provide an appropriation for continuing the construction of the post-office and custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri, to report it without amendment. The Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds agree that there is so much of an exigency for the passage of this bill that it ought to be passed this morning. I therefore, if there is no objection, ask to have it considered now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O no, do not do that. I have just objected to one bill. It will be called on the Calendar in a day or two.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It ought to be passed at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3778) changing the name and location of Pittsfield National Bank, Pittsfield, New Hampshire, to Second National Bank of Manchester, Manchester, Hillsborough County, in said State, to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be indefinitely postponed. I will say upon it that a law having been passed by which persons can start new national banks wherever they please and wind up old ones, it seems therefore hardly necessary to provide by law for any transfer of one bank from one place to another.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4449) to amend an act entitled "An act to revive with amendments an act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia," approved July 7, 1838, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1031) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1066) to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4445) to incorporate the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (S. No. 1053) to amend chapter 7 of title 33 of the Revised Statutes, and it was indefinitely postponed. I move to reconsider that vote and that the bill be placed on the Calendar, with the assent of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. CLAYTON. At the request of citizen of Arkansas, I beg leave to present a proposed amendment to the bill (S. No. 989) amendatory of, and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, and the acts supplementary thereto. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Railroads, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TIPTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1179) to settle the accounts of Lieutenant Charles B. Smith, late of the Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOUTWELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1180) to provide for the organization of a bar of the two Houses of Congress; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LEWIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1181) to repeal an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1182) to establish a court of contested elections; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As that bill relates entirely to judicial proceedings, I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1183) to provide for the reduction of salaries for the time therein named; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1184) providing for the permanent improvement of the mouth of the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon, according to the plans of H. J. Chapman, civil engineer; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1185) for the relief of F. V. Hayden, disbursing agent for the United States geological survey of the Territories; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Finance to the bill. It is necessary in the settlement of Mr. Hayden's accounts at the Treasury. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1186) for the relief of A. P. Jackson and others; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. HAMLIN it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4459) for the relief of the heirs of Alfred Fry was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

VIENNA EXPOSITION.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the Senate all the reports of the commissioners to the Vienna exposition which have reached the State Department.

At the last session, I offered a resolution that the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the Senate a certain report on metallurgy, which I thought from what I heard of it would be extremely useful to the miners and smelters of the Pacific coast. On the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, I modified the resolution so as to direct him to send to the Senate all the reports of the commissioners to the Vienna exposition. From a recent communication with the Secretary, I understand that these reports are not all in, but some of them are in, and I especially desire to have this report on metallurgy. I know of no way to reach it except by the resolution which I now offer, requiring the Secretary of State to send in the reports which have reached the Department. It is now some years since the exposition closed, and if these reports are ever to be of any benefit to the scientific world or the practical world, it is time that they were published. The one that I have in my mind I think will be extremely useful, and I therefore ask that he send to us those reports he now has.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BUSINESS OF NAVAL COMMITTEE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls on the Committee on Naval Affairs for business in the morning hour.

Mr. CRAGIN. It is only five minutes to one o'clock, and it is evident that it will be of very little use to the Committee on Naval Affairs to endeavor to do anything this morning; and, as so much time was occupied in debate on the presentation of a petition this morning, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs may have the next morning hour, and that the unfinished business of yesterday be now proceeded with, as it is so near one o'clock.

Mr. SARGENT. I think that is fair; I hope there will be consent to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Naval Affairs may have the next morning. The Chair hears no objection to the request.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT SAINT LOUIS.

Mr. SCHURZ. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill with regard to the public building in Saint Louis, reported this morning by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which has been agreed to also by the Committee on Appropriations; and I would say that it is necessary that the appropriation be made soon, because the neglect of the work may involve great loss.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4163) to provide an appropriation for continuing the construction of the post-office and custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $150,000, to be available immediately for the purpose of continuing the construction of the custom-house and post-office at Saint Louis, Missouri, now in course of construction.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. This appropriation of $150,000 is to enable the workmen and the machinery now there to be usefully employed; and it is to be taken out (as will be seen by the debate and by the documents presented in the House when the bill was considered there) of the regular appropriation that will be called for of $750,000, toward the completion of the building. This $150,000 is merely in anticipation of the regular appropriation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4462) for the relief of Alexander Burtch; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution for the printing of five thousand additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

FORT YUMA RESERVATION.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to call up a bill reported this morning by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] from the Committee on Public Lands, which will take but a moment. It is important that it should be considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take up some bill that you reported yesterday. Your committee will be reached in a day or so.

Mr. SPRAGUE. We will take up this bill now, if the Senate will permit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4119) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant a patent for certain land in the Territory of Arizona.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was that bill reported to-day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to proceed to its consideration to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair if the bill was reported to-day?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was reported this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it requires unanimous consent, and I shall be glad to hear the report read before we determine whether it shall be taken up or not.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is a House bill to set apart a small reservation to the town of Yuma. The reservation impedes the navigation of the stream on which the town of Yuma is situated. There is a ferry upon this small reservation, and if it is put into the market under the land laws it will be bought up by speculators and impede the town's intercourse with the stream. I submit a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 28, 1874.

SIR: I have examined House bill No. 4119, entitled "A bill authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant a patent for certain land in the Territory of Arizona."

The land involved has recently been released by the Secretary of War from military reservation under authority of the act of June 22, 1874, and lies within the town site limits, as shown by the survey on file in this office. From what examination I have given the subject it clearly appears that the land is necessary for the town as furnishing a water-front, and worth little for any other purpose. So far as is shown by the records of this office, there is no adverse applicant for the tract. I have no hesitation in stating that I deem the appropriation of the land to the purpose indicated in said bill as being advisable and in the public interest. I would suggest—as the actual area of the tract will somewhat exceed five acres—that the word "ten" be substituted for the word "five," occurring next after the word "exceeding," in the seventh line in the printed bill.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT,
Commissioner.

Hon. R. C. MCCORMICK,
House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land-Office to include, under the patent for the town site of the town of Yuma, county of Yuma, Arizona, that part of Fort Yuma military reservation (not exceeding ten acres of land in all) restored to the public domain under the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department such parts of certain reservations in the Territory of Arizona as may be no longer required for military purposes," approved June 22, 1874.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 16) proposing an amendment to the Constitution prescribing the manner of electing the President and Vice-President of the United States; the pending question being on the motion of Mr. THURMAN, that the further consideration of the joint resolution be postponed until the first Monday in February.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withdraw his motion for a short time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion is debatable.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The merits are open to debate on this motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose I can as well speak on the motion pending.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand the Senator from Rhode Island is prepared to speak on the proposed constitutional amendment. I therefore withdraw the motion for his accommodation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to postpone is withdrawn.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, this subject has been so thoroughly discussed in the elaborate and exhaustive report, for which we are indebted to the industry and learning of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that nothing remains to be said upon the inconvenience and danger of the present system of electing the President of the United States and the desirableness of a change. Nor, on the whole, considering the varied rights and interests and traditions to be consulted, does there appear a better mode of reform than the one proposed. Agreeing with the conclusion of the report, although not fully with some of its reasoning, I shall briefly consider the subject particularly with reference to the smaller States of the Union, one of which I have the honor, in part, to represent.

But first, while I fully appreciate the peril of the existing system, in some respects, I apprehend no danger from the election of a President, in the last resort, in the mode in which the Constitution provides, the mode which the people ordained, the mode to which every State has solemnly assented, and which has been twice tried, and the President thereby elected has exercised, undisputed, all the authority of his office. The people of the United States are a law-abiding people. They must be a very restless and unreasonable people who would revolt at a mode of election which themselves had ordained, and had twice consented to, and which they have the power to change. There are reasons sufficient for the change proposed, there is danger sufficient in the present system, without supposing one which could arise only from the insubordination of the people to their own law, changeable, at their pleasure, in the mode which they have provided. That an election illegally or fraudulently forced through the House of Representatives might endanger the stability of the Government is just as probable as that an election illegally or fraudulently accomplished in any other way might produce that result. In either case, the dissatisfaction would be, not with the provisions of the Constitution, but with the perversion, the violation of those provisions. In the case of James K. Polk, who was thought by the friends of Henry Clay to have been elected by the naturalization frauds in New York and by the Plaquemine frauds in Louisiana, the people submitted, because there was no legal remedy, and because all the forms of law had been complied with. And moreover, although the supporters of Mr. Clay believed that a majority ought to have been returned for him, it was undeniable that the difference in the legal votes of the two candidates was small. It was not as though a President had been forced on the people against the wish of the great majority.

In the case of John Quincy Adams, although there was a good deal of partisan talk about not submitting to the election by the House of Representatives, there was never any real danger to the public tranquillity; and the talk was not against the constitutional mode of the election, but against the agencies by which it was alleged to have been accomplished. That these allegations of fraudulent or improper agencies were the suspicions or the inventions of heated partisanship history has well established. But they had, at the time, a great effect; indeed to them was due all the apprehension, real or imaginary, of danger from the unusual but constitutional mode of the election. There was no proper cause of complaint, certainly none of indignation. There was no outrage upon popular rights. The people had divided their votes among four candidates, and neither having a majority, the election came into the House of Representatives. Jackson received 99 electoral votes and Adams 84, and there were 78 against both With so small a plurality, and in so decided a minority, the candidate who received the highest number of votes had no right to claim from the Representatives, on whom the election devolved, the subordination of their own judgment to that of a minority of the electors, who had cast their votes for the highest candidate. To claim this would be to claim an election by a simple plurality, and to make the election by the House less than a ministerial office, a mere farce. It was on no such ground that the friends of Jackson denounced the Representatives who had exercised their constitutional right and their constitutional duty. It was on the pretense of corrupt bargaining in the election, a pretense which deceived many well-meaning men.

The previous case of the election of Jefferson presented a much more serious cause of alarm. Yet this did not arise out of the mode of the election, but out of the singular complications which threatened to prevent an election of either President or Vice-President, and to bring the Government to a stand-still. It was reported that the opponents of Jefferson had gone so far as to determine that, rather than submit to his election, they would prevent an organization, and drive the country to revolution. No such purpose was entertained, unless by a few hot-headed men, who are found in every party, and for which no party should be held responsible. Hamilton disapproved even of the initial proceeding, and frankly and earnestly declared that it was more than a mistake, that it was full of danger, and that its success would threaten the very existence of the Government. Jefferson, who naturally listened with credulity to these reports, said that while he would have joined in armed hostility against any act of usurpation, he would have cheerfully yielded to the election of Burr and taken the place of Vice-President, "because, however it might have been variant from the intention of the voters, yet it would have been agreeable to the Constitution." The crisis did not grow out of any unfairness in the mode of election by States, but out of an apprehended abuse of that mode of election, as any other mode might be abused. Had the same dead-lock occurred by the equal division of the electoral or of the popular vote, a similar danger might have occurred. The danger was not in the system, but in the party madness which strove to pervert to party uses the mode appointed for continuing the Government, and to do this, at the risk of destroying the Government itself. There was not, in either case, just cause of complaint of the equality of the States in the election by the House. And in the result it proved that patriotism was too strong for party, and some of the strongest federalists—and these, it must be remarked, were from the smaller States—took the course which Hamilton advised from the beginning, and voted for Jefferson, or cast blank votes, which amounted to the same thing.

The lead in that patriotic act was taken by the grandfather of the Senator, may I not say the hereditary Senator whose credentials of re-election from Delaware have just been read, and whose name has been borne in this Chamber by three generations, sans peur et sans reproche.

Moreover, there is great advantage in keeping constantly in view the federal character of the Government and the power of the States out of which the Republic grew. We have been compelled, in the great struggle for national existence, and in reorganizing government on the principles which prevailed in that struggle, to transfer to the General Government power and authority which had hitherto been exercised by the States, and which we had been educated to believe could be best exercised by them. While the necessity of this sacrifice was to be regretted, no patriotic man regrets that it was rendered. In that way alone could the rights, the existence of the States themselves, be preserved.

Nor do I agree in all that is said about the unfairness of this mode of election. If the election were made originally by the States, each State having one vote, the objection urged to it would be unanswerable; but as the choice is confined to the three candidates who have received the highest number of electoral votes, the only power of the House is to select which one of three men, high in the public confidence and favor, shall exercise the office which must be exercised by somebody, and the people cannot decide upon whom to confer it. The action of the House is very different from a free election; it partakes of a judicial as well as of a political character.

In yielding my assent to the proposed amendment, I am not therefore influenced by apprehension of resistance to the election of the President by the House of Representatives in the mode provided by the Constitution. But the existing system is an acknowledged failure of the expectations with which it was adopted. Nothing is perfect. The more we study the Constitution of the United States, the more we admire the wisdom with which it was framed, and the elasticity with which it adapts itself to enlarged limits, multiplied population and altered conditions of society. But in respect to the election of President and Vice-President, it never once fulfilled the intention, which was that the electors should be unpledged men, not appointed for a mere ministerial office, but chosen for their character, their wisdom, their patriotism, to perform, according to their own judgment, the highest and most responsible duty that could be delegated by the constituents of a representative government to their most trusted public servants. Instead of that, the electors, as we all know, have been selected to vote for candidates already designated, and the character of the electors does not even enter the consideration of the voters by whom they are chosen. The cumbrous machinery which interposes between the people and the candidates of their choice performs no real service, and is only a needless obstacle and delay. But more than this, it restricts the choice of the people; and instead of leaving their selection open to the whole body of the citizenship, confines it to those who have a sufficient following, in the State in which the voter lives, to receive the nomination of a full college of electors. And even should a candidate have a considerable support in the aggregate, it is all wasted, unless it can be concentrated in sufficient number in one State. A candidate may have powerful support and large minorities, scattered among five or six States, but, unless he has a plurality in some one State, every vote for him is thrown away. Practically, the chance is limited to two, or at most to three candidates; and these must be the candidates of a recognized party, strong enough to perfect an organization, and to put an electoral ticket in the field. As the voter cannot vote for his candidate personally, he must vote for a number of candidates equal to the number of electors to which his State is entitled, and must find that number who are precisely of his way of thinking, and who will consent to serve if elected; and moreover they must be distributed all over the State. Nor can the voter select the President of one party and the Vice-President of another; he cannot vote for his choice, for one of these offices, unless he accepts the candidate associated on the ticket with him. At the last election, the choice of every voter was practically restricted to Grant and Greeley. If he desired a man other than either of them, he had no way of making his choice effective, even to the extent of his own vote. Nor could he vote for Grant and Brown or Greeley and Wilson. He was obliged to vote for Grant and Wilson or for Greeley and Brown, or to throw away his vote, which he would do just as effectually by voting for any other candidate, or for any two of them, except on the ticket on which the two were associated.

A great evil of this is that it strengthens and perpetuates, indeed it makes quite necessary the caucus or convention, which has grown to be almost as much a part of our political system as though it were embodied in the Constitution, and which crushes the individuality of the voter, and makes him only a part of a great partisan machine, his only choice being to which party he shall surrender his rights of private judgment. How this opens the way for intrigues and disreputable combinations and for conspiracies to obtain power for personal objects, how it pledges in advance, and as the price of support in the convention, that great patronage which the President wields I need not point out. It would greatly purify our elections if the voters could select their candidates from the whole body of their fellow-citizens, uncontrolled by convention or caucus, and responsible only to their own sense of right. It would not indeed supersede the convention, but would deprive it of its tyranny, and make it responsible to a patriotic public opinion. The voter, if he did not like a candidate, would not be obliged to vote for him because there was no other way to vote except for one that he liked still less. And this consideration would compel the nominating conventions to greater prudence and wisdom in the selection of candidates.

All the machinery of the existing system is absurd, and is an obstacle rather than a facility, on any other theory than that upon which indeed the Constitution was adopted, but which has utterly failed, that the electors should be unpledged men, charged with the duty of choosing a President, according to their own judgment, and to what they might consider the public good, not controlled or in any way directed by the popular voice, which it was supposed that they would guide, not follow. Every one argues that the system should be abandoned, that the theory of the election should be conformed to the practice, and that the machinery should be better adapted to the purpose which it is intended to accomplish.

At the same time it is very much better to make the change with as little violence as is practicable to the traditions of the Government, and to retain, as far as possible, all of the original intentions of the Constitution, except where the intention has manifestly failed in practice. Especially is it necessary to preserve the recognition of the States, in the two electors which belong to each equally, beyond those to which they are entitled on the basis of population. Not only is this right, but no amendment which failed to recognize this equality could obtain a two-thirds vote in this body, or receive the requisite assent of three-quarters of the States.

The amendment proposed happily secures the right of individual selection, without infringing upon the rights already secured to the States. It permits every voter to vote for the candidates of his choice for President and for Vice-President, and yet preserves to the States the equivalent of the two electoral votes to which, by the original compact, they are entitled, in addition to those which are based on population. It presents the natural mode of election, and abolishes the unnecessary formalities which separate the people from the candidates. While it is desirable that the Chief Executive of the country should be elected by a majority of the people, and that his authority should rest on the broadest basis of the popular will, yet since so desirable result can only be attained by the general concurrence of opinion which must be left to its own free expression, it is a matter of necessity that some expedient be resorted to, in the failure of such concurrence. To require an absolute majority to elect the President might practically prevent an election; and if there be no one whom a majority of the people prefer, then the natural expedient is to elect that one whom the greater number prefer. In the first instance, absolute unanimity would be desirable; but that is practically impossible; so a majority is accepted; and by the same natural conclusion, if an absolute majority be unattainable, a plurality is next best. So plain is this, that, in nearly all the States, a plurality elects the State officers, executive, legislative, and, when they are chosen by the people, the judicial; in some States, a majority is required for members of Congress on the first trial; but in all, a plurality elects on the second. Nor does the present mode of election secure a majority of the people to the election of President. It may happen, and has happened, that the candidate receiving a majority of the electoral vote is in a minority of the popular vote. On the whole, it must be admitted that, next to an absolute majority, a plurality presents the most natural and the fairest mode of election, and that the other expedients, however well planned, have not commended themselves in practice.

Although, therefore, I do not object to the election by the House of Representatives, for the reasons that have been stated elsewhere, I freely agree that it should be abandoned. It may seem, at first, that the smaller States make some surrender of power by changing the system which gives them an equal suffrage in the last resort. This might be true if the smaller States had some interest apart from the larger ones and opposed to them. If it were so, I should recognize a deep if not a fatal defect in our political system. I see no such opposition of interests. Experience has shown that the questions which have organized parties and divided the country pass over State lines without noting them, and invade alike the large and the small States. There is nothing in the disparity of the geographical limits which makes it probable that New York and Rhode Island shall separate on political questions, or that Delaware and Florida shall unite. The smaller States are distributed in all parts of the Union, East, West, North, South, and Middle. They have no purposes that are not as likely to be common to the larger States as to each other. All the apprehensions of a combination of the larger States, to the disadvantage of the smaller, have proved groundless. There is nothing for them to combine for or against. The great interests of the country are common to all the States, and where there have been separate interests, real or imaginary, they have not been based on the territorial limits of the members of the Union. I do not, therefore, regard the surrender of the equal suffrage in the election by the House of Representatives as an important concession. But I can plainly see that in the mode proposed of election by districts the overshadowing power of the great States is destroyed. They will no longer cast their solid vote for President, bearing down four or five of the smaller States, each of which may, possibly, cast a greater popular majority, the other way. New York may cast thirty-five votes for one candidate, while the popular majority is less than that which Delaware, with but three votes, gives for the opposing candidate. The present system gives immense power to majorities, however small, in the great States, and disfranchises the minority, however near it rises toward the majority. Thus the State of New York, outside the city, may give a majority one way, and the overwhelming vote of the city, not the purest and most authentic, may reverse it, and carry, not only the force that properly belongs to the city, but the entire State, leaving to the rest of the State, to the great inland cities, to the rich rural districts, to the prosperous and enterprising communities, from the Hudson to the great lakes, no voiec in the election, for which the heterogeneous and often the corrupt masses of the city speak, not for itself alone, but for the State. By the system proposed, the minority in each State will be represented, and a great State, divided nearly equally, will have no greater preponderance than a small State united upon one candidate. The greater fairness of this, its nearer approximation to the expression of the popular will, need not be illustrated, certainly cannot be better illustrated than it is in the report of the committee from which I copy.

An examination of the working of the electoral college for the last fifty years will prove beyond all question that in a number of cases the will of the majority has been completely defeated; that if the majority is represented in the result of a presidential election it is quite as much the result of accident as of the natural working of the machinery; that the final result produced by the electoral machinery has not within fifty years approached as near as within 10 per cent. of being a true representation of the will of the people as expressed in their votes, and in a number of instances has departed from it over 30 per cent.

The following statement of the result in the different presidential elections from 1872 back to 1844 will establish the truth of what we have said:

In 1872 General Grant received 55 per cent. of the votes of the people; in the electoral college he received 81 per cent.

In 1868 General Grant received 52 per cent. of the popular vote, and 73 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1864 Mr. Lincoln received 55 per cent. of the popular vote, and 91 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1860 Mr. Lincoln received only 40 per cent. of the popular vote; he received 59 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1856 Mr. Buchanan received only 45 per cent. of the popular vote; he received 59 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In this election Fillmore received 25 per cent. of the popular vote, and only 2 per cent. of the electoral vote; but fourteen of his friends were elected to Congress.

In 1852 Pierce received 51 per cent. of the popular vote, and 85 per cent. of the electoral vote.

In 1848 General Taylor received 47 per cent. of the popular vote, and 56 per cent. of the electoral vote. At this election Mr. Van Buren received about 10 per cent. of the popular vote, and received no electoral vote; but three of his friends were elected to the House of Representatives.

In 1844 Mr. Polk received not quite 50 per cent. of the popular vote. He received 62 per cent. of the electoral vote.

To illustrate the operation of the district system, we will consider the comparative results of the elections for President and for members of Congress, in the four States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, from 1860 to 1872.

These States voted solidly for Mr. Lincoln in 1860, casting 74 electoral votes. At the same election they returned 66 members of Congress, of whom 24 were democrats.

In 1864 the same States cast 76 electoral votes for Mr. Lincoln again, and elected the same year 68 members of Congress, of whom 16 were democrats.

In 1868 the same States threw 76 electoral votes solidly for General Grant, and elected 68 members of Congress, of whom 22 were democrats.

In 1872 the same States again voted solidly, giving 85 electoral votes to General Grant, and elected 77 members of Congress, of whom 25 were democrats.

In these four States the democratic strength, as compared with the republican, has been about as 9 to 10, but under the operation of the general-ticket system they had been wholly unrepresented in the electoral college; but in the House of Representatives, under the district system, they have had an average of nearly one-third of the members.

Take the State of New York alone for the same period. In 1860 New York cast her 35 electoral votes solidly for Mr. Lincoln. At the same time she elected 33 members of Congress, of whom 9 were democrats. In 1864 she again cast her 33 electoral votes solidly for Mr. Lincoln, and at the same time elected 31 members of Congress, of whom 11 were democrats. In 1868 she cast her 33 electoral votes solidly for Mr. Seymour. The State was carried for Mr. Seymour by his overwhelming majority in the city of New York, about the character of which grave charges were made, but of which the committee expresses no opinion; but the rest of the State, unaffected in their districts by this large majority in the city, returned 18 out of the 31 members of Congress, who were opposed to Mr. Seymour, thus showing conclusively how the voice of the people of New York outside of the city had been stifled in the presidential election by the city majority, operating through the general-ticket system. In 1872 New York cast her 35 electoral votes solidly for General Grant, at the same time electing 33 members of Congress, of whom 9 were democrats.

The frauds which in 1844 carried the 36 electoral votes of New York for Polk, under the present system, would, under the amendments proposed, have carried only the 4 votes in the city, and the inducement to the frauds would have been wanting, for the honest vote of the city was for Polk, and the frauds were perpetrated only to overbalance the suffrage of the interior. Thus the purity of the election would be greatly promoted by the change. The motive to fraud would be much diminished, and the effect of fraud would be much lessened.

The danger of a disputed election for President, in a State whose electoral vote would decide the contest, is a most serious one. There is no tribunal for the verification of the votes, and although the election may be carried, notoriously, by fraud, or by violence, the electoral votes must be returned and counted. The fraud or the violence may be punished, but for the wrong that they have committed remains, and there is no redress for it. And the appointment of the electors being left entirely with the Legislatures of the States, there would be no mode or power of appointment, if a State Legislature should repeal the law directing the manner of the election. The Federal Government has no power to perpetuate the executive authority. In the exciting election which resulted in the choice of Jefferson by the House of Rrepresentatives, the Legislature of Maryland was federal, and it was supposed that the popular vote would be for Jefferson. It was seriously contemplated that the Legislature should repeal the law under which the electors were chosen by the people, and should choose them by the Legislature; and this, on the avowed ground that it was necessary to defeat the candidate whom it was supposed that the majority of the people preferred. This was recommended on no less authority than that of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton. When a man so pure, so patriotic, and so conservative, could see his way clear to make such a recommendation, what might be apprehended from heated partisans and selfish aspirants for political power? If that suggestion had been carried out, and the 10 electoral votes of Maryland had been given wholly for Adams, he would have been elected. They were divided equally between the two, each receiving 5. Jefferson's total vote was 73, Adams's 65. Had all the votes of Maryland been given for Adams, his total would have swelled to 70, and Jefferson's would have shrunk to 68; and the election would have been strictly and unquestionably legal and constitutional. The Legislature of Maryland would have exercised no power but that which the Constitution clearly conferred upon it, and confers upon it still, and there was no authority to review its doings. Such a proposition, although not carried to the extent of a precedent, yet was urged on such authority as gives to it almost the weight of a precedent.

And be that as it may, it might have been done then, and it might be done now; and those who resisted it would place themselves against the law, and expose themselves to the penalties of the law. A President thus elected, however he might lack the moral support which should underlie his great office, would be "every inch" a President, would command the Army and the Navy, and must have the solemn judgment of the Supreme Court.

From all the difficulties of the existing system, from all the evils and the dangers which experience has developed in it, the proposed amendment appears to offer a mode of relief; and while it commends itself to all the States, I think that it is especially desirable to those, if any there still be, who apprehend the danger to the smaller members of the Union, from the ambition or the aggression of the larger.

Representing, in part, one of the smaller States, but one of those which brought its original sovereignty into the compact, and which required no vote of the other States for admission into the Government, which she had done her full share to establish, I give my cordial assent to this important change which is so clearly for she general good; and which, by dividing all the States into single electoral districts, yet preserving to each the equal votes that the has enjoyed, in recognition of her equal membership in the Union, breaks down the unhealthy if not dangerous preponderance that the larger States possess.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the joint resolution be postponed until Monday, with a view to take up the resolution in regard to Louisiana.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest that it be passed over informally, subject to be called up as the regular order. I am willing that it shall go over until Monday if no other Senator wishes to speak to-day, subject, however, to be called up as the regular order. I do not want it to lose its place.

Mr. THURMAN. I would have no objection to that, with the understanding that there is to be no pressing it to a vote until it has been fully considered. I would greatly prefer, and I believe we shall arrive at a full consideration of the subject better by so doing, that the consideration of the resolution be postponed until the first Monday in February.

Mr. MORTON. I think that is too late.

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose we name some day next week.

Mr. MORTON. Let it go over informally.

Mr. THURMAN. This is one of the greatest subjects that could possibly engage the attention of the Senate; and I do not think a casual consideration of it, calling it up and then laying it over in a casual way, is likely to be productive of much good. If a time is set for its discussion and we go on with the discussion of it, Senators will attend to it and understand the question; but if it is taken up in a perfunctory way one day and then laid aside and again taken up three days afterward, nobody ever knowing when it is to be up, it will not receive that consideration which it ought to have. I therefore intended to renew my motion to postpone to the first Monday in February; or I suppose I can amend the motion of my colleague, which is to postpone to next Monday, by striking out "next Monday" and inserting "the first Monday in February."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio moves to amend the pending motion by providing that the joint resolution be postponed to the first Monday in February.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] concurring with him in wanting this matter postponed for the present, that the day he has named is too far distant. I cannot vote with him for that day, and other Senators feeling as I do may not be able to do so. If the Senator will name an earlier day—some day next week which will not in any way conclude him in respect of submitting a further motion to postpone, and take the sense of the Senate upon that—he will find his motion stronger than it is.

Mr. THURMAN. It is only a few days' difference. The first Monday of February is next Monday week, if my almanac is right, so that there is only a very few days' difference.

Mr. CONKLING. Say next Wednesday.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well, let it be Wednesday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] accept the amendment fixing Wednesday?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I accept the amendment, "next Wednesday."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves to postpone the pending joint resolution until Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

SELF-GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up the resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri in regard to Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by Mr. SCHURZ on the 8th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire what legislation by Congress is necessary to secure to the people of the State of Louisiana their rights of self-government under the Constitution, and to report with the least possible delay by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the principles involved in the Louisiana case are as important as any that have been discussed in the Senate of the United States since the foundation of the Government. Their gravity cannot be overstated or overestimated; and therefore I do not regret that some little time has elapsed since this discussion commenced and that more time will still elapse before any vote can be had or any practical measure affecting the state of affairs in Louisiana be adopted. I think I can properly invoke on the part of the Senate of the United States a spirit of fairness and calmness in discussing a question that is so exciting.

If this question cannot be here seriously and calmly considered, it can be nowhere. It is manifest that the excited parties to this contest in the State of Louisiana are rather in a condition of war, of force, of violence, than a condition of calm discussion. The general tone of the public prints throughout the country is not one that indicates a fair and proper decision of this question. If it cannot be decided here without heat or animosity, it can be nowhere.

When on Saturday last I gave way to an adjournment, I had called the attention of the Senate to a rule of law which is fundamental in its nature and must be the corner-stone of all republican government—that is, that the majority must rule. This law applies not only to the electoral college, to the votes among the people, but to all assemblies, religious, clerical, or lay. It is the foundation of the parliamentary law of all assemblages of men in any capacity whatever. Mr. Cushing, the well-known writer upon this subject, in the extracts which I had read at the close of my remarks last week, lays down this principle in very clear and strong language, and it is repeated in many parts of his work.

The first question always is, Who compose the constituent body of which the majority must rule? That is a question that in this case, it seems to me, is settled by clear law in the State of Louisiana; that is, that the persons named on a list prepared by a returning board organized under the State law, and containing on it one hundred and six names, of whom one hundred and two responded to their names on the roll-call on the 4th of January. That was the constituent body. No one had a right to vote unless on that roll; the law of Louisiana is clear and explicit that none other than those named on that list could vote. Of the one hundred and two who answered to their names fifty-two were known to be republicans and fifty democrats.

Here we have an initial point that my colleague seemed to dispute; but I think upon further reflection he will not dispute that no one could vote except those named on this list. Of those named in the list one hundred and two were present. Those whose seats were contested could not vote, because by the language of the law of the State of Louisiana "none other" than those returned by the returning board could vote, and these five were not only not returned as members, but they were expressly named as contestants or claimants to seats, and their claims were referred to the house when organized.

Then the next question is, how is the majority of this body of one hundred and two members then present to be ascertained; and here again there is no doubt about the law. By parliamentary law, in the absence of constitutional or statute law, the majority may be ascertained either by voice, by a division, by tellers, or by a vote by yeas and nays. In the old Grecian assemblies generally the loudest voices carried the day. So in more modern parliamentary assemblies, even in England, they have not yet a well-considered manner of ascertaining the sense of the majority. There the usual vote is by tellers, by persons on one side passing out of one lobby and those on the other side out of another, and the votes being ascertained in this way the result is announced by the speaker. But in this Government of ours, from the time of the framing of the Constitution to this hour, there has been one fixed, immutable rule, that is now, I believe, prescribed by the constitution of every State of the Union, that the only proper way in a disputed case to ascertain the wish of the majority is by a yea and nay vote. Therefore it is that in the Constitution of the United States it is provided that a small portion of the body may at any time demand the yeas and nays. In the constitution of the State of Louisiana this right is expressly secured to any two members; and this right is important not only to the minority in fixing the responsibility of the majority and of the members composing it, but it is also important to the majority, because it is the only correct mode of ascertaining who constitute the majority. This is the only way of passing laws or having a fair vote on any contested proposition.

We find this fundamental rule laid down in Cushing's Manual, and I will ask the Secretary to read the paragraph that I send to the desk marked on this subject, to show the universality and importance of this rule.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

5. Of taking the question by yeas and nays.

1493. It is provided in almost all the American constitutions that the yeas and nays of the members of our legislative bodies, on any question pending before them, shall be taken and recorded in their journal on the demand of a certain number of the members present, or of a certain proportion of their number; but no mode is therein pointed out for ascertaining whether that form of taking the question is demanded by the requisite number. This is left to be done by putting the question, on the demand of a single member, in the ordinary manner.

Mr. SHERMAN. To show that this rule of parliamentary law is a part of the constitution of the State of Louisiana, and is the controlling element in this question, I ask that a brief article of the constitution of Louisiana, article 36, be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ART. 36. Each house of the General Assembly shall keep and publish weekly a journal of its proceedings; and the yeas and nays of the members on any question, at the desire of any two of them, shall be entered on the journal.

Mr. SHERMAN. This rule of parliamentary and constitutional law has been deemed so important that it is prescribed in every State of this Union. It is prescribed as to all branches of the Government of the United States. It is a fundamental principle, by which alone the will of the majority can be ascertained. Now, test the usurpation of Wiltz by this simple, plain, constitutional rule; and is it not apparent to every man, unless he is guided by mere partisan feeling, that the conduct of Wiltz on that occasion was a bold, glaring usurpation, which would have justified the majority in having gone up and torn him from his seat. What did Wiltz do? I will now, in order to quote from documents not contested by any one, read the conduct of Wiltz as given to us by a sub-committee of a committee of the House of Representatives, composed of Mr. FOSTER, Mr. PHELPS, and Mr.

POTTER, a document that I have no doubt will be assented to on this point as the testimony of impartial and disinterested witnesses giving a narrative of what they saw. I ask the Secretary to read the marked passages in this statement.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The instant the clerk finished the roll-call, several members rose to their feet, but the floor was successfully held by Mr. Billieu, who said that he nominated L. A. Wiltz as temporary chairman. The clerk suggested that the legal motion was to elect a speaker. Mr. Billieu himself, paying no attention to the clerk, proceeded hurriedly to put his own motion, which was received by loud yeas, and followed by as loud nays, and declared it carried. Mr. Wiltz sprang instantly to the platform, took from the clerk the gavel, was quickly sworn in by Justice Houston, who followed him to the platform, and then rapped the house, which, during this time, had been in great confusion, into a temporary quiet. Mr. Wiltz, as temporary chairman, administered the oath to the members en masse, who rose to receive it. Some members made a motion to elect Terzevant clerk. Wiltz put the motion and declared it carried. Terzevant at once came forward and took the clerk's chair; immediately after, and with the same haste, a Mr. Flood was elected sergeant-at-arms, and at once, whether on motion or not your committee do not remember, a number of assistant sergeants-at-arms were appointed, who promptly appeared wearing badges, on which were printed "assistant sergeant-at-arms." While the above-mentioned motions were being put, numbers objected and called for the yeas and nays, all of which was disregarded and pronounced out of order by the acting chairman. Colonel Lowell, a republican member, made the point of order that the constitution of the State allowed any two members to call for the yeas and nays on any motion, but the temporary chairman decided the point was not well taken until a motion for permanent organization. Next, a motion to go into an election for a permanent organization was offered, and declared premature. Against this ruling the republicans protested. A motion to seat the democratic members alleged to be elected in the four parishes, referred to the Legislature, was immediately made and carried. During this stage there was much disorder. The republican members protested, but their protests were disregarded.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this statement shows that Wiltz openly trampled under foot the constitution of the State of Louisiana, parliamentary law, and all laws of fairness and decency. I have been amazed that while my honorable colleague, [Mr. THURMAN,] my friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] were denouncing General Sheridan and General Grant for doing the acts complained of, not one single word of compaint has been uttered by any of these gentlemen in regard to Mr. Wiltz; and yet Mr. Wiltz plainly and palpably violated the law of Louisiana, the constitution of Louisiana, the principles of popular government, and the very basis and structure of republican government.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to say to my honorable friend that we did not consider that we were sitting upon the regularity or the irregularity of Mr. Wiltz's action. The point we were upon was this: That whether he was regular or irregular, it was not the part of the President of the United States, or the governor of Louisiana, or the military forces of the United States to decide.

Mr. SHERMAN. This shows the glaring unfairness of the statements of these honorable gentlemen. They denounce the President of the United States and General Sheridan without knowing the actual facts; and yet, knowing the actual facts of this bold usurpation, this direct trampling upon every law that governs the subject, they never uttered one single word of reproach against Mr. Wiltz. I will say now that the act of Mr. Wiltz is a crime more dangerous in its consequences than the murder of a hundred men, or of a thousand men. The idea that a body of men with great authority, with power to make laws for Louisiana, should be thus controlled is monstrous. Suppose the Senate of the United States should meet together, and that suddenly without a vote some one would rush to that chair and put questions, and when protests were made, when the yeas and nays were demanded, and those securities invoked which were intended to guard the rights of the minority as well as the majority, that man sitting in that chair should disregard the Constitution of the United States, refuse to allow the yeas and nays to be called, refuse to put a question in the face of protests—I ask you what would be your indignation against such an atrocity? Would not the man who would thus trample under foot constitution and law meet at once with the universal denunciation of all fair-minded men? And yet that man Wiltz, when he seized upon the chair of the speaker of that house without authority of law, in plain disregard of the will of the majority, knowing at the time that he would not be voted for by a majority, having been nominated already by forty-nine men, when fifty-two men had nominated another gentleman, went there and refused to put a question, when, under the constitution of Louisiana, members arose and demanded the yeas and nays, called for the roll, and did all that men could do in the presence of an unlawful violence, he disregarded these calls, he trampled under foot that constitution that he had just a moment before irregularly sworn to. He violated his oath, taken there not two minutes before this thing occurred. He trampled upon the rights of the majority, usurped its authority, committed perjury if his oath was valid, and introduced a scene of lawless disorder, outrage, and wrong; and yet this act of Wiltz, admitted on all hands to be illegal, in violation of the constitution, revolutionary, destructive of the very foundation and fundamental principles of republican government, in the face of law, written and divine, has not caused one word of reproach, not one word of honest indignation, from those so ready to denounce others. And yet I say to you now, with full knowledge and with full investigation of this matter, that the crime of Wiltz—yea, the CRIME of Wiltz—to say nothing of his perjury, to say nothing of his disregard of the fundamental principles that he had only a moment before sworn to, was infinitely greater than the murder in cold blood of a hundred men, because it struck at the liberty of the whole people. If the principle which guided Wiltz should become the rule and habit of our legislative assemblies in this country, then popular liberty is at an end and republican governments are overthrown. If our Legislatures, our houses of representatives and senates, are to be organized by this lawless violence and disregard of constitutional and fundamental law, then all your boasted republics have already disappeared, and are not worth the parchment upon which their constitutions are written.

And yet that was the scene which was continued from twelve o'clock on that day until General De Trobriand appeared there and took out five men who had no right to participate in that organization. Compared with what was done by others in any view you may take of this question, the crime of Wiltz ought to stamp him with infamy. His crime is much worse than the crime of Cromwell, who dispersed the Rump Parliament, or any one else who interfered with lawless violence in the organization of a legislative body. His crime must be admitted to be lawless, revolutionary, bold, and desperate; and by law any man who was injured might have gone up to that chair and dragged him from his seat by violence, and the law would have maintained that action. When a man appears as speaker by the consent of the majority, even if irregularly ascertained, even if it is not ascertained in accordance with parliamentary law in the mode and manner pointed out, that is one thing; but when a man, knowing that he represents the minority, goes and seizes upon this power, denies to a majority their right to govern, deprives every one of the members of that body of the right to call for the yeas and nays, lawlessly and violently maintaining the power that he has thus seized, I say that he is guilty of a crime which would justify any member of that body to go up and drag him from his seat.

If Wiltz's conduct is not entirely lawless and revolutionary, how can a majority ever control a political body? How can a majority rule either among the people or in legislative halls? It cannot be done. If the minority by their representatives in this way can disregard constitution and law, there is an end of the idea that a majority must rule, because here a minority, through their agent, Wiltz, by preconcert seized upon the power of the majority and denied to the majority not only their right to rule, but even the ordinary incidents which are granted to a minority, the right to call for the yeas and nays, the right to demand the vote.

Sir, I have read many cases in history where the majority have trampled upon the rights of the minority. The majority sometimes with a bold hand exercise their power. I have participated in cutting off debate and in crowding the minority, but never before have I read in any history where a minority usurped the rights of a majority, and denied the majority even the plainest constitutional rights of the minority.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. If the five members who were not on the list, but who were returned by the returning board, were regarded as part of that Legislature, then was Mr. Wiltz the organ of a minority?

Mr. SHERMAN. In the first place, no one can, in the face of the law of Louisiana, claim that those five men could participate in that organization, because the law of Louisiana expressly recognizes the fact, and so declares, that none others should participate except those members returned by the returning board.

Mr. MORTON. They were not returned by the board.

Mr. STEVENSON. I say they were returned.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. I say it on authority. The rule of law is that you cannot read part of an instrument without the whole. You have quoted from the report of the House committee that went down there, and I assert that they say they were returned and were legally elected.

Mr. SHERMAN. That committee say that they perhaps were legally elected and the board did wrong in excluding them from the list; but they do not say that they were returned by that board.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then the argument of my honorable friend from Ohio puts the liberties of the people and this great right of suffrage in the hands of a self-constituted board.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Kentucky is a little too excited. On the contrary that board was constituted by his own political friends. The Warmoth law, as it was called, expressly provided for that board.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Will my honorable friend allow me to correct him also?

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope I am not to be cut up in my remarks in this way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather not have so many interruptions at once.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Will the Senator not allow me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will permit me to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. That law of Louisiana is like the law of many of the States. It turns over to a select body of men the power to pass upon the returns, in the first instance, and the same law declares that their action shall be final until the house is organized, and that the persons returned by that board and none others shall participate in that organization. Another reply to my honorable friend from Kentucky is this, that Wiltz himself conceded this. He admitted the fact, he acted upon it, that those five men had no right to vote. Otherwise why deny the yeas and nays? Why deny all the constitutional rights of a majority? Why refuse to take a vote? Why suddenly before the organization by a vote admit the five members? Who admitted them? Could they vote in their own case? But I will come to that again. To say that these five men had a right to participate, as is claimed, is entirely absurd; and Wiltz himself never based their right to vote there upon such a claim as that. On the contrary he undertook to give them the right by a vote subsequently had, and there was even then a refusal to take the vote by yeas and nays upon the admission of these members.

Mr. STEVENSON. The question which I submitted to my honorable friend was that if they were legally elected members of the Legislature—not entering into the discussion, admitting that they were legally elected members of that Legislature—then was Wiltz the speaker of a minority?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. We will discuss hereafter the question of their denial of the right to seats.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will discuss hereafter what rights those men had. They had a right to present their claims as members, to be admitted if a majority of those legally entitled to vote would allow them to be admitted; but I will come to that in a moment. My friend from Kentucky goes along a little faster than I do.

Now, Mr. President, the signal-gun of all that followed was this usurpation by Wiltz and the denial to the majority of a right that is conceded to a small minority in every legislative body, the right to call the yeas and nays. But for this unlawful conduct of Wiltz there would have been no interference with the Legislature of Louisiana. Senators must see that in looking at causes and events you trace the whole back to this refusal by Wiltz, this revolutionary violence by Wiltz, and his denial to either a majority or minority of the plainest rights that anybody possesses as a member of a legislative body. This was the signal-gun, and all that followed was but the natural and necessary sequence of this one event. Every single thing that was done after that resulted from this lawless and revolutionary violence. Therefore when you denounce men who participated in the subsequent proceedings, why not denounce this act, the beginning of this revolutionary violence? There was where I thought my honorable friend from Missouri, in his carefully-prepared statement, failed to do his duty. He promised that calmness and fairness should guide him in making what he said was to be a parting speech to the Senate, and yet he did not put any stress or even state the facts in regard to the usurpation of Wiltz and his denial of the yea and nay vote which was the signal, the beginning and the cause of every act that followed.

Mr. SCHURZ. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; as I alluded to the Senator.

Mr. SCHURZ. When the Senator speaks about the cause and the signal of the disturbance, is he willing to accept the report of the House sub-committee sent down to Louisiana to investigate things, as true?

Mr. SHERMAN. I was called off a moment, and did not hear the remark of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SCHURZ. I was going to ask, is the Senator, in speaking of the cause and signal of the disturbance, willing to take the report of the sub-committee sent by the House of Representatives down to Louisiana as true?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to the part the Senator alludes to, presently.

Mr. SCHURZ. I merely put that question to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to refer to that now. I have no doubt at all that the majority of that body had a right to pass upon the claims and rights of members; but I will speak of that hereafter.

Mr. SCHURZ. I do not refer to that. If the Senator wants to go to the bottom of things, then he will have to admit, according to that report, that a gross fraud was perpetrated by the returning board and that that returning board was, in its very constitution, not according to the constitution and laws of Louisiana, and that there the cause of the whole disturbance is to be found.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not everybody see the transparent evasion of the point I made on the honorable Senator? He makes no answer to the allegation I make that he omitted the material facts of this whole controversy.

Mr. SCHURZ. The Senator does not do me justice. I did not omit that, for in my statement of the circumstances I said expressly that when the question was put with regard to the temporary chairmanship, it was not put by the clerk.

Mr. SHERMAN. Ah, but that is not the point.

Mr. SCHURZ. I admitted further that although the organization of that Legislature should have been in accordance with the statutes of the State, yet it was not for a general of the United States Army to decide that question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will fail to show me where he admitted that this man, with force and violence, seized the speaker's chair and refused the yeas and nays, which it was the constitutional right of any two members of that body to demand. He says now, in order to evade this point, which he cannot evade, that I neglected to state the conduct of the returning board. I will not neglect to state the conduct of the returning board, but shall discuss it in due time, for I shall not avoid anything of the kind.

Now, I say the initial cause of this whole trouble was the illegal seizure by Wiltz and the minority of that body of the powers of that house when, by the law and the constitution of Louisiana, they had no right to do it. It was the denial to the majority of the rights that are conceded to a minority of two, the refusal to take a vote and the attempt to pass upon the right of five men to seats there without the right of the majority to vote according to the constitution. And here is the whole trouble, and the beginning and the end; and the popular voice, always more just even than the Senate of the United States, seized at once on this point, and while they might not have justified Sheridan in the telegram that I will refer to, or perhaps the appearance of the military in that hall, yet they saw at once that these men who resorted to violence, who resorted to fraud, who trampled under foot constitutions and laws, were not the persons to make technical or carping objections to the mode and manner of enforcing legal authority and overthrowing their lawless usurpation. Those who resort to force must expect force.

Now, Mr. President, I want to show further that this usurpation by Wiltz was not acquiesced in at any stage of this controversy. We have the statement of General Sheridan, clear and explicit, concurred in by every eye-witness, that every movement made by this revolutionary body, controlled by Wiltz, was protested against; the yeas and nays were demanded; every opposition was made to it that men could peaceably make; and in my judgment his usurpation would have been overthrown by force by the majority of members then present but for the interposition of General De Trobriand. It is apparent that after an hour or two of lawless seizure the republican members, together with outsiders, called the lobby, were about to intervene; and I do believe that but for the intervention of General De Trobriand Wiltz would have been torn from that seat, tumbled out of it. He had no right there. I appeal to lawyers to say whether, if blood had been shed in an attempt by force to drag Wiltz from the seat that he usurped, it would not have rested upon his skirts and not upon those who by force expelled him. After peaceable means were exhausted, how else could they assert their rights as a majority? It is not necessary to discuss this question, for fortunately it was avoided. It is sufficient to know that force would have been used by the republican members, by the majority of that body having the right to that organization, and by those in that hall who sympathized with them but for the appeals made by Wiltz himself to the Army of the United States to protect him in his usurpation. All the statements given to us by eye-witnesses, some of whom I have conversed with, agree that at the moment when the motion was made to call General De Trobriand to come in and interfere there was imminent danger of an outbreak, when blood would have been shed, and Wiltz himself, perhaps, would have been the first victim. There can be little doubt that if that request had not been made by Wiltz and by those who voted with him for the intervention of the military authorities, a scene of bloodshed would have occurred in that hall. Does my honorable friend from Missouri doubt it? I understood from his own statement that bloodshed would have resulted but for the interference of General De Trobriand in the first instance there to quiet and put down disorder. So, sir, the minority, having firmly placed themselves in possession unlawfully of the speaker's chair, denying to the majority all rights whatever, appealed by vote to the Army of the United States to protect them by armed force from the power of the majority; then General De Trobriand was by a vote sent for, not as a mere citizen or constable, but as an officer of the Army with troops at hand in warlike array. A committee waited upon him outside, brought him in, and he came in with his uniform on, with his sword by his side and with his two aids-de-camp.

Here is another point where my honorable friend [Mr. SCHURZ] strangely was led by his feeling rather than by his sense of calmness and justice. He describes De Trobriand appearing on the second time with his sword by his side, his belt around him, his aids and his bayonets; but when De Trobiand appeared in the first instance, according to the description of the Senator from Missouri, he appeared as a kind-mannered man, a gentleman of pleasing address, to put down lawless disturbance, to restore quiet, to pour oil upon water instead of, according to the actual fact, as an Army officer, with his sword at his side, with two aids with him, and with men and bayonets right at the door.

Mr. SCHURZ. Where does the Senator get that?

Mr. SHERMAN. In the telegram.

Mr. SCHURZ. Turn to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot turn to it now, but you will find it in that statement.

Mr. SCHURZ. Whose statement?

Mr. SHERMAN. General Sheridan makes the statement that when De Trobriand appeared in the first instance on the call of the speaker of the house by a vote, he appeared with his sword at his side, with two aids with him, and with soldiers outside.

Mr. SCHURZ. Where does the Senator get that in the first instance?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is in General Sheridan's dispatches, but I will try and satisfy the Senator on that point.

Mr. SCHURZ. O, no; I do not care about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will show it to the Senator. The same language is used. This is the telegram of General Sheridan:

The excitement was now very great. The acting speaker directed the sergeant-at-arms to prevent the egress or ingress of members or others, and several exciting scuffles, in which knives and pistols were drawn, took place, and for a few moments it seemed that bloodshed would ensue.

He goes on:

At this juncture Mr. Dupre, a democratic member from the parish of Orleans, moved that the military power of the General Government be invoked to preserve the peace, and that a committee be appointed to wait upon General De Trobriand, the commanding officer of the United States troops stationed at the State-house, and request his assistance in clearing the lobby.

Here was not a mild-mannered gentleman, as General De Trobiand is, called on to act as a peace officer or constable, but here was an appeal to the military power of the United States, and a call made on the commanding officer, with troops then in the presence and in possession of the State-house. Let us go on and see:

The motion was adopted. A committee of five, of which Mr. Dupre was made chairman, was sent to wait upon General De Trobriand, and soon returned with that officer, who was accompanied by two of his staff officers.

The same language was used when he appeared afterward as when he came in first. When he was called upon the second time by Governor Kellogg, he went in in the same way with two staff officers, and it was not until Wiltz resisted his action that he brought in superior force to carry out the order under which he was acting. Thus, sir, I have shown you that the revolutionary violence of Wiltz would have been overthrown by the rightful power of the majority but for the interposition of the Army of the United States. It is true that we should have had a scene of bloodshed in that chamber, for which all the blame and all the wrong would have been on the part of Wiltz and his associates. They were the usurpers; they were guilty of revolutionary violence; they denied all right to the yeas and nays, and they refused to take the vote. They refused to obey the law of Louisiana which required that only those named on a certain list should vote, and none other. If that violence had been met by violence, theirs would have been the wrong. They appealed to the military authority and on their appeal the military authority did intervene; but here is the difference in the two cases: The republicans, who were plainly in the right at this stage of the contest, obeyed with kindness and gentleness the remonstrance of General De Trobriand and they left the hall. They did not require actual force to be shown and a military array to be brought there to compel them to go out; but they left; while on the other hand, when the same officer appeared at the request of Governor Kellogg, then Wiltz refused to yield to apparent force, to the officer of the Army, the same officer that he had himself appealed to, but demanded that actual force should be used in order to make a show of resistance. Then it was that the United States soldiers were marched into that hall and five men were taken out of it. And when this force was used only to the extent made necessary to execute the order they fill the land with the cry of military violence and usurpation!

Mr. SCHURZ. I asked the Senator where he got that description of General De Trobriand's interference, and he read from General Sheridan's dispatch. I suppose he will have no objection, although I attach very little importance to that point, if I just quote the report of the House committee upon that:

A committee was appointed to wait on General De Trobriand and request his compliance. Colonel De Trobriand soon came to the bar unaccompanied, except by one aid, whom he left there, and then alone approached the speaker. The speaker requested him to ask for order in the lobby. Colonel De Trobriand did so, and order was then restored.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no substantial difference.

Mr. SCHURZ. I say I do not attach any importance to this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only difference is this: When De Trobriand appeared at the call of Wiltz, the republicans who were making the noise and confusion and threatening to turn out Wiltz head over heels quietly subsided at the appeal of the officer of the United States. On the other hand, when Kellogg called on the troops to put down lawless violence, Wiltz, the usurper, the man who had committed perjury, the man who had started this scene of revolutionary violence, would not yield to the request of General De Trobriand. When General De Trobriand said "Do not compel me to use force; you five gentlemen come out; do not compel me to use force," Wiltz replied, "You must use force; you shall do it; not one of these men shall leave his seat until you use force;" and then De Trobriand, like a soldier, used only the force necessary to put these men out. There is the difference. De Trobriand in both cases appeared as an officer of the United States, with his sword by his side, on duty, in command, with a large body of armed soldiers at the door; and he appeared there in the first instance at the call of Wiltz, who had no more right to be in that seat than any one of us had a right to be speaker of the house of representatives of Louisiana.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to misunderstand my colleague, and I should like therefore to ask him now whether I am to understand him as justifying De Trobriand's expulsion of those five members?

Mr. SHERMAN. My colleague ought to know me well enough to know that he cannot catch me by any premature question. I will tell him precisely how far I do approve of General De Trobriand's conduct before I get through. His question would lead me to a point not now before us.

I here again repeat the point that the usurpation of Wiltz was never for one moment acquiesced in. It was protested against. Every parliamentary expedient to which even the best parliamentarians could resort was resorted to to resist that revolutionary violence; and the majority would have gone further, and with the power and right of the majority they would have controlled that organization but for the interference of an Army officer with the Army at his back; but they yielded; and what did they do then?

Before I go any further, when General De Trobriand appeared in that hall and practically expelled republican members, because that was the effect of his action on the first call of Wiltz, I ask any Senator whether that house of representatives was a lawful house? Had it the power of a house of representatives in any sense of the word? Was it a lawful organization? It is impossible to say so; and I appeal now to Senators who are called upon to consider these facts as they are presented to us to say whether or not the house of representatives as it existed with Wiltz in the chair, and when De Trobriand appeared and practically expelled the majority, who were certain to resist the action of the minority—was that a lawful assembly in any sense of the word? Palpably they were usurpers. If such a body is lawful in our republican Government, what in the name of Heaven is unlawful!

Here is a case where a man without a lawful vote seized the speaker's chair, refused to take the vote, denied the call of the yeas and nays, swore five men in upon the report of a committee against the protests of the majority. There never was a vote from beginning to end. Sir, in this whole proceeding there was no constitutional vote; there was no legal vote. There was no organization. There was no element of lawful assembly.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator has stated that a viva voce vote upon a motion to elect a speaker may be decided by the sound. He admits that that could be done lawfully. In this case the viva voce vote was put by Mr. Billieu, who had the floor and maintained it, and Mr. Wiltz was chosen or declared by him to have been chosen, and he assumed the chair and was sworn. Then Mr. Wiltz, having been so sworn by an officer recognized by the laws and constitution of Louisiana to swear him in, administered the oath to the one hundred and two members who were present.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend ought not to interpose argument while I am on the floor.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will not argue at all; but as he spoke of facts, I was merely reciting facts that made that permanent organization, in my opinion, a lawful one. When the one hundred and two members took the oath, by rising, from Mr. Wiltz's lips; when their party friends who left the city of Washington to engineer things, members of the other House, saw some of the members sitting down, they went to them and urged them to rise and take the oath, so as to be included in the temporary organization of the house. Then came the call for a permanent organization.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must insist on going on. Now, since several Senators have rather, I was about to say, abused the courtesy of asking me to yield for a question, I must insist on going on in order.

Mr. BAYARD. I beg the honorable Senator's pardon if I did so. I thought he asked for the facts, and I merely answered him as I thought in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. All that I asked the Senator was whether in his opinion that organization was lawful, and his answer was "yes," and there was the end of it; and after that I do not think he was at liberty to state facts in the nature of argument. It is a common practice in the Senate, but it is a bad one. No one knows better than my honorable friend that a viva voce vote is never conclusive when there is a demand for the yeas and nays. The demand for the yeas and nays when granted supersedes at once the viva voce vote. I have here the statement of Mr. FOSTER and of his associates that in every stage, on every question that was put, the yeas and nays were called for. Here is what Mr. POTTER and these other gentlemen of the House committee say:

While the above-mentioned motions were being put, numbers objected and called for the yeas and nays, all of which was disregarded and pronounced out of order by the acting chairman.

When a viva voce vote is taken and a yea and nay vote is called for there is the end of the viva voce vote; it is no longer to be regarded; it is superseded. We see that every day here in our daily business. When a vote is called for and there is much or little sound, and anybody rises and calls for the yeas and nays and they are ordered, that is the end of the viva voce vote.

Mr. BAYARD. Was there not a yea and nay vote on the permanent organization?

Mr. SHERMAN. On every motion, according to the testimony of these gentleman, the yeas and nays were called for but not allowed to be taken. And what the Senator calls the vote on permanent organization was not put until the majority of members were practically expelled, nor until the constituent body was changed by the admission of five new members. Suppose the Clerk of the House of Representatives when General Banks was elected Speaker had denied the call of the roll until after a permanent organization. Suppose, when I had the honor to be a candidate for Speaker, the Clerk of the House at that time had denied the call of the roll to the minority of the body. Would it not have created bloodshed and revolution? Who ever dreamed of such a thing? The right to call the yeas and nays is just as important in the preliminary vote as any other. This list is furnished for the very purpose, that the clerk might know who should vote; and every vote from the beginning, according to the constitution of Louisiana, is protected by the right to the yeas and nays. There have been half a dozen times in the history of our country where if a yea and nay vote had been denied it would have created a revolution in this country. No man can question the fact. When Mr. Cobb was elected Speaker over Mr. Winthrop, if the yeas and nays had been refused there would have been bloodshed. So when General Banks was elected; so when Mr. Pennington was elected. The yea and nay vote is the very beginning, the foundation of republican government and of parliamentary regular government; and the denial of that right on the organization was the commencement of this trouble in Louisiana. To say that the majority did not resist, did not remonstrate, did not appeal, did not demand the yeas and nays, is an allegation that is denied by every man who participated in that body. I asked several gentlemen who were witnesses, and they said that in every stage, from the very beginning, at the moment Wiltz rushed up without the question being put so that it could be heard by anybody, all these calls were made, made with violence sometimes, but always made. So that this proceeding was lawless, revolutionery, by a lawless, desperate, armed mob; for I have no doubt both sides were armed, according to the information I have received.

After this organization had been perfected, as they say, by Wiltz, what was done? Then a legislative act was done. They proposed to admit five persons to seats as members. Who voted to admit those five men? There is again a conundrum I should like to have my honorable friend from Delaware answer at his leisure—who voted to admit those five men? They could not vote in their own cases. The constitution of Louisiana in this particular is like our own Constitution. Excluding those five men, who doubts but what the majority were republicans? Who claims that a majority voted to admit the five? Who admitted the five men who were sworn in there with the solemn sanction of an oath by Wiltz, the usurper? I ask my colleague and the Senator from Delaware, who now stand upon the right of the five men to vote, who voted to admit them? The question was put and they were admitted, but who voted for it? Not the majority, because they were denied the right to vote and the yeas and nays were forbidden. It was the minority who admitted those men in the preliminary organization, and upon that lawless vote, a vote taken in plain and palpable denial of the simplest right of parliamentary law and of the constitution of Louisiana, five men were sworn in and then participated. First the minority seized upon the chair and the organization by violence, then the same minority without a vote put in five more men, and then without a vote claimed to be the majority, and then rode rough-shod over the constitution and laws of that State and all principles of parliamentary law. It will not do. It is an outrage; and no sophistry, no eloquence, no ability can excuse, palliate, or defend the lawless usurpation of Wiltz and his associates. Here was the beginning of this trouble, and but for this there would be now no trouble in Louisiana. If those one hundred and two men had met there on their organization, then passed promptly upon the claim of the five persons to seats, the probability is that the democratic party might in due process and in due form of law have obtained the majority; but they would not do it. They seized upon that organization by force and violence; they trampled upon every principle of the constitution and parliamentary law. They would rather win by force than gain by fairness; and thus it was that the troubles which have occurred in Louisiana, and which now disgrace our republican form of government, were precipitated by a lawless band of desperate men who would not pursue the forms of law to gain what they claimed to be the rights of a majority of that body.

Mr. President, to show you that I have taken a dispassionate view of this matter, I propose to have read a brief extract from a paper that I saw published in the New York Times, and which contains my view of this case so strongly that I venture, although I do not know the gentleman but I am told he is a democratic lawyer of standing in the city of New York—Mr. E. W. Stoughton—to ask that his statement of the legal aspect of the question as it was presented by Mr. Wiltz's seizure upon the organization, be read. I gladly embody his opinion as my own, and it is better stated than I can state it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

While the roll was being called by the old clerk, a member nominated Wiltz as temporary speaker, and without a moment's delay he was declared elected, not by the clerk, says Mr. SCHURZ, and sprang to and took forcible possession of the speaker's chair and gavel. There, in defiance of the efforts of the clerk to proceed and regularly organize the assembly, Wiltz called upon a justice present to swear him in. This was done, and then a temporary clerk was nominated and declared elected, and then, in the same manner, a sergeant-at-arms; and immediately following this, numerous assistant sergeants-at-arms, who, on being declared elected, opened their coats and displayed badges of office, showing clearly that all this fraud and outrage had been carefully planned and contrived beforehand, and that these assistant sergeants were selected, and doubtless armed, with a view to holding violent possession of the house, and of its organization, after the fraud should have been perpetrated. Immediately after this temporary organization, the conspirators —not a legislative body peaceably, or otherwise, assembled—proceeded to declare five persons, who had obtained access to the hall, but who had not been returned by the returning board, members, and entitled to sit as such. Thus had been accomplished by fraud and violence a great public wrong against the State of Louisiana—subversive of law, of constitutional rights—by means of which, if successful, the legislative power was delivered over to the persons not charged with it as representatives of the people, but who—a minority at the outset—had by fraud and force so added to their numbers as to become a majority.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the opinion of a lawyer who, I am informed, stands in the very first rank in his profession in New York, but does not agree with me in politics.

It is said sometimes that it is within the sole and exclusive power of the house of representatives of Louisiana, like all other legislative bodies, to pass upon the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members. So it is. That again is a fundamental principle of constitutional law. From the very necessity of the case, each house must judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members; but who is to judge? Each house. Who is the house? Is it a lawless band of usurpers described by Mr. Stoughton? Have they alone the power to pass upon that question? If it was left to the house then present in Louisiana, it is plain and manifest that in the first instance at least those five men could not have been admitted to seats. But each house shall judge of the election. How judge? By vote. That is the only way that a legislative body can judge, by hearing the case; or by a vote even without hearing they may decide. Was there any hearing there? Were there any papers presented showing that these five men were entitled to seats? Was there any discussion? Was there any opportunity of discussion? Was there any vote? No; but the usurper who sat in the chair, according to Mr. Stoughton, refused the majority of the members of the house of representatives of Louisiana that which is conceded by the constitution of that State to any two of them. He refused when they called for the yeas and nays upon the vote to admit those five men. Could those five men vote to admit themselves? My friend said that if you add those five men to the minority of democrats that would have made a majority. But can that minority admit five men in order to make a majority—there is the question—and that without a vote by yeas and nays? Not at all.

Mr. LOGAN. They could not vote on their own admission.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly they could not vote on their own case anyway, even if their right was undisputed and indisputable; and clearly the majority would have been against them, at least in the first instance. Upon this point I will ask the Clerk to read the opinion of Mr. Stoughton, because it presents this particular point stronger than I can do.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

It has been said in the speeches to which I have alluded that it is the right of every legislative body to determine who shall sit as its members. With certain qualifications this is true; but can the persons not lawfully returned as members, but claiming to sit, and whose right is contested, vote as members for the purpose of establishing this right? Take the case we are considering. There were fifty-two republicans and fifty democrats enrolled as members. Five others—democrats—claimed the right to sit. They must have voted for Wiltz as temporary speaker or he could not have had a majority. Nor could they have been declared members without also voting on that question if there had been a lawful oganization, for in that event there would have been a majority of republicans. The proposition that every legislative assembly is to judge of the qualifications of its members of course assumes that the persons whose right to sit is in question are not to act or vote as members until a lawfully constituted assembly has determined that right. This proposition was perverted and misapplied by speakers at the Cooper Institute.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will also ask the Secretary to read the conclusion of Mr. Stoughton, after a lawyer-like examination of the whole case, as to whether that body thus organized was a legal house.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In view of these facts, who will say that this was a legislative body? Who that it had peaceably assembled? It had come into existence by violence and fraud. It had by force and fraud expelled a majority of the lawfully returned members, and had thus deprived them of all participation in the organization of the house. It was a lawless body, forcibly, not peaceably assembled. It held the hall of the house of representatives by violent means, and the five members unlawfully admitted and employed to accomplish this were the instruments by which this scheme had been made effective.

Mr. SHERMAN. That summary shows this whole case. A lawless and desperate minority seized upon the organization of the house when assembled there to organize the house, refused to the majority all parliamentary rights, and then, in violation of the laws of Louisiana, undertook before the organization of that house to swear in five men without a vote, without an examination, without a hearing; and having sworn in those five men in this way, then, presto—change—a vote was allowed! After they had elected a temporary speaker, after they had elected a clerk and sergeant-at-arms and admitted five new members, had half a dozen different viva voce votes, against protests, against repeated calls for the yeas and nays, then, after they had accomplished their revolutionary purpose, lo and behold they are ready for a vote! Then a vote was demanded by one of them; a vote was taken before the final organization, and with the five men thus unlawfully admitted they claimed to have a majority, and then they appealed to General De Trobriand to put out the lawless fellows who were making a little fuss!

Let us now examine the question put to me awhile ago, and see what General De Trobriand did do; but first let us see what he did not do. General De Trobriand appeared just as he had done before, with the same number of aids, and with the same uniform, with an order from Governor Kellogg, sanctioned by his immediate commanding officer, General Emory; and what did he do? He went there, exhibited his order, told them that it was a very unpleasant duty, that he was a soldier, and asked Mr. Wiltz (recognizing him to that extent) to point out the five men whom it was his duty to expel from that body—no rudeness, no violence, no force except the force that they themselves had appealed to. What then? Did General

De Trobriand eject any man who had a right to vote in that organization? Did he eject any man whose name was on that roll as a member? Did he expel any democrat because he was a democrat, or any republican because he was a republican? No, sir; but he ejected five men who had no right to vote in that organization, whose claims, if they had any, were claims to be decided by the body itself after it should have organized, as contestants or claimants. Five men were then in possession of certificates in due form of law, acting for the very parishes that these five men claimed to represent. Among the lawless acts of violence was to turn out five men who were then in——

Mr. BAYARD. There was no expulsion. They were members from parishes which had not been acted upon by the returning board, and no contestant appeared at all against those men.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps I am mistaken in that particular, but it makes no difference to the argument. Those five men were not on the list; they were not returned by the returning board as members, and their cases were very properly referred to the body itself, when it should be organized. These were the five men, no one of whom had a right to vote in any part of that organization, who were gently expelled.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator whether he considers it the duty of General De Trobriand to turn out those five men?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to that; I will tell precisely my opinion. This officer did not do this as a partisan. It was not like some of the historic cases where lawless violence at the will of party and for partisan advantage has subverted the law and used military force for that purpose. Nobody could say that of General De Trobriand. He was a gentleman, in every sense of the word, in manner, education, and habit; he had been appealed to by both sides; and we know, from the current history of the country, that General De Trobriand was regarded with great favor by all the people of Louisiana on both sides of politics. He is simply a military officer seeking to do his duty. There was therefore no partisan warfare waged by him. It was upon the wr itten order of the governor of the State, whose oath required him to enforce the law, that he appeared.

I have seen a great deal of complaint made about the powers of the governor of Louisiana, and I am free to say that I never would vote for a constitution that contains the powers granted to the governor of Louisiana; but it is the constitution of Louisiana, and it must be obeyed, and it must be enforced there. The power given to Governor Kellogg by that constitution is very much greater than is given to the governor of the State of Ohio or to the governor of any other State that I know of. He is armed with discretionary power in many cases where it is not conferred by the laws of other States. This act of De Trobriand was done under the order of Kellogg. We must inquire into the power of Kellogg to issue the order and as to the extent ot that power. I will read first a paragraph from article 48 of the constitution of Louisiana:

> The supreme executive power of the State shall be vested in a chief magistrate who shall be styled the governor of the State of Louisiana.

Then after defining the duration of his office, &c., article 59 provides:

> He shall be commander-in-chief of the militia of this State, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States.

Article 65 provides:

> He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

Then his oath is contained in article 100:

> I, (A. B.) do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I accept the civil and political equality of all men, and agree not to attempt to deprive any person or persons, on account of race, color, or previous condition, of any political or civil right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by any other class of men; that I will support the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the constitution and laws of this State, and that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as —— according to the best of my ability and understanding: so help me God.

This constitution makes the governor of Louisiana not only the chief executive officer and the commander-in-chief of the militia of the State, but requires him to take this stringent oath, and also requires that he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed. How did Governor Kellogg intervene in this case? It must be remembered that he intervened upon an authority very unusual and very remarkable. Here a majority of the men who were elected to the house of representatives of that Legislature, who appeared there on the 4th day of January, fifty-two all told, signed a written request——

Mr. SCHURZ. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather not.

Mr. SCHURZ. I merely want to put this question, whether the Senator calls fifty-two a majority of the men who were elected to the lower house of the Legislature of Louisiana?

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that fifty-two men were a majority of those who had a right to vote on the organization of the house.

Mr. SCHURZ. If I understand the Senator correctly, he said that fifty-two were a majority of the men who had been elected to the lower house of Louisiana.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I said that, my friend is so acute as to have detected it quickly. What I meant to say and what I now say is that the majority of those who were elected and had the right to sit there on that day, and who were present, made the request of the governor.

Mr. SCHURZ. The Senator then admits that fifty-two were a majority of the men who were elected to the lower house of the Louisiana Legislature?

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon my word, if the Senator thinks that before the people of the United States he can make any headway by that kind of technicality, he has very much mistaken their intelligence and their spirit. One hundred and eleven men were elected; one hundred and two of those thus elected appeared with their legally-constituted certificates, and only one hundred and two—one hundred and two all told; and no man, woman, or child in all the broad limits of the United States of America had any right to participate in that organization except those one hundred and two men, because theirs were the names responded to when the roll was called, and none others by the law of Louisiana could participate. Governor Kellogg only intervened upon the demand of fifty-two men, a majority of those entitled to vote.

Ah, but why did not these fifty-two men send their request to the governor in the ordinary way? Why did they not meet and vote to send their request to the governor? Because a lawless minority had usurped their place in the house of representatives and that lawless minority had called on the military authority to expel practically the majority, for that was the effect of it; and this was the only way in which this majority could speak. Their voice was silent in the usual parliamentary way. The only way they could speak was by signing a paper calling upon the governor of the State of Louisiana, as he would answer to God at the great day, on the solemnity of his oath, to see that the law for the organization of the Legislature of Louisiana was faithfully observed. Mark it; if there was any irregularity in this proceeding, it was an irregularity caused by the men who complain of the execution of this order. If it was not the house that spoke to Governor Kellogg, it was because the minority usurped the house and the majority could only speak by a written statement to the governor; and they made that statement and demanded of Governor Kellogg to intervene.

Now, I will go a step farther. I will say that Governor Kellogg had the undoubted right, it was his bounden duty, whether he lived or died in the effort, to put down that lawless violence when thus called upon by a majority of the men who had a right to control that voice.

Mr. SCHURZ rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it interrupts my argument. The Senator had his say and was listened to with great respect and attention. Every word of his speech I heard myself without interrupting him; but for some reason I cannot speak here without being continually interrupted.

Any irregularity that occurred, I repeat, was an irregularity caused by the lawless violence of Wiltz; and there was an opportunity for Kellogg to have immortalized himself. Had he been a bold, audacious man, even if he was ambitious, had he gone into the presence of that turbulent house without a single soldier behind him and had compelled those men to listen to the law which directed the organization, to listen to his oath, to listen to the obligations imposed upon him by the constitution, he would have been not only defended but authorized and justified in the use of any force whatever to put down that violence. My friend from Indiana says he would have been murdered. That might have been true. It only shows still more the dangers of society in Louisiana, the lawless audacity which controls matters there, which would murder the governor because he would resist the usurpation by a minority of a house of the organization of the house. It was one of those occasions where a bold man may impress his name upon history; and I am inclined to think that if he had gone there in that way they would not have dared to murder him. But my friend from Indiana says he would have been murdered, and perhaps he would.

What else did he do? He gave his order. He ought to have called upon the posse comitatus; he ought to have called on the police authorities; he ought to have called upon such forces as were within his reach. Why did he not do that? There my friend from Indiana would give a very satisfactory explanation, that in the excited state of feeling in Louisiana he could not call on the constables or the militia. He was commander of the militia; he had power to call upon them to aid him in executing the laws. He could not do it without creating bloodshed and murder; and perhaps that is a good reason. We know very well that such is the state of society in New Orleans that probably any appeal whatever, any attempt by any legal authority either to suppress a riot or to put down lawless violence, especially where politics mingles in it, would probably lead to general war and general bloodshed. That is one of the misfortunes of the state of society in Louisiana. What then? With this letter before him, signed by fifty-two men who had the right to control the organization of that house, with the probability that if he entered there in the discharge of his duty he would be murdered, leaving Louisiana without a governor, with the probability that if he called on the militia it would not respond to his call or would not obey his order, that if he called on the constabulary force it would only precipitate a conflict between armed men—under these circumstances of difficulty Governor Kellogg called upon General De Trobriand, and General De Trobriand went there, with a heart that was white and free from offense, without any intention to trample on any man's liberties, in obedience to a lawful call, as he supposed, by Governor Kellogg to put out five men whose presence interrupted the organization of the house of representatives of Louisiana.

My colleague asks me if I approve this thing. I cannot say that I do; but this I say, that I approve it precisely to the extent that the President of the United States approves it, and God forbid that I, on account of my respect to law and my ideas about the use of military authority, should cast ashes upon the head of General De Trobriand who in a time of great difficulty, under circumstances of peculiar and critical urgency, simply did what he supposed to be his duty.

There is the whole case. The President of the United States so states it. There is the whole of it. To call this one of those great historical outrages when the rights of a free people are trampled upon, is simply making a mountain out of a mole-hill. All the violence that was used was compelled by Wiltz, and only enough was used to execute what General De Trobriand believed to be a lawful order of Governor Kellogg in expelling men who prevented the organization of that body.

In addition to that, Governor Kellogg had the undoubted right to call on the President of the United States for the military force of the United States to suppress domestic violence. At that time the Legislature was not organized and could not be organized by reason of the very events that I have narrated. The Constitution of the United States in that case, and precisely in such a case, gives to the governor the power to call on the President to suppress domestic violence, and this order of Governor Kellogg was made in pursuance of that provision of the Constitution, though on account of the urgency of the matter it was not made through a special call on the President of the United States.

Troops being then present under a previous call justified by the general sentiment of the people of this country, they acted at once without a direct order from the President of the United States. I cannot say that it would be right for an officer of the Army, upon the call of Governor Kellogg, without a direct order from the President of the United States, to appear there and enter into that legislative hall and do the duties of a constable. My idea of the Army is that it is an organized force only to speak on great occasions, and then against an armed enemy in its front. I do not think the Army of the United States ought to be used for many of the purposes for which it has been used. I think it ought to be kept intact, free, clear from all political associations or affinities, stand aloof only to meet force with force, and only to suppress violence when called upon to do so in the constitutional way. That was the case here, except that there was no legal order from the President. The circumstances were peculiar. They were imminent. They were urgent. Anybody in Louisiana, any citizen of Louisiana, any portion of the militia of that State would have been perfectly justified, under the call of Governor Kellogg, in doing all that the troops of the United States did. If we place any reliance upon the constitution, it was the duty of the governor to act, and act promptly, but only by a civil or military force under his command. The troops of the United States, in my judgment, ought to have been kept out of that arena; but God forbid, as I said before, that I should cast any reproaches upon General De Trobriand or any other officer of the Army who under these circumstances did what he believed to be his plain duty. What was the result? Nothing except that the majority were restored to their power to organize that house, to pass upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of the members, and to go on in pursuance of law to make laws for the people of Louisiana.

Mr. President, this is all I desire to say about the particular events that occurred on the 4th of January; and I now come to some collateral questions which are necessarily brought into the case, and to which my attention has already been directed by several inquiries made by Senators and also by the general latitude and scope of this debate; and the first one is the action of the returning board.

My colleague and the Senator from Delaware, who must be embarrassed by the difficulties of their position in seeking to defend this lawless and desperate revolutionary usurpation by Wiltz, say that the returning board of Louisiana, according to the report of the committee of the House of Representatives, were guilty of illegal, fraudulent, and improper acts; that they did not do their duty; that they refused to return five men who were lawfully elected. It appears that this board returned that the election of these five men was secured by fraud, violence, and intimidation; that under the law they were returned not elected, but their cases were referred to the house to be passed upon by the house itself. They claim also that the returning board were guilty of fraud, inasmuch as that by the returns submitted to the board there was a democratic majority of 29 in the house of representatives, and they say they were cheated out of that majority, and a return made of 53 republicans and 53 democrats, instead of giving the democrats a majority of 29.

Mr. THURMAN. Not that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that is the substance of it. I think the returning board returned 53 democrats and 53 republicans.

Mr. THURMAN. Fifty-four republicans and 52 democrats.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Louisiana tells me the return was fifty-three democrats and fifty-three republicans, and five men were returned as not elected and their cases referred to the action of the organized house. Here is the case. What then? Suppose we admit your whole charge; my colleague is a lawyer, and has been an able and excellent judge; would he stand up here in the Senate and say that because all these things have been done any portion of that body could go there and with revolutionary violence seize upon the organization, disregard the rights of the majority or minority there, refuse a call for the yeas and nays, refuse a vote, put in five men without a vote, and in many respects violate the law of its organization? I think not. If you admit all that these gentlemen claim, what is the remedy? The remedy pointed out by the constitution of Louisiana, the same that is pointed out by the rule of the House of Representatives of Congress; that the house, when organized, shall pass upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of the disputed persons. The intervention of the returning board is a kind of agency that I am not familiar with. We have no such tribunals in Ohio. We have no such returning board in the sense in which this board existed, with power to refuse men their certificates because of alleged fraud, intimidation, or violence. But that is the law of Louisiana, and this case must be governed by that law. The present law of Louisiana, as I understand, is similar to the law they have had there for a number of years in this particular, for a returning board—a very dangerous and bad tribunal, in my judgment, because if the returning board is controlled by partisan politics, it may do just what these gentlemen say this returning board did. But still there is the law, and these men were bound to obey the law. The law must govern in the proceedings to organize that house; and under that law the men whose names were returned by them alone could vote. But upon what evidence does my colleague say that these things were done? Upon what evidence does he say that the returning board committed a fraud? Upon the statement made by three members of the House of Representatives of this Congress, all highly respectable gentlemen, made upon a short and cursory examination of a few days, made without the presence of the president or any member of that board, so far as appears—certainly without the presence of Governor Wells, an old citizen of Louisiana, who was not present before them; made in haste. Upon this information, no doubt honestly given, because I know each of the gentlemen whose names appear to that report, and I know that neither Mr. FOSTER nor Mr. PHELPS nor Mr. POTTER would sign anything that they did not believe to be true—upon this statement suddenly made by them, on going there in ignorance of all the facts, made however upon their honest responsibility, believing these facts to be true, these charges are alleged. Suppose it to be so, what difference does it make? It does not affect the legal questions involved in the organization of that house; but until you hear both sides of that question is it wise to condemn the board by wholesale.

There is one rule of law which is universal, and that is that every person charged with the performance of a public duty is presumed to do his duty unless the contrary appear. You cannot go on with a representative government, where all the powers of the government are conducted by agents, unless you give to the acts of those agents a reasonable inference of purity and justice. That is the rule of the law. We are bound to presume that the returning board had a legal basis and a just basis for all their actions. If you cannot rely upon it, it shows that the organization of that board was wrong, that its members were corrupt, or that they grossly violated their public duty. None of these things are to be inferred, nor can they be hastily proven upon the hurried statements of a committee sent there to examine this among a great many other things, without the presence of the five men who were members of the returning board, without the evidence of the president of the board, who it would seem was absent. Although he sent his affidavit, it was not received. I have nothing to say in mitigation of the conduct of the board. If they did what my colleague says, they violated their duty, and ought to be held up to public scorn and contempt; but that must not be presumed. It must not be hurriedly assumed upon a statement like this. We know that at this moment other gentlemen—probably it would be no derogation to the committee who signed the report to say men at least equally able as lawyers, as intelligent and as patriotic as citizens, have gone there to re-examine the conclusions of that committee. But suppose it turns out to be that the statements of this report cannot be varied, does that affect the question? Not at all. It still leaves the law of Louisiana intact; it still gives to those returned by the returning board the power to organize the house.

But, says my colleague, that is yielding everything. There again they assume that the majority of the house thus returned will wrongfully and fraudulently exclude men legally elected. The Constitution of the United States places upon the Senate the power to pass upon the returns of our members. It may be that the Senate fraudulently, corruptly, or with improper motives may reject a man who has been duly elected a Senator; but there is no other tribunal that can pass upon the question from the nature of things. So in the House of Representatives. The Constitution gives to that House the power to judge of the elections, returns, and qualification of its members. I have seen democrats seated by a republican House. I have seen republicans seated by a democratic House. It is to be presumed that these high political bodies will perform their duty according to law. If you cannot base that presumption upon reasonable probabilities, then our Government is not worth a rope of straw. It rests upon the general intelligence and fairness of the majority rather than the minority. So in the house of representatives of Louisiana. What right have these gentlemen to assume that because they have been cheated out of the returns of some of the members, the republican majority returned by the returning board would exclude five men if they were legally elected? I do not believe they would. Indeed I have heard from information, just as we gather it from others, by those who were present, that there is scarcely a doubt that whatever might have been the disposition of a majority of the republican members returned, there were enough men among them of character and fairness and justice who would have fairly decided upon any case that might be brought before them.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to interrupt my colleague even for a moment, because he dislikes to be interrupted; but I want to ask him if he does not know that what is called by the republicans the Legislature of Louisiana, that same body that professed to elect Mr. Pinchback on last Tuesday, have actually, without any investigation whatever, seated the five men who were defeated for the seats that were occupied by the five men who were expelled by De Trobriand?

Mr. SHERMAN. If that be so, I hope that the republican majority in this Senate will do its duty when it comes to examine the question referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. But is it to be presumed that the majority will not do its duty? Here the arraignment would go directly to us that we are not to be trusted in passing upon the Pinchback case, because, forsooth, we may trample upon the rights of the minority!

There is no rule which governs the organization of parliamentary bodies more universal in its application than this: that although returning boards and reports from secretaries of state and other merely executive officers may in the first place prepare a list that is not just, not fair, not proper under the circumstances, yet the power of the house, it is presumed, will be exercised always to seat men who have been lawfully elected, and will not in any case expel a man who has been elected from his seat, although he is in the minority. Therefore I dismiss from my view of the case the action of this returning board, first, because we have not yet sufficiently developed the facts in the case; and next, even if the facts are shown to be as now claimed by Senators on the other side, they will not justify in the slightest degree or palliate any of this lawless violence, but we must rest upon presumption that a majority duly returned will act fairly and honestly upon the returns of the members who have been elected.

There is another thing: This case is constantly affected and shadowed by the doubts that rest on the election of Kellogg. That ought to be dismissed. Whether Kellogg was lawfully elected or wrongfully elected, probably will never be ascertained, because, according to the report of the committee of this body, the condition of fraud, violence, intimidation, and wrong that prevailed in 1872 will forever prevent any solution of the question as to whether Kellogg was legally or illegally elected, whether McEnery or Kellogg was elected. It is one of those questions that probably we cannot decide. It is a painful question to me. I never have voted yet to recognize the results of the Louisiana election of 1872, because, after reading the able reports that were made by the majority and minority of our committee, I was totally at a loss to say whether or not Kellogg was elected. But Kellogg was there, recognized by the local authorities, recognized by the supreme court of the State of Louisiana, by judges elected before the election occurred, is now recognized by the President of the United States, recognized also by the action of the House of Representatives in admitting members who were elected on the same ticket with him. He being recognized by all these departments of the Government, whatever may be our opinion in regard to the election of Kellogg, no one can question his right while acting de facto; as governor to exercise all the powers of governor, until his right to do so may be disputed, we cannot measure his powers as governor at any less gange than if he had been elected without dispute or controversy as to the majority. We have nothing to do with the case. He is there in possession of the executive authority, armed with the powers given him as governor. He appoints judges; he appoints nearly all the officers of the State. They are there now in the enjoyment of their offices. He has been recognized by the supreme court of the State in two or three decisions. We cannot overthrow his government without the most careful examination; and until we do overthrow it by some legal act we must recognize him as governor and give to his acts all the force and all the consequences of the acts of a lawful governor.

Now I come to another point upon which a great deal of declamation has been expended, and that is the telegrams of Sheridan. It is now admitted and known to all the people of the United States that these honorable Senators who would not knowingly do injustice to any one, high or low, did do the grossest injustice to General Sheridan and the President of the United States. All over this country the cry of a military despot, a tyrant, a usurper, was rung and repeated against General Grant and General Sheridan. It turns out, when we have the facts, that General Grant did not know any more about the events of the 4th of January than we did; that all the orders he had given were legal orders, approved and sanctioned by public opinion, in consequence of the attempted revolution in September, 1874. This émeute, this sudden violence, was a surprise to him, and he heard of it with the same sentiments that we felt when we read the dispatches on the morning of the 5th. All was new to him, and he was in no sense responsible. So with General Sheridan; he was there, not desiring, not intending to assume command, when suddenly Wiltz seized upon that organization, put the brand to the burning pile, aroused the whole population there, and Sheridan under the excitement of the moment sent his indignant telegrams. What are they? This brave soldier, who has carried our banner in many a hard-fought field, and nearly always to victory, one of those whom the American people have been delighted to honor—what has he done, in the name of Heaven, that brings down upon him now all the reproaches of party heat and party hate? Let us see. No act, remember, of his; he did not participate in General De Trobriand's act, whatever it was; his command commenced at nine o'clock that night, at a time when a fever heat prevailed in New Orleans, when at any moment armed bodies of men might be brought into collision. Being then there, a soldier of superior rank, armed with authority, he assumed the responsibility, and from that time forward he is responsible for what he has said and done, but up to that time he is not for anything done there. Let us see what he said in his first telegram, because he has actually done nothing. Here is the dispatch, written within probably an hour after he assumed command, because it seems to have been received here at 11.45 p. m. on the 4th of January:

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

It is with deep regret that I have to announce to you the existence in this State of a spirit of defiance to all lawful authority and an insecurity of life which is hardly realized by the General Government or the country at large. The lives of citizens have become so jeopardized that unless something is done to give protection to the people, all security usually afforded by law will be overridden. Defiance to the laws and the murder of individuals seem to be looked upon by the community here from a stand-point which gives impunity to all who choose to indulge in either, and the civil government appears powerless to punish or even arrest. I have to-night assumed control over the Department of the Gulf.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

This is a terrible statement of facts. If they existed, it was the duty of Sheridan to communicate them, however much it might stir up the feelings of others. If they are false, then General Sheridan has either ignorantly or willfully deceived and misled the President upon a most vital point. What are the facts? When I read that telegram, I must confess that I shuddered, because, if true, it was a fearful picture of demoralization in Louisiana; if false, it was an equally fatal error on the part of Sheridan, an Army officer, to state such facts if they did not exist, and unless he knew that they existed. Now, read that telegram in connection with the full information we have of the condition of affairs in Louisiana; and I tell you, sir, that after reading a later telegram of his, on a subsequent page of this document, if that is a statement of what has actually occurred there, where dates, and figures, and amounts, are given, then I turn back to the telegram of General Sheridan on the evening of the 4th of January, and I say that telegram is true, every word of it. You may read these two telegrams together. My colleague cannot make light of this. There are the words of a soldier in black and white, like an indictment stated with more than the precision of a lawyer. If the telegram of the date of January 10, 1875, is true about Louisiana, then every word that General Sheridan said in his telegram of the 4th is true.

Mr. THURMAN. Where did he get the proof from?

Mr. SHERMAN. Do you deny any fact he asserts?

Mr. THURMAN. Palpably——

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Secretary to read that, and I hope Senators will see how much the statements made by him rest upon historical facts, records which cannot be denied; and if that telegram is true, I say that the first telegram is true.

Mr. THURMAN. Where did Sheridan get his knowledge?

Mr. SHERMAN. Where we get our knowledge—from facts; it makes no difference, if he stated the facts.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, January 10, 1875—11.30 p. m.

Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Since the year 1866 nearly thirty-five hundred persons, a great majority of whom were colored men, have been killed and wounded in this State. In 1868 the official record shows that eighteen hundred and eighty-four were killed and wounded. From 1868 to the present time no official investigation has been made, and the civil authorities, in all but a few cases, have been unable to arrest, convict, and punish perpetrators. Consequently, there are no correct records to be consulted for information. There is ample evidence, however, to show that more than twelve hundred persons have been killed and wounded during this time on account of their political sentiments. Frightful massacres have occurred in the parishes of Bossier, Caddo, Catahoula, Saint Bernard, Saint Landry, Grant, and Orleans. The general character of the massacres in the above-named parishes is so well known that it is unnecessary to describe them.

The isolated cases can best be illustrated by the following instances, which I take from a mass of evidence now lying before me of men killed on account of their political principles: In Natchitoches Parish, the number of isolated cases reported is thirty-three; in the parish of Bienville the number of men killed is thirty; in Red River Parish the isolated cases of men killed is thirty-four; in Winn Parish the number of isolated cases where men were killed is fifteen; in Jackson Parish the number killed is twenty; and in Catahoula Parish the number of isolated cases reported where men were killed is fifty, and most of the country parishes throughout the State will show a corresponding state of affairs. The following statements will illustrate the character and kind of these outrages:

On the 30th of August, 1874, in Red River Parish, six State and parish officers, named Twitchell, Divers, Holland, Howell, Edgerton, and Willis, were taken, together with four negroes, under guard to be carried out of the State, and were deliberately murdered on the 29th of August, 1874. The White League tried, sentenced, and hung two negroes on the 28th of August, 1874. Three negroes were shot and killed at Brownsville, just before the arrival of the United States troops in this parish. Two white-leaguers rode up to a negro cabin and called for a drink of water. When the old colored man turned to draw it, they shot him in the back and killed him. The courts were all broken up in this district, and the district judge driven out.

In the parish of Caddo, prior to the arrival of the United States troops, all of the officers at Shreveport were compelled to abdicate by the White League, which took possession of the place. Among those obliged to abdicate were Walsh, the mayor, Rapers, the sheriff, Wheaton, clerk of the court, Durant, the recorder, and Ferguson and Renfro, administrators. Two colored men, who had given evidence in regard to frauds committed in the parish, were compelled to flee for their lives, and reached this city last night, having been smuggled through in a cargo of cotton.

In the parish of Bossier the White League have attempted to force the abdication of Judge Baker, the United States commissioner and parish judge, together with O'Neal, the sheriff, and Walker, the clerk of the court; and they have compelled the parish and district courts to suspend operations. Judge Baker states that the white-leaguers notified him several times that if he became a candidate on the republican ticket, or if he attempted to organize the republican party, he should not live until election.

They also tried to intimidate him through his family by making the same threats to his wife, and when told by him that he was a United States commissioner, they notified him not to attempt to exercise the functions of his office. In but few of the country parishes can it be truly said that the law is properly enforced, and in some of the parishes the judges have not been able to hold court for the past two years. Human life in this State is held so cheaply, that when men are killed on account of political opinions, the murderers are regarded rather as heroes than as criminals in the localities where they reside and by the White League and their supporters.

An illustration of the ostracism that prevails in the State may be found in a resolution of a White League club in the parish of De Soto, which states "that they pledge themselves under (no !) circumstances after the coming election to employ, rent land to, or in any other manner give aid, comfort, or credit to any man, white or black, who votes against the nominees of the white man's party." Safety for individuals who express their opinion in the isolated portions of this State has existed only when that opinion was in favor of the principles and party supported by the Ku-Klux and White League organizations. Only yesterday Judge Myers, the parish judge of the parish of Natchitoches, called on me upon his arrival in this city, and stated that in order to reach here alive he was obliged to leave his home by stealth and after nightfall, and make his way to Little Rock, Arkansas, and come to this city by way of Memphis.

He further states that while his father was lying at the point of death in the same village, he was unable to visit him for fear of assassination, and yet he is a native of the parish, and proscribed for his political sentiments only. It is more than probable that if bad government has existed in this State it is the result of the armed organizations, which have now crystallized into what is called the White League; instead of bad government developing them, they have by their terrorism prevented to a considerable extent the collection of taxes, the holding of courts, the punishment of criminals, and vitiated public sentiment by familiarizing it with the scenes above described. I am now engaged in compiling evidence for a detailed report upon the above subject, but it will be some time before I can obtain all the requisite data to cover the cases that have occurred throughout the State. I will also report in due time upon the same subject in the States of Arkansas and Mississippi.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the statement of a high officer of the United States that the people of this country will believe if my colleague does not. He is there on the ground. I ask if he cannot learn the facts better than my colleague who sits here in the Senate Chamber, where we are all peaceable and quiet, and where our disputes are only wordy, instead of the bitter disputes they have in Louisiana. General Sheridan states in that document historical facts already proven by testimony upon our records, like the bloody story of Colfax, like the Coushatta murder, the murder of judges and attorneys in the discharge of their duties. General Sheridan also tells you what he knows himself from persons whom he has communicated with there. Sir, I say to my colleague in all kindness that if that dispatch of General Sheridan be true, as I fully believe it is, and it would not have been made up except upon a strong showing, then all that has been said of Louisiana has never been sufficient to denounce as strongly as they ought to have been the atrocities there committed.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator give any effect at all to the response of the merchants and the leading clergymen of every denomination in the city of New Orleans?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will come to that in a moment; but I say this——

Mr. BAYARD. And the report of the sub-committee of the other House, all northern men?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know very well how in the state of things in Louisiana such denials come from the clergy in New Orleans. Do they deny the Colfax murder? Do they deny the murder of judges? They simply say that a state of lawlessness does not exist there. What they deny is not Sheridan's second dispatch but Sheridan's first dispatch, and that dispatch is simply a declaration that lawlessness prevailed. Now, I ask, if the second dispatch is true, does not lawlessness prevail? I do not want to go into the particulars, but these are historical facts. These men may meet together in chambers of commerce, though in one case they struck from their roll a man who told the truth; they may meet in their conventionals, these religious denominations, and preach and deny these general facts; but when they rest on purely historical documents so easily proved as physical facts, the people of the United States will believe them, and will attribute these denials either to the careless ignorance of those gentlemen who utter them or to a desire to avoid the terrible indictment thus made against the State of Louisiana.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment—I was not paying attention a few moments ago, but I understood that the Senator's colleague asserted that five men from these disputed parishes have been admitted by the republican members of the Legislature.

Mr. THURMAN. I have seen it so stated.

Mr. WEST. The Senator is misinformed. There were three out of the five, and those three came from parishes that were returned as republican.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I want to go a little further. The first dispatch I entirely approve every word of upon the information we have, and I have no doubt we have as much information as is known anywhere. Now, in regard to other telegrams of General Sheridan which have been commented upon with great violence and great injustice, let me read them. On the 5th of January, the day after these transactions, he telegraphed:

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Please say to the President that he need give himself no uneasiness about the condition of affairs here. I will preserve the peace, which it is not hard to do with the naval and military forces in and about the city; and if Congress will declare the White Leagues and other similar organizations, white or black, banditti, I will relieve it from the necessity of any special legislation for the preservation of peace and equality of rights in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, and the Executive from much of the trouble heretofore had in this section of the country.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

That is, "If Congress will do so and so, I will do the rest." Very well; I have no doubt that if Congress would do as General Sheridan here suggests he would do the rest; but Congress will not do it, cannot do it, ought not to do it, and that is the end of it. If General Sheridan is to be punished for bad advice given to Congress, God save all the people of the United States who have sent us here schemes enough to ruin the whole Government a thousand times over. Is General Sheridan to be punished for a telegram based upon what Congress might do when he suggests "If Congress would do so and so, I will do so and so?" This telegram has been spread over the country as evidence on the part of Sheridan of an incendiary spirit which would burn the city of New Orleans and scatter havoc and devastation over the whole country; and my friend from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] became so indignant and so eloquent about this that I really did not know what would become of him and of us all. Here was a mere suggestion that if Congress would do so and so, he would do so and so. He can perform what he agreed to do, but we cannot do what he proposed that we should, and nobody supposes we could. On the contrary, Congress has exercised its power in dealing with these turbulent and lawless Ku-Klux organizations by making law, and that law has been enforced in the courts aided by military authority. That is the only remedy we can give in such cases, and that remedy we have given.

Now let me read the next dispatch:

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

I think that the terrorism now existing in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas could be entirely removed and confidence and fair-dealing established by the arrest and trial of the ringleaders of the armed White Leagues. If Congress would pass a bill declaring them banditti, they could be tried by a military commission. The ringleaders of this banditti, who murdered men here on the 14th of last September, and also more recently at Vicksburgh, Mississippi, should, in justice to law and order and the peace and prosperity of this southern part of the country, be punished. It is possible that if the President would issue a proclamation declaring them banditti no further action need be taken except that which would devolve upon me.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

Here again is a repetition of Sheridan's advice: If Congress would declare them banditti, then he would put them down; and if the President would issue a proclamation, he might probably be able to do the same; and he says:

The ringleaders of this banditti, who murdered men here on the 14th of last September, and also more recently at Vicksburgh, Mississippi, should, in justice to law and order and the peace and prosperity of this southern part of the country, be punished.

Should they not be? Those scoundrels—I will not use any harsh word, it is not necessary—those lawless men, armed and organized in violation of the law of the State of Louisiana, who subverted its government on the 14th of September, ought they not to be punished? They killed one hundred men. Is that no crime? They still possess the arms that they stole from the arsenal, according to the statement of the Senator from Louisiana. Is that no crime? Is it no crime to have within the State an armed organization sworn to overthrow the State?

The President of the United States thought this ought to be punished, and he did all he could by issuing his proclamation and saying, "Gentlemen, disperse in five days or I shall be called upon to perform my constitutional duty," and they dispersed. But does that make their crime any the less? No, sir; they are guilty of murder, and they ought to be tried and punished.

But the use of the word "banditti" gives offense to gentlemen, and it has been said that General Sheridan called the whole people of Louisiana banditti. He did not do it. He says the ringleaders of the White League are banditti. "Declare them banditti, and I will settle them." "Bandit" is a strong word; but I have been looking at the dictionaries to see whether or not General Sheridan was exactly right in using that word. I have taken the definitions of all the standard authorities; and let us see whether the acts I shall mention make these men banditti:

BANDIT. One declared to be banned, banished, exiled, outlawed; an outlaw.—Richardson. (Best English authority.)

> No savage fierce, bandit, or mountaineer
> Will dare to soil her virgin purity.
> Milton. (Comus.)

Who are they who can be said to be governed by laws of their own making? I never heard or read of any such, except, perhaps, among pirates and other banditti, who, trampling on all laws, divine and human, refuse to be governed in any other way than by their own licentious regulations.—Beattie. (Moral Science.)

BANDITTI. Persons who live by rapine, and find themselves in open revolt against the laws of the country.—Encyclopédie du XIXe. Siècle. (French.)

In Italy the banditti are very numerous and form a regular society, subject to a formal organization.—Ibid.

BANDITTI, (Italian). A band of robbers, outlaws, or ruffians.—Worcester.

BANDITTI. Men outlawed—robbers.—Johnson, (edited by Latham.)

A Roman sworder and banditto slave
Murdered sweet Tully.
Shakespeare. (The only case of its use in his plays.)

BANDIT; plural, BANDITTI. An outlaw; also, in a general sense, a robber, a highwayman; a lawless or desperate fellow.—Webster.

Now, let us look and see whether these men are banditti within the meaning of the word. He was speaking of the Ku-Klux, the white-leaguers; and as the Ku-Klux now have been pretty well developed, we know what they were—an armed band, sworn in secret, concealed, doing murder by night, robbing, plundering, crucifying; yes, nameless crimes, which dare not be uttered, were committed by these bandits. The bandit of Italy, where the word came from, only captures the rich. The men whom the Ku-Klux plunder, as they say, are the poor. The Italian bandits stopped the rich priest or nobleman and made him pay a good, heavy ransom, but they never capture the poor, the ignorant, and the lowly. So the Spanish bandit always deals out something like mercy or something like justice, and his punishment depends upon the ability of the person to pay. If he has nothing to pay, he is treated with a night's rest and good fare and sent to his home again. We had in English history a few hundred years ago another kind of bandits called the "merrie men of Sherwood," Robin Hood and Friar Tuck and that class of bandits. They always, like the Italian bandits, captured rich priests, levied contributions on monasteries and castles, and occasionally made a very big haul; but the justice administered at Sherwood was the justice of honesty. The poor were always protected; and yet they were English bandits or outlaws.

What are these Ku-Klux? They are just as much worse than the Italian bandit or the Spanish bandit, or the Engish bandit, as robbery of the poor is worse than robbery of the rich, as murder of the defenseless is worse than of the armed, as murder by night, under concealment and disguise, with the weapons of the coward, is than in the bright daylight, when the breast is presented to the lance of the enemy. Why, sir, for the Ku-Klux, as they have now been developed, the word "bandit" is too respectable. I have here a report, called "The Key to the Ku-Klux: individual report and revelation, by Edward A. Pollard, of the condition of the South." He is the historian of the southern rebellion, a southern man in every sense of the term. I will read what he says of the Ku-Klux, and see whether they and their lineal descendants, the White Leagues, are banditti or not. This was printed in 1872:

It is no longer questionable that there exists in the South a very detestable sort of lawlessness banded under the name of the Ku-Klux, and committing various crimes, even to the extent of murder; this is res adjudicata.

There is the admission that they are lawless bands of murderers and outlaws. If they be not banditti, then I do not know what it can be; but I will read a little further. He goes on to show that this organization grows out of hostility to the negro, and then proceeds:

They never omit an opportunity to strike at the black man, and that, however differing in other respects, they all unite in persecuting the negro. This is their secret bond of sympathy, the common ground of all the varieties of the Ku-Klux, the true explanation—of a parti-colored conspiracy in the South that, at once occult and shifting, has by its various disguises and transformations confused criticism, and for some time baffled even the most searching and determined investigations.

Mark the words—

Again:

The writer thinks enough so far has been given of the description of the Ku-Klux to establish its true character, and to strip, alike, from it, on the one hand, its own flimsy disguises by which it has attempted to impose upon public toleration or allowance, and, on the other hand, the weak pretenses by which the Federal Government has sought to construe it as incipient treason, and to magnify it into an occasion for martial law and other machinery of despotic interference and usurpation. This mysterious order in the South, which has so disturbed the imaginations of the country, turns out to be a very vulgar and ordinary thing—hateful enough, but not quite so fearful as the fancy of alarmists or the design of politicians had made it. It is not a knight with his visor down, nor a disguised missionary in great public affairs—there is no romance about it; it is only a vulgar, skulking foot-pad and murderer, to be ruthlessly hunted down and exterminated without compunction or mercy.

Are not those bandits? I think General Sheridan must have been reading this book, not only for his epithet but for his remedy. I will read a little further. Here is a single case given by Mr. Pollard that in atrocity I think passes anything I ever read. It seems to me a horrible atrocity, and yet it is written by a gentleman who is endeavoring to induce the southern people to put down the Ku-Klux:

The bravery which could kick in the heart a poor manacled negro or grind under its heel the torn, bloody face of a fallen victim; which had the nerve to jeer at the last dumb agonies which attend the ever unknown, unutterable mystery of death; which was capable of such scenes as that related to us by an eye-witness of one of the executions of the Ku-Klux, where, when the victim was swinging from the limb of a tree, one of his murderers leaped out of the crowd and by a sudden feat of activity vaulted on the shoulders of the dying man, so as by increase of weight to tighten the grasp of the rope and insure its work, and, amid huzzas at his agility, sat there, crouched and grinning like a demon, until the unruly and struggling body beneath him was still and he was sure that his knees pressed only a breathless corpse.

That was an organization in the Southern States. I ask you if they were not banditti, and was not Sheridan right? I say, sir, that the atrocities of these men always stirred my blood. I do believe now from the best information we have, although it is not as full and complete as I hope it will be made, because we ought not to act hastily upon insufficient information, that the White League is but the same thing over again. These lawless acts of violence which have made a bloody page in the history of Louisiana, which have written on that record contained in the telegram of Sheridan a tale of atrocity that seems more like a record of some period of the Middle Ages, a record partly described here by the chosen author of the History of the Southern Rebellion—I tell you, gentlemen, that such atrocities by such men demand not only the name which has been given by General Sheridan of "banditti," but they demand of us the exercise of every power of the General Government that we may lawfully and constitutionally exercise to put down and exterminate the men guilty of them.

The error of General Sheridan's advice was that, not being a lawyer or statesman but a soldier, he probably assumed that the Government would have the power to deal summarily with all these desperadoes that he called banditti. We must deal with them according to law, but in some way or other we must put an end to these atrocities, or else the very name and fame of republican institutions will be a by-word and reproach. Sir, there is that in these lawless acts of violence that not only arouses the sympathy of mankind for the victims, but the stern condemnation of the actors by every just man; and I know that my fellow Senators here on the democratic side feel that all these outrages are wrong and must feel as I express myself; but all these outrages are committed in the name of and for the benefit of the democratic party. If that day should come to which many of you look forward with hope, when the democratic party shall be in power in this Government, then one of two things will be true: either the blacks of the South will be turned over to the tender mercies of these men, or you will have again the fires of rebellion kindled in our midst.

We have sworn, in taking our oaths to maintain the Constitution of the United States, to secure to all the people life, liberty, and property. We are as much bound to secure the emancipated blacks life, liberty, and property as we are bound to secure them to our own home and kindred. We must do it, or this Government is forever disgraced. I would not so dread the accession of the democratic party to power but for the fear that springs in the minds of hundreds of thousands of good people of this country that you would not have the power to resist the overwhelming and controlling influence of the very bandits whom I have been characterizing.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to understand whether the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot refuse to yield to a question, but I would rather not.

Mr. BAYARD. Go on.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say then that while I wholly disapprove of the remedies proposed by General Sheridan—and he simply submitted them to the Congress of the United States—yet after a sober review of such papers as I have before me, which I could accumulate until the sun sat and rose again, furnished me by my honorable friend on my right, [Mr. SCOTT,] who was chairman of the committee on the Ku-Klux organization but I will not weary the Senate with them, I insist that something must be done to suppress these White League manifestations. This White League organization is of the same affinity as the Ku-Klux. I had a document here which shows by the admission of some southern men that the White Leagues and these other associations sprang out of the Ku-Klux. The Ku-Klux were suppressed by the law, which was enforced in some of the States, and they abandoned it or probably abandoned it partly on the urgent appeals of such men as Mr. Pollard, who denounced them as a great disgrace against civilization. But the White League comes in, armed, organized, and disciplined, sworn to overthrow the State government of Louisiana. They say they are for protection. We know they are not. What would my colleague and I feel if the laws of the State which we have the honor to represent had not the power to suppress at once any military organization aimed at its life? We boast that we represent here three millions of people, peaceful, quiet, and happy, who differ about everything and have the right to differ, who speak their minds boldly and freely, a community that we are proud to represent; and yet, if any of these things were brought home to the knowledge of the democrats in Ohio, and they could hear and see that by the ascendency of democratic rule there would be a revival and an encouragement of acts of atrocity like these, they would shrink from the enterprise, however desirable it might be in other respects. Sir, you will have to convince the northern people that this story is not true. You cannot do it, my worthy colleague, by sneers or smiles; it must be done by sober facts, because here are indictments which cannot be answered lightly.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to correct a misapprehension that might grow out of my remarks denunciatory of the White Leagues and the banditti. I do not say that all the people of Louisiana are of that mode of thinking at all. I know that we republicans sometimes neglect to give to these people in their present condition due consideration for some of the circumstances by which they are surrounded. In the first place, in Louisiana the war has left its excitement; and some of the scenes of the war in the Red River country, in this very Coushatta region on the upper part of Red River, and in New Orleans, have left great animosities, and we cannot expect these to die away in a moment. We must take that into consideration in viewing the conduct of the people of Louisiana. Besides, they have a mixed population. We know that there is a portion of the population of French descent, a portion of Spanish descent, many and probably a majority of colored people, some from foreign lands, some from our own Northern States, some from other Southern States. Probably there is no portion of the people of the United States that has a more mixed origin than the people of Louisiana. In all cases that tends to promote violence, because sometimes speaking different languages they cannot understand each other; sometimes being educated in different lands and under different institutions they cannot appreciate the institutions under which we live. All these things are to be considered.

They have to encounter another great difficulty in the novelty of former masters and slaves living together as freemen. This we know by all history is a most difficult problem. Those who were once slaves, whose wives and children were bartered and sold like sheep, are now citizens. The masters have been impoverished; they have lost their slaves; they have lost the use of their lands; all their labor is broken up. All these things are to be considered, and we must not overlook them. We must not therefore expect from them the same orderly regularity, the same freedom from violence and force, that we should expect in a stable, orderly people like the people of Ohio or New York. All the sources of wealth, are dried up. When I was there last winter I conversed with gentlemen of all political parties, and saw the great change in the value of their property and the amount of their income. Some families had incomes dependent upon the rents of real estate in New Orleans, and the real estate would hardly pay the taxes, and they were reduced to poverty, hardly able to gather money enough to pay their taxes. All that creates acerbity and bitterness of feeling, and no one felt it more than I did at that time. Thoughtful men I say should give heed to all these discouragements and difficulties; but after all, considering them all, we have a right to ask of these people to respect the law, to be obedient to the law. If they have a majority, in the name of God let them have the power of the majority. I would not, I am sure, and I do not believe any of my fellow Senators would, seek to deprive any State of the right to be governed by its own people, by home government, as they call it. What we do say is that they shall not trample down the rights of others; that when they are exercising their own right in voting as they please, electing democrats, electing confederate generals if they please, anybody they choose, they must not trample down the rights of the wards of the nation, who have been emancipated by our policy and by our laws. Equal rights, equal privileges, equal facilities for education, for life, for liberty, and the acquirement and enjoyment of property—that we demand; and in the name of God and by the agency of the republican party we will have it sooner or later. There is no doubt about that.

I will not now dwell upon the remedy. I intended to do so, but I am already too wearied to enter upon it. But I do say that the Senate ought now to take up this matter in a dispassionate way and do equal and exact justice to these people. If a democratic house was elected there last November lawfully and fairly, in the name of Heaven given them the organization, requiring them however to organize according to law, to obey the law and not obtain it by lawless violence. If they get the control of the house in a regular and legal way, let them have it. The republican party is strong enough and I hope brave enough to do justice to our political adversaries. If, as I honestly believe, their success will be an unmixed evil to our country, it can be easily repaired, and the future is all before us. Then let them secure to all the people of Louisiana equal and just rights, and let us hear no more of the wrongs, outrages, and murders that have wronged the State of Louisiana. Why can they not live in peace? I cannot conceive of a state of society where a whole population is overawed and intimidated, as undoubtedly the negro population are to a very large extent in many parishes of that State, where murder can be committed without punishment. The mere statement that a thousand murders—only take one-third of what General Sheridan says—that a thousand murders have been committed in Louisiana and not a single man punished for them is a fact so atrocious, so terrible, so damnable, that I can hardly believe it. Yet there it is. How that matter occurred at Coushatta, how the people there, democrats and all, did not rise and follow the murderers and take instant vengeance on them, or at least secure them and try them before the courts, I cannot imagine. Yet four or five young men from the North who went there with capital, who went merely to build up a little village, were suddenly broken up and murdered after they had surrendered. The murderers violated even the code of honor which always secures a man who surrenders safety. After these men had surrendered and were on their way from the country on the road to Shreveport, they were murdered.

Mr. THURMAN. Why were the murderers of the Italian miners near Pittsburgh not punished?

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend calls attention to a fact that I did not know. In the Northern States when crimes of this kind are committed they are always dealt with and punished, and if not they are subject to denunciation. Sometimes poor human nature will yield to a sudden impulse and commit an atrocious crime, rarely though, in a community where law and order are observed. But does that explain the universal lawlessness that murders over three thousand people in a few years in a small population? Look at the lawless murder that occurred at Colfax where fifty or sixty negroes were killed after they surrendered. Look at the murders of judges and and prosecutors? I hope my colleague will not bring up the occasional crime that is committed in the Northern States to justify or palliate or extenuate any of the offenses. In Ohio when crime is committed, although sometimes it may have been induced by strong feeling and excitement, like a recent case that occurred near Urbana where a man was unlawfully and improperly killed by a mob under the most gross and terrible provocation that could move the human heart—when such things occur, they must be only incidental cases rarely happening in a community like that, but when they do happen the whole population, democratic and republican, rises up to put down and punish everybody who violates the law. But it is not so in the Southern States.

If I have not misread the history of those States, (and certainly I have no desire to heap coals upon their heads, no desire to be unjust to them,) if I have read aright the history of those States as depicted by investigations made by authority of Congress, there has existed a state of lawless violence that has no counterpart in any history I know of. There may be one remedy. These people may submit to the democratic party and produce a kind of peace, but it is not the peace of equality of rights; it is not the peace that your Constitution guarantees to every man; it is the peace of despotism, of violence, which never will give you the peace of prosperity, wealth, education, and progress. What we insist on is, that having by our Constitution made all slaves free and promised all the protection of the law, they should be protected in every right. When one of them is killed, his murderer should be tried and punished just as the murderer of a white man would be tried. If they are plundered and robbed by gangs of outlaws going to their poor cabins, as occurred in one case recently in Tennessee, where they fired into a cabin and killed a poor school-mistress, whose only crime was that she had put up a little school in the neighborhood—when such things occur, the instinctive spirit of the mass of the whole people of all parties should prompt them to see that the guilty are punished. I have no doubt that this is the sincere wish of many good men in Louisiana. When I was there a year ago I saw intelligent merchants, good men, men whose intelligence and ability would enable them to pass anywhere in the world as gentlemen, and in conversing with them they would speak freely of these things. They never denied the atrocities that had been committed. They did not do what has been done in the Northern States a thousand times over. They admit them, but palliate them, and claim that they are utterly powerless to prevent them. Such was the feeling often expressed and with it a generous longing for peace. I saw gentlemen in Louisiana who belonged to different parties, some of the clergy, some merchants, some bankers, some planters; I had the pleasure of enjoying the hospitality of two of the most intelligent sugar-planters. These gentlemen did not deny the outrages of which we have heard, nor did they defend them. They told me the unhappy situation in which they were placed. Society was disorganized and demoralized by the results of the war. I felt for them from the bottom of my heart. Many causes contributed to their discouragement. When they denied that Kellogg was elected, and complained of all the successive governments installed over them, they freely divided the responsibility for their unhappy condition between the lawless crimes and recklessness of white men, the ignorance of the blacks, and the rapacity of plunderers who fatten where lawlessness prevails.

There are a great many lawless young men springing up in Louisiana as well as in other Southern States without apparent employment. Their condition in life is greatly changed by the results of the war. They are the men who fill your Ku-Klux Klans and White Leagues. They have the spirit that is excited by youth and madness, and it is they who make these forays and no one punishes them, and the few good, sober, older men have no power to control them. The power of the South and the power of the democratic party there rests mainly with those young men who were in the confederate service and are now to some extent deprived of means, deprived of employment, with their homes broken up by the freedom of the slaves and the sale of their lands. These things are to be considered. All we ask of them is that they will obey the law, execute the law, respect the life and property of all, and if they have a majority they shall have the power. That is all we ask, and we demand and will have it.

The republican party in its long administration of this Government has never been animated by a desire of depriving any man of any right conferred upon him by law. Our long struggle has been to secure to every man the rights and privileges of freemen, and that whether he be rich or poor, learned or ignorant, white or black. Supported by the people, we have written their rights in the Constitution of the United States. We will demand the faithful observance of this Constitution in all its parts and with all its amendments, and if this is accorded by the democratic party in truth and in fact, our political contests will quietly drift into the minor struggles of men for office or of questions of political economy, which only affect wealth and not life. I do with all my heart respond to the peroration of a speech made the other day by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] for peace, harmony, and good will. He says he is heartily sick of all this stirring up of bad passions. So am I. But they never will rest at your bidding until all men, black or white, native or naturalized, from the North or the South, can go freely and safely anywhere within the limits of the United States and enjoy his rights as a citizen. Such has not been the case in the South. And until then the struggle will go on by the party that upheld our flag in the civil war, that emancipated all slaves, and has sought to reconstruct our republican institutions upon the broad basis of equality before the law, and security of all to exercise anywhere the rights conferred by the law. Whatever I can do to secure the rights of all the people of Louisiana to govern themselves according to law in harmony with the Constitution, and so as to secure them all in life, liberty, and property, this I will surely do.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. Presieent, in the discussions that have taken place on the Louisiana question much general denunciation has been indulged in against the South, but I have heard no special attack upon the State that I have the honor in part to represent. Except and unless we are included in the general terms "the South," "the southern people," "southern society," that State has so far escaped obloquy. It has escaped it justly and properly, because I am willing to institute a comparison between that State and any other of the Union, North or South, in all respects, for observance of the laws, obedience to the Constitution, and regard for the rights of every man in it, of any condition, nationality, or color. Twice since the war has she been left without any civil officer, and even then there was no lawlessness anywhere in her borders. The southern people have been assailed, and assailed with great bitterness. They have been defended upon this floor with ability, earnestness, and zeal by several Senators, and especially by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] I could add nothing to what he and others have so well said, and will content myself simply with giving my hearty indorsement and approval of what they have said. Senators who affect to see the growth in the South of a design now to inaugurate a new war or to subvert the Government of the United States cannot be very wise observers. They cannot mean what they say. How is a new "rebellion," as they love to phrase it, to be inaugurated? Where is a secession movement to originate? South Carolina led off in the movement before and fired the first gun on Fort Sumter. Is South Carolina, with twenty-five thousand negro majority, with a State government republican in all its departments and "loyal" to the core, likely to repeat the experiment? Mississippi speedily followed South Carolina. But Mississippi has a large republican majority, and has for its governor an officer of the United States Army. Is she likely to follow? When the ball of secession had been put in motion, Louisiana followed. Is Louisiana, with Kellogg for governor, backed up by the Administration and with the Army of the United States occupying New Orleans, likely to go into a new secession movement? In view of these facts, I must doubt the sincerity of any Senator who pretends to see in anything that has occurred any purpose on the part of any Southern State or any southern party to attempt the accomplishment of an overthrow of the Government or to bring about a dissolution of the Union.

Mr. President, this discussion has taken a wide range. The real question which we are considering is whether the act of the United States troops under the command of a general officer, in going into the State-house of a sovereign State and taking therefrom five persons who claimed seats in it, has any warrant under the law and Constitution, and whether the people of the United States and the Congress of the United States are to approve or condemn the act. In order to arrive at a proper understanding of that question it is necessary to consider what occurred. There was a general election in 1874 in the State of Louisiana. It was announced and believed that the democratic party had received a majority in the State and that they had elected twenty-nine majority in the house of representatives of the Legislature. All of the returns are to be examined by a returning board. What that returning board is and what it has done we may learn very clearly from the report of the committee that was sent to Louisiana to investigate the affairs of the State, who say in regard to it:

> The law provides that this board shall consist of five persons, "from all political parties." It consisted at the opening of their last session of five republicans; upon the resignation of one of whom (General Longstreet) Mr. Arroyo, a conservative, was taken to fill the vacancy. After protesting against the action of the board in secret session he resigned about the conclusion of their labors, and his place was not filled, so that, as your committee think, the law as to the constitution of the board was not complied with.

This very law providing for the constitution of their returning board was violated deliberately; and we shall see further on the purpose for which it was done. It was not an accidental thing, done without purpose; but, if we examine the subsequent proceedings of the board, the object of their direct violation of an express law is clearly apparent.

The same committee, speaking of the conduct and proceedings of the board, says:

> The returns by the commissioners of election, compiled and forwarded by the supervisors of registration, gave the conservatives a majority of twenty-nine members out of a total of one hundred and eleven members. In only a few instances were there any protests accompanying these returns.
> The returning board was in session many weeks. As finally announced, their findings gave, as Governor Kellogg reckoned it fifty-three members to the republicans, fifty-three members to the democrats; of whom, however, one was regarded as not "a staying democrat." The board made no decision as to the remaining five seats.

Then the committee further goes on to exhibit the manner in which this returning board executed its duties, and takes the parish of Rapides as an example. Here is what the committee say in regard to the parish of Rapides:

> The parish of Rapides chose three members of the Legislature; the returns elected all three conservatives. When the proof closed, the only paper filed with the returning board was the affidavit of the United States supervisor that the election was in all respects full, fair, and free. It was not known in the parish that any contest existed agianst these members. They left their homes and proceeded to New Orleans to be present at the opening of the Legislature, no intimation of contesting their seats or objection to their election having been given by their opponents. At one of their last sessions the returning board declared all republican members elected from that parish. When the papers of the returning board were produced before your committee, there was found among them an affidavit by Mr. Wells, the president of the board, declaring that intimidation had existed at certain polls in that parish, and that the returns from those polls should therefore be rejected. The counsel for the democratic committee testified that they had had no opportunity to contradict the statements of this paper; that they never had seen or known of it before; and that, upon an examination of the papers of the board when the proofs closed, it was not among them. The counsel for the republican committee reserved the right to make explanation upon this point, but offered none. The affidavit was dated the —— day of December, 1874. It appeared that Governor Wells was not himself in the parish on the day of the election, and though at the opening of their first session your committee declared their intention to examine into the action of the returning board, Governor Wells never came forward as a witness. At the close of our proceedings leave was asked that his deposition might be given in. This was declined, and Mr. Wells himself was invited to appear before the committee, but he never came. Leave was also given for taking his testimony by commission, if he desired, but was not availed of.
> Your committee are therefore constrained to declare that the action of the returning board, in rejecting these returns in the parish of Rapides and giving the seats for that parish to the republican candidates, was arbitrary, unfair, and without warrant of law.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will my friend from Virginia yield to me a moment?

Mr. JOHNSTON. For what purpose?

Mr. MERRIMON. It is now after four o'clock. The day is far spent. It is not probable the Senator can finish his remarks to-night. If it is agreeable to him, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I appeal to the Senator from North Carolina to waive the adjournment and let the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. MERRIMON. Very well; I will so modify my motion.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This motion will not deprive me of the right of proceeding when the subject comes up on Monday? ["No."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 22, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3593) to constitute Patchogue, on the south side of Long Island, in the State of New York, a port of delivery.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Education and Labor the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to report to this House what measures, if any, should be taken by the United States to secure from any State the fulfillment of its contract to preserve undiminished the principal of the fund derived from the grant of land made by the United States for the support of colleges of agriculture and the mechanic arts, and whether in his judgment the provisions of existing law are sufficient to afford a remedy in the premises.

CONSTRUCTION OF LAWS IMPOSING CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, it will be recollected that a few days since a communication was sent to the House by the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, asking whether customs duties had been increased on any articles imported since the passage of the Revised Statutes, and if so, whether it was done because of any change of law made by the revision. It will also be remembered that this communication was referred by the House to the Committee on the Revision of the Statutes, against the protest of the Committee on Ways and Means. That this action was perfectly just under the circumstances was apparent, because the whole point of the resolution was to ascertain whether in the revision actual changes of law had been made in the rates of tariff duties. I felt greatly obliged to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] who first introduced the resolution, because I felt sure that it would afford an opportunity to entirely dispel a cloud of accusation that has been made against the commissioners who made the revision, or the committee of Congress who had it in charge for examination while before Congress.

Inasmuch as I was chairman of the committee, and as it was generally known that I also acted as sub-committee to specially examine that portion of the work covering the whole subject of laws for the collection of duties, and was therefore mainly responsible for the care and thoroughness with which this portion of the work was examined, the attack was made a personal one upon me.

It was charged that not only had the rates of duty been raised on many articles, but that I could not even have the benefit of charity that it was done ignorantly or carelessly. The worst of motives were charged upon me, that I had done it knowingly and by procurement, while deceiving the House and the country by professions that we were only putting the laws in form without change of substance. I recollect one particular charge; that I had been procured by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to change argols from the free list to a duty of six cents per pound, and that this was done for the benefit of the manufacturers in Philadelphia of perfumery and perfumed soap.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I did not even know, until working on this revision, what argols were. I then learned that the substance which crystallizes on the inner surface of wine casks and vats bears this name, and that after passing through many processes becomes cream of tartar. But I did not learn then that cream of tartar was used in the manufacture of perfumery or perfumed soap. That knowledge first dawned upon me in reading some of the many tirades against me originating with a certain customs-broker in New York. I had heard of cream of tartar in biscuit and in beer, but my knowledge of its uses went no further. Judge KELLEY, the perfumery manufacturers of Philadelphia, and myself, must therefore all be acquitted of combination and fraud in raising the duty on argols. In one of the exhibits attached to the Secretary's report will be found a decision of this appeal on argols, where it is shown conclusively that there was not the slightest change of duty upon that article. The laws regulating duties were in the most confused condition, and it was often a most perplexing thing to determine what the law was. Strange and contradictory rulings had been made not only in the collection offices and in the Treasury Department, but in the courts.

It was charged that the insertion of a comma had lost the Government many thousand dollars. Every industry almost in the country was affected by the tariff duties, and so delicate and dangerous was it felt to be to undertake to put in form the laws on the subject, that I know an excellent and worthy gentleman in the House who had actually prepared a resolution to offer that the tariff laws should be left as they were, without attempt at revision. I said to this gentleman that certainly no part of the laws needed revision so badly; and I was not willing to admit that on any subject the national laws were so confused and contradictory that they could not be truthfully interpreted and stated. Many gentlemen beside myself know the weary weeks of labor that I bestowed upon that part of the work, and I have the satisfaction of believing that every man in this House believes it was not only laboriously but conscientiously done.

But notwithstanding this, the New York City papers have teemed with articles decrying and denouncing the work, and traducing and vilifying me in connection with it.

Had the public known as well as I did the author of all these articles and his reasons, I should have felt very little alarm; but they did not and could not. It was therefore a matter of gratification to me that the Secretary should be called upon to state the facts upon the subject.

That there might not be mistakes in a work so vast and difficult, and where the time was so short and so much interrupted, I could hardly hope. I should consider it almost miraculous if there were not.

The square and manly report of the Secretary is certainly a matter of great satisfaction to me, and I am very glad he has had an opportunity to make it, and that I have thus an official and conclusive answer to all the charges made against me or my work on the revision. In order that this may go before the country, I ask that the Clerk may read a part of the conclusion of the report, and when that has been done, as the report does not point out any errors to be cured by the action of the Committee on the Revision, I shall move that it now be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

In further illustration of the general subject of this inquiry, reports have been called for from each of the four leading ports, stating the practice at each, respectively, before and since the enactment of the revision of June 22, 1874; also, the authority or order, either in the text of the law or in the letter or direction of this Department, under which each change was made. In these reports several different letters or circulars of this Department are cited as such authority, copies of each of which are transmitted. Also, the original reports, or schedules themselves, as received from the several collectors. It may be said of the classifications, or rates reported at the leading ports, in the accompanying papers, that they do not in all cases conform to any authorized construction or ruling made public by the Department, and they are not, in such cases, admitted to be the proper construction of the law at the time. They would have been corrected when brought to be the notice of the Department. And as to changes in construction heretofore made, under which refunds took place, the first important one appears to have been that of March 14, 1867, changing the rate on certain descriptions of linens. Large sums were refunded under that and similar decisions, although by both the legislative and judicial constructions now given to the law, as well as in the opinion of the present Secretary, such change of rates was not in accordance with a proper interpretation of the law at the time. In such of these cases as have been brought up for consideration, involving previous refunds and present corrections, it appears that the classification or rate restored is such as would at all times have been sustained in the courts. The correction was necessary, simply to enforce the law as properly construed.

Prior to the recent revision a large number of tariff statutes existed, no one of which in terms repealed the previous law, and it was therefore only by the most careful study that it could be determined how much of either enactment of the series remained in force. Persons interested to resist an increase of duties, constantly invoked the aid of the earlier law, and claimed the benefit of its more lenient provisions. Having always the aid of counsel, and commanding eminent ability for suggesting and pressing forced and extreme constructions of the law, they sometimes obtained acquiescence in their claims not warranted by a just construction, and thus weakened the force of the laws designed to increase rates of duty. The revision, however, brought all that legally remained of the various statutes together, thus giving the later acts their proper effect, and dropping those which had been the cause of much misconstruction. No substantial change of law appears to have been made, the present text is clear and easy of reference, and the confusion and contradictory features of the former state of the law are removed. The diversity of decisions in the local courts, that has existed in customs cases, was due chiefly to this multiplicity of unrepealed statutes; the case of Smythe vs. Fisk et al., recently decided in the Supreme Court, being an instance. The court below held that duties were chargeable under the earlier statue, whereas the Supreme Court unanimously decided that the later act was the law in force. The rule then laid down, and before referred to as being established by the Supreme Court decision of 1853, appears to have been observed throughout the revision, and it has been carefully followed in the rulings of this Department under it; this condensed text being of great service in the practical collection of the customs revenue.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether this document contains a letter from General Arthur, collector of the port of New York? If so, I should like to have it read, because it contains information which this House would like to hear.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let it go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK,
Collector's Office, January 6, 1875.

SIR: In compliance with the request in your letter of the 26th ultimo, (W. F. C.,) I have the honor to transmit herewith a tabular statement of the changes in the tariff of duties affected by the code of June 22, 1874, and the decisions of the Department thereunder, quoting the authorities of law or instruction, together with a report on the subject from the appraiser.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. A. ARTHUR,
Collector.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW YORK, January 6, 1875. C. A. ARTHUR, Collector.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I insisted the other day this communication should be sent to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, because we were going carefully over the sections to see if there were any errors, and this was asked for the purpose of ascertaining if there were any errors. Inasmuch as the Secretary of the Treasury now states, on careful examination of the tariff portion of the statutes, they seem to be correctly compiled, that he can find no errors in it, the communication is of no further service to us; and therefore I move our committee be discharged from its further consideration, and it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The motion was agreed to

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a day be fixed for receiving reports from the Committee on the Judiciary. There has been an arrangement in the committee that reports supposed to embody political matter are not to be presented under this call. So there is no occasion for the objection made by gentlemen on the other side of the House. I have conferred with members of the committee on that question, and we have a full understanding and agreement which will be carried out. I move that Tuesday next, after the hour of one o'clock, be set apart for the consideration of reports from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SPEER. Does this give the committee the right to report the civil-rights bill?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Neither the civil-rights bill nor any political subject will be reported at that time, under the agreement and understanding on the part of members of the committee. Only the current business of the committee is to be reported.

Mr. SPEER. With that understanding, I do not object.

Mr. BROMBERG. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he proposes to exclude the bill (H. R. No. 3881) to regulate elections in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, and Florida, and for other purposes, the bill (H. R. No. 3882) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act approved May 31, 1870, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States,'" and the bill (H. R. No. 4071) to protect the electors and prevent frauds in congressional elections, and for other purposes, as well as all kindred bills affecting elections or the reconstructed States now pending or hereafter to be introduced?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Those are specially excepted.

Mr. BROMBERG. Then they will not be reported?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They will not be reported at that time.

Mr. BROMBERG. Such is the understanding of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let the gentleman make it subject to the special order made a long time ago for that day.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will say, then, immediately after the special order, if there is one, for next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Do you mean the next day after it?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do.

Mr. SPEER. Will bills reported under this arrangement be subject to points of order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Except in very extraordinary cases, there is manifest injustice in giving any committee of the House advantages over other committees. The business of no committee except that of the Committee on Appropriations in connection with the regular appropriation bills is of more importance than the business of other committees; and therefore I submit that unless, in a very exceptional case, the regular order of business is the fairest order for reaching all the business that requires the attention of the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What makes this an exceptional case is that when the Committee on the Judiciary was called, Judge POLAND was unavoidably prevented from making reports, and I was at the time in the committee-room preparing bills. The call of our committee went over by accident. I hope, as the matters to be reported by the Judiciary Committee affect the business before the courts of the whole country, we will have the power we request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to giving the Committee on the Judiciary power to report on Tuesday after one o'clock?

Mr. KELLOGG. I object, unless the special order for that day is excepted.

The SPEAKER. The special order, in charge of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG,] is the bill, which is in Committee of the Whole, to reorganize the Treasury Department. If the order is made as requested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the construction will be that on that day at one o'clock the gentleman from Connecticut can move to go into Committee of the Whole. If the House declines, then the Committee on the Judiciary will have the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. With that understanding, I do not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that the gentleman is only asking for one morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The order includes the whole day after one o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. KELLEY move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that will not be done. There is not an appropriation bill now in the Senate. I hope the House will work to-morrow and finish the appropriation bill pending and go on with another.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. KELLEY. I am not one of the number, but there is a large number of gentlemen who have speeches prepared, and if this motion prevail we may arrange for a day for debate only. It will be the last Saturday during the session that can be set apart for that purpose.

Mr. KELLOGG. We do not want any day for that purpose.

The question being taken on Mr. KELLEY's motion, there were—ayes 76, noes 61; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 73.

Mr. GARFIELD called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 33, noes 90.

So (more than one-fifth having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 121, nays 119, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Burchard, Burleigh, Cain, Caldwell, John B. So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for a division on that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw it.

BREAKWATER AT CLEVELAND.

Mr. DONNAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back a map accompanying a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a breakwater at Cleveland, Ohio; and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

OHIO RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, relative to the Ohio River improvement and transcontinental railways; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed, and also to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA, January 15, 1875.

At a meeting of the citizens of Pittsburgh and Allegheny County, without reference to party, convened in La Fayette Hall, Pittsburgh, Wednesday evening, January 6, in pursuance to a call, (the original of which is attached,) the following memorial was adopted unanimously, and, in accordance with the resolution passed, is forwarded to your honorable body.

JOS. D. WEEKS, Secretary.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF PITTSBURGH,
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, January 15, 1875.

At a regular meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, held at their rooms Tuesday, January 12, 1875, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That this Chamber of Commerce heartily indorse the proceedings of the citizens' meeting held in La Fayette Hall on the 6th instant, in favor of the improvement of the Ohio River and the national indorsement of transcontinental lines of railroads, and we urgently request our Legislature, now in session, to take such action as will commend these measures to the immediate attention of Congress."

JOS. D. WEEKS,
Secretary Chamber of Commerce.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Believing that at times of great financial and industrial depressions like the present the views of the people as to the best methods of affording relief may not be unacceptable to Congress, we, citizens of Pittsburgh and Allegheny County, respectfully present our views in the following memorial:

The panic of 1873, at first regarded as temporary, has resulted in wide-spread and long-continued disaster; industry has been prostrated, manufacturing crippled, and in many instances broken; capital is idle and labor unemployed, and worst of all, from this stagnation of business an amount of privation and suffering to the laboring classes has followed of which words can convey no adequate idea. As one of the first effects of this panic (and one which in its reaction has intensified and continued it) was the stoppage of work on the great transcontinental lines of railway, we desire to direct your attention to their completion as a means of affording the desired relief. We believe that the framers of our Constitution spoke wisely when in its preamble they declared one of its chief functions to be "to promote the general welfare;" and believing this, we urge that both Government and people are interested in any measure or measures that will revive the dormant industries of the country, and especially where the occupancy and cultivation of its unoccupied land will follow, wealth be developed, and its income largely increased.

Therefore, as labor develops wealth and idleness consumes it unproductively, and as the increase of the wealth of the people strengthens the resources of the Government, we claim that the Government is alike interested with its people in reviving the work of building the great transcontinental railroads—the Texas Pacific and Northern Pacific—as a means of setting in motion the many forms of industry in the country, thus affording employment to the people and increasing the wealth of the nation. In granting this aid in the form of a guarantee of the interest only on the bonds of these roads, the Government being secured by the return in trust of the lands of these corporations and by a first mortgage on all their franchises and property, we do not consider that a subsidy will in any sense, have been conferred. It is merely the loan of an interest indorsement on the basis of ample security to the indorser.

The advantages of the early completion of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, in part, will be in the protection it will afford our southern frontier as well as against Indian raids on the settlers and miners in the Southern Territories, and will save the Government millions yearly in the cost of transporting supplies to troops and garrisons operating against Indians in that region; it will secure competition in transcontinental traffic, which will reduce rates and draw to the overland route a large share of traffic between Europe and Eastern Asia. Moreover, it is but just to the South, since the present line leaves to the Southwest the capitals and centers of population of a majority of the States; it will also stimulate the production of cotton, thus affording material for export that will aid to pay interest on the debt abroad; it will greatly increase the supply of cattle, thus equalizing the cost of a very important article of food in all parts of the country; it will develop the sheep culture of New Mexico, thus avoiding the necessity for importing large quantities of wool from abroad; it will develop the vast mineral regions of this country and Mexico, thus adding vastly to our production of the precious metals, and attracting a great tide of immigration, thus promoting immeasurably the wealth of the country; especially it will create a great demand for iron and coal and for labor, thus inspiring and developing the activities and resources of nation and country, and bringing plenty to the homes where want and suffering are now felt.

We equally urge the prompt completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad as opening up the finest wheat-producing region of the Northwest; as penetrating the Indian country, and quieting and civilizing the tribes of that region; as opening up the great Yellowstone Valley; as affording communication with the extreme northwestern part of the country; as rendering profitably available the vast trade of the Columbia River region, and as affording a new route to the Orient, in the region of the trade-winds, and with the shortest sea voyage at all available. Many of the reasons which are referred to in connection with the Texas and Pacific apply with equal force to this road, and we claim for both equally the interest and aid of the nation.

We also desire to bespeak your careful consideration of another subject to which your attention has already been called, namely, the permanent improvement of the Ohio River and the mouths of the Mississippi. The commercial importance of such a system of improvements as will make the Ohio navigable at ordinary stages of water can scarcely be overestimated. Nothwithstanding the present uncertainty of its navigation, its commerce reaches in value hundreds of millions of dollars yearly. Draining an area of nearly a quarter of a million square miles, passing in its course through a most fertile and productive valley, besides thousands of busy workshops, along the borders of six most prosperous and wealthy States, the natural highway from the portages of the Allegheny to the Mississippi, and through to the Gulf and the vast Central and South American markets, already opening up to our products, and that must, before many years, be largely supplied from the United States, its claims are not inconsiderable but merit at your hands immediate and liberal consideration, not only in view of the present benefit that will accrue, but also in anticipation of and preparation for the commerce that must find its natural course up and down the Ohio Valley.

In view of these considerations we submit the following:

Resolved, That having carefully examined these subjects in the light of the interests of the Government and welfare of the people, we urge upon the attention of Congress the foregoing as embodying our matured opinion and most earnest expression of sentiment on the subjects mentioned, and that the committee on resolutions be requested to forward this memorial to our Representatives in Congress, with the call for this meeting attached, and that they be requested to present the same.

CHARLES MORGAN.

Mr. SHELDON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back a bill for the relief of Charles Morgan, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENTS OF HARBORS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish this House with any report or information in his Department on the improvement of the harbors of Charlevoix and Monistique, Michigan.

REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. HALE, of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed five thousand additional copies of the reports of the Commissioner on Fish and Fisheries for the years 1872 and 1873; one thousand copies thereof to be for the use of the Senate, three thousand for the use of the House of Representatives, and one thousand for the use of the Commissioner.

Mr. HALE, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed five thousand additional copies of the third report of Professor Spencer F. Baird, Commissioner on Fish and Fisheries, with the accompanying documents; one thousand for the use of the Senate, three thousand for the use of the House of Representatives, and one thousand for the use of the Commissioner.

ALASKA.

Mr. HALE, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to this House a copy of the report of Henry W. Elliott on the condition of affairs in Alaska, submitted 13th November, 1874, with the maps and illustrations accompanying the same.

JOHN W. PORTER.

Mr. BUNDY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4461) granting a pension to John W. Porter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER BURTCH.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent to have passed a bill (H. R. No. 4462) which I send to the Clerk's desk. I will state that it is one which has passed the committees of both Houses of Congress at the last session, but which did not reach the President. It is a bill for the relief of Alexander Burtch.

The Clerk read the bill. It authorizes and directs the Adjutant-General of the Army of the United States to change the record of desertion against Alexander Burtch, late a soldier of the First Iowa Artillery, and substitute therefor a record of absence from the regiment. The bill further provides that the said Alexander Burtch shall be paid the amount due to him up to the time of his absence from his regiment, but shall not be entitled to any bounty subsequently granted by the United States.

Mr. SPEER. Has this bill been considered by any committee?

Mr. KASSON. Yes; it has passed through all the committees.

Mr. BARRY. I would like to know why we should deny this man bounty if he was not really a deserter.

Mr. KASSON. It is to correct the technical character of the record.

The bill (H. R. No. 4462) was received nem. con., read three times, and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFORM SCHOOL OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be directed to inform this House what action, if any, has been taken to recover from the late treasurer of the reform school of the District of Columbia the sum of $31,772.29, the same being involved in the bankruptcy of Jay Cooke & Co., and belonging to the United States, as directed by the last section of the general appropriation bill, passed at the last session, approved June 22, 1874.

TROUBLES IN VICKSBURGH.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to inform the House by what authority the courts or the officers thereof of the State of Mississippi, at Vicksburgh, have been interfered with by the Army of the United States, and also to report all orders in relation to said military interference.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that resolution because of the presumption in it that the judicial officers in Mississippi have been interfered with.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, and asked unanimous consent that the report of the committee on the said amendments be printed and that they be recommitted to the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INTEREST ON UNITED STATES BONDS.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4463) for the payment of the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider, and ordered to be printed.

UTAH CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. HARRISON, by unanimous consent, submitted the views of a minority of the Committee on Elections, in reference to the case of GEORGE Q. CANNON, Delegate from the Territory of Utah; which was recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the Indian appropriation bill as it now stands be printed, and I give notice that on Monday next I will ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole on that bill.

The motion to print was granted.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. It is whether the text that will go the Committee of the Whole will be the Indian appropriation bill and the amendments that were put upon it by the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is that bill, as though it were an original bill And anything in it that the Committee of the Whole do not like they can strike out, the same as if it had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations in that form.

SAMUEL W. CRAWFORD.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, House bill, with Senate amendment, for the relief of Samuel W. Crawford of the United States Army

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to taking out of its order from the Speaker's table any bill so long as the civil-rights bill is kept there.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I insist upon my call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour begins at fourteen minutes past one o'clock. This being Friday, the first business in order during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

WALTER J. LEE.

Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on War Claims, reported as a substitute for House bill 122 a bill (H. R. No. 4464) for the relief of Walter J. Lee, late second lieutenant Twenty-eighth Michigan Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL S. POTTER.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am instructed by the Committee on War Claims to report back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, Senate bill No. 786, for the relief of Samuel S. Potter, and to ask for its consideration at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. This same bill passed the last Congress.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Samuel S. Potter $750 in full of all claims against the Government for expenses incurred by the said Potter by reason of the seizure of his seminary building by J. F. Head, medical director of the district of Kentucky, for hospital purposes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that that bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA TURNPIKE COMPANY.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of Mrs. M. B. Brown for compensation for use and damage to the Washington and Alexandria turnpike; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. GALL.

Mr. MORRISON, from the same committee, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 3986 a bill (H. R. No. 4465) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Gall, deceased, late of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of John R. Hathaway, praying compensation for the use of his printing office and damage thereto by United States authorities during the late war; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the bill (H. R. No. 2524) for the relief of Mary E. Twiford, of Norfolk, Virginia; and the same was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of William M. Cooper, asking compensation for feeding soldiers at Cooper-Shop refreshment saloon during the late war; and the same was laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

RAPHAEL M. MILLER.

Mr. CESSNA. On behalf of my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. WHITE,] I report back, with an amendment, House bill No. 307 for the relief of Raphael M. Miller.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Raphael M. Miller the sum of $2,500, and to deliver to said Miller a certain note executed by said Miller on June 13, 1865, the money having been paid, and the note executed in full payment for the purchase of a certain lot of ground sold by the United States marshal for the district of Louisiana under a decree of the United States district court of said State; said decree having afterward been declared to be void and of no effect.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. HALE, of New York. I make the point of order that this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

The bill, with the amendment, was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

LIEUTENANT-COMMANDER FREDERICK PEARSON.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask to introduce for consideration at this time a bill permitting Lieutenant-Commander Frederick Pearson, of the Navy, to accept a decoration from the Queen of Great Britain. This is the same Commander Pearson for whom we were asked the other day to vote prize-money from the Japanese indemnity fund.

The SPEAKER. Why does the gentleman ask unanimous consent? This is a private bill, and the Committee on the Judiciary are called for reports of a private nature.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This bill has not been acted upon by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The bill authorizes Lieutenant-Commander Frederick Pearson, of the Navy of the United States, to accept a decoration of companion of the military division of the Order of the Bath, tendered to him by the Queen of Great Britain as a testimonial of the appreciation of Her Majesty's Government of the courage and conduct displayed by said Lieutenant Pearson in the attack upon the Japanese forts by the combined fleets of Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, and the United States, in September, 1864, because of which said Pearson received the thanks of the British admiral, the senior officer commanding.

No objection was made; and the bill (H. R. No. 4466) was received, read three times, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF LANDS AT VINCENNES, INDIANA.

Mr. PACKARD, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3399) authorizing the sale of certain lands at Vincennes, Indiana.

The preamble to the bill states that the United States theretofore acquired for debt, through the intervention of trustees, certain real estate in and near the city of Vincennes, Knox County, Indiana, consisting of about eighty acres of land, more or less, survey numbered 5, township numbered 3 north, range 10 west, second meridian, together with the half of lot numbered 1 and the whole of lot numbered 8 of Harrison's addition to said city of Vincennes, commonly called "the steam-mill tract," or "Hall Neilson property;" and that the Ohio and Mississippi Railway Company, the Evansville and Crawfordsville Railroad Company, and the Indianapolis and Vincennes Railroad Company have severally placed their tracks, switches, and certain buildings on said land while the title to the same was disputed; and it is desirable that said companies shall continue to occupy such portions of said land as may be necessary for the successful operation of their railroad lines.

The bill authorizes the Solicitor of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to sell or cause to be sold, at private sale, to said companies, so much of the same as may be required for their tracks, switches, shops, and other railroad purposes; provided that the aggregate amount so sold shall not exceed one-third of the whole of said land; and provided further that the remaining portions of said real estate may be sold, under existing laws, in such parcels as may be convenient and desirable.

Mr. HOLMAN. I notice that this bill provides that this land shall be sold at private sale, and not at public sale; but no mode is pointed out to fix the minimum value of the property to be sold.

I submit that, in the event of our authorizing a private sale of this property to these railroad corporations, there ought to be indicated some mode of ascertaining the value which the railroad companies should pay for it.

Mr. PACKARD. I have not distinctly heard all that my colleague has said, but I can explain this bill in two minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say that this land should not be sold to these railroad companies at private sale without our indicating some mode by which the real value of the property shall be ascertained. If it were sold at public sale, there would be of course competition, and the railroad companies, it may be presumed, would be obliged to pay what the land is worth. But if the property is to be sold at private sale, we should provide some means of preventing its being sold below its value.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, is not this a public bill?

Mr. PACKARD. O, no; it is a private bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether it is a public bill or not; it is just on the doubtful line between a public and a private bill. But the point of order at any rate comes too late.

Mr. PACKARD. The lands which this bill proposes to dispose of are situated in the city of Vincennes, Indiana. Upon those lands three railroad companies have placed buildings and laid their tracks. They did so years ago. The title of the lands in question has been in dispute. At length, after long litigation, the decision has been rendered that the lands belong to the United States; that the title is in the Government. The property of these railroad companies being upon the land, they desire to purchase the portions on which their tracks are located. The bill simply authorizes them to do so. It provides that the Solicitor of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may sell or cause to be sold to these companies the lands in question, provided that the aggregate amount so sold shall not exceed one-third of the whole of the lands. I am informed that the Secretary of the Treasury approves the measure. There can be no possible objection to it. The bill further provides that the remaining portions of this real estate may be sold under existing laws in such parcels as may be convenient and desirable.

Of course the reason why the bill provides that one-third of the lands may be sold to the railroad companies is because their tracks and buildings are now located there, having been placed there with the intention and expectation of purchasing the land so soon as they had the opportunity to do so. It could not be done before, because the title to the lands was in litigation. Now that it has been decided that the land belongs to the United States, these companies desire to make the purchase from the Government.

For a further explanation I yield to my colleague, [Mr. NIBLACK,] who resides in the city of Vincennes and knows all the circumstances.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, the tract of land referred to in this bill came into the possession of the Government of the United States about forty years ago in payment of a debt. The old bank of Vincennes, an organization created by the territorial government of Indiana, was indebted to the Government of the United States for moneys which had been from time to time deposited in that bank and for the payment of which the bank made defalcation, having failed and eventually gone into insolvency. Soon after the Government, or rather the trustees representing the Government, acquired title to this real estate, adverse claims were set up, and a series of lawsuits of one sort or another have been prosecuted in regard to it until within the last year, when the title has finally been decided in favor of the Government. In the mean time three railroad companies located their tracks across this land, and erected, I believe, some buildings on portions of it. They instituted proceedings to condemn so much of the land as they desired to use; but subsequent decisions of the courts—the decision of the circuit court of the proper district, confirmed by the supreme court of the State of Indiana—have declared that these persons were not the proper parties against whom proceedings for condemnation should have taken place. Hence those proceedings are of no avail to these companies.

This bill simply provides that now that the title to this real estate has been decided to be in the Government of the United States, these companies shall have the opportunity of purchasing at private sale so much of this land as they need at its market value, the amount not to exceed one-third of the whole tract. The remaining portion is to be sold at public sale just as the law now provides that it shall be. This arrangement will leave fragmentary pieces to be sold at public sale, which I think will be advantageous.

I think it but fair that these railroad companies, having in good faith endeavored to acquire title to so much of this land as they needed, should now have an opportunity to purchase from the Government at private sale the portions which they require, at a fair cash value. Otherwise the result may be that speculators will buy up the whole tract and then endeavor to make the railroad companies pay perhaps an undue price for what they desire.

Furthermore, one of these companies desires to locate machine-shops upon a portion of this land. That is a matter of some local importance to the city of Vincennes, and I believe it is the policy of the Government to allow railroad companies and other corporations to have all proper facilities for the transaction of their business.

This bill, which was introduced by me, was prepared at the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and it has the sanction of that Department; in other words, the officials of that Department say that upon my statement of the case they think it but fair that the disposition of the land here proposed should be made. I reside in the city of Vincennes, as my colleagues know, and of course I could not afford to do anything in regard to this matter which would not bear the test of scrutiny. I regard this as a fair bill to the Government, to the railroad companies, and to those persons who may desire to purchase the portions of this real estate which may not be required by these companies. I think by selling this real estate in small parcels or fragments it will bring more to the Government than if it were sold in one body. It will bring more in that way than if sold in the lump without reservation being made in favor of these railroad companies of whatever land they may need for switches, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a suggestion to my colleague. From his statement it seems to me the bill is a proper one, but ought not there to be some mode included in the bill for preventing this land being sold for less than its full value? I should like to have an amendment included that the lands shall be sold for not less than their appraised value, and such value shall be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause the same to be appraised as in other sales of the public lands.

Mr. NIBLACK. I have no objection to that amendment, although I have been told at the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury they never sell at private sales without having an appraisement and that appraisement indorsed by the district attorney and perhaps other United States officers of the locality.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is always well enough to have a bill on its face so provide.

Mr. PACKARD. I have no objection to including the amendment of my colleague.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the following amendment:

In line 5, after the words "private sale," insert the words "for not less than its appraised value, and such value shall be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause the same to be appraised as in other sales of the public lands;" so it will read:

That the Solicitor of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may sell or cause to be sold, at private sale, for not less than its appraised value, and such value shall be ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause the same to be appraised as in other sales of the public lands to said companies, so much of the same as may be required for their tracks, switches, shops, and other railroad purposes: Provided, That the aggregate amount so sold shall not exceed one-third of the whole of said land: And provided further, That the remaining portions of said real estate may be sold, under existing laws, in such parcels as may be convenient and desirable.

Mr. CONGER. Why not provide that it shall be sold at public sale?

Mr. NIBLACK. Existing law requires it to be sold at public sale.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, there is something novel in this method of disposing of this public land. It seems to me the Secretary of the Interior should have charge of these lands. I am unable to see why the Secretary of the Treasury should have charge of them. It is a province entirely outside of that of the Treasury. The Interior Department has full charge of the public lands and of the machinery for disposing of them. Indeed, this is a public bill, and ought to have gone to the Committee of the Whole. It should have been considered by the Committee on the Public Lands, as it is not in any way a private land matter, but relates to the public land. But why is it provided the Treasury Department shall dispose of it at private sale? It seems it has been adjudged to be public land, and in my judgment the Secretary of the Interior is the proper officer to dispose of the land as may be determined by Congress, and not the Secretary of the Treasury. I move to strike out the word "Treasury" wherever it occurs and insert the words "of the Interior."

Mr. NIBLACK. The gentleman from Minnesota is laboring under a misapprehension. This is real estate which the Government has acquired for debt. Property so taken under existing law is under control of the Treasury Department generally, and specially under the control of the Solicitor of the Treasury. As the law now stands, all the Solicitor of the Treasury has to do is to advertise the land to be sold at public sale. If the gentleman from Minnesota believes the law is wrong in this regard, he ought to bring in a general bill covering all cases, and transfer the whole matter to the Secretary of the Interior. This class of property has always been under the control of the Treasury Department, as I have stated. It is not regarded in legal contemplation as public land. It is a question not yet decided whether lands taken by the Government for debt are subject to taxation by State and local authorities upon the ground that it is not public land. That question cannot arise in this case, because the tax title has been decided to be bad for want of proper description. The objection I take to the gentleman's amendment is that it repeals existing law. I have no objection to the Secretary of the Interior having charge of the matter, but I wish these railroads to have an opportunity to purchase these lands.

Mr. DUNNELL. On the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, I withdraw my amendment. Does the bill provide that the balance of the land shall be sold at public sale?

Mr. PACKARD. It provides that the remaining portion of these lands shall be sold at public sale in such parcels as may be convenient and desirable.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PACKARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONFIRMATION OF LANDS AT SAN JOSÉ, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3870) to confirm to the city of San José, in the State of California, the title to certain lands, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that there be granted and relinquished to the city of San José, in the State of California, its successors and assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all the lands confirmed to said city by the final decree of the district court of the United States for the district of California, by its decree entered in the cause entitled "The United States against the mayor and common council of the city of San José," on the 13th day of June, 1866, pursuant to the decree and mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States in said cause, subject to the deductions, reservations, and limitations contained in said decree.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the point of order on that bill until an explanation shall be given of it.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I think the statement I propose to make will satisfy the gentleman from Indiana and the House.

The bill provides simply for the legal confirmation of title in the mayor and common council of the city of San José to certain lands, the title of which has already been found by the Supreme Court of the United States to vest in them; so that the United States have practically no interest. But the Supreme Court having held, in 18 Wallace, that the statutes of limitation of the State of California did not begin to run against the title to lands until there had been a legal confirmation of that title, it is the purpose of this bill to obviate the difficulty suggested, and to vest such title in the mayor and common council of San José as that these statutes may begin to run.

There is no land there that belongs to the United States at all, nor to the city of San José, the land having been all conveyed to private parties and held by them under conveyance from the mayor and common council since the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States, or rather the decree of the district court of the United States in California, under the mandate of the Supreme Court; so that the United States have really no interest whatever in the lands referred to in this bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Have not the Committee on Military Affairs reported against this bill?

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. HOUGHTON rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I still reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that if this bill have any effect whatever it is to pass the title to certain lands belonging to the United States to the city of San José.

Mr. HOUGHTON. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] will yield to me one moment I think I can satisfy the House and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that nothing by this bill passes from the United States to the city of San José. The sole purpose of this bill is to set the statute of limitations in motion. It has no other object.

The title to the lands is derived from Mexico, under an act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1851, to ascertain and settle private land claims in the State of California. This claim was presented to a commission organized under that act. An appeal was taken from the decree of that commission to the district court of the United States, and an appeal was taken from the decree of the district court to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court adjudged that the title was a valid title, and issued its mandate directing the district court of the United States in California to enter a final decree confirming the title to this land by specific boundaries with certain exceptions and limitations—a decree confirming the title of the mayor and common council of the city of San José and their successors.

Now the city of San José under the legislation of Congress is entitled to receive a patent for this land, the courts of the United States having jurisdiction having determined that the United States has no interest in it whatever. This decree has been entered up now ten years, and the statute of limitations, according to the decision of the Supreme Court which has been referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] who has charge of this bill, never can be set in motion until a patent has been issued.

Our experience in these matters is that there are great delays attending them. There has been already a delay of ten years in this case. And there is no immediate prospect of its being settled in the next ten years if this bill does not pass. Meanwhile it is extremely desirable that the title to this property should become settled in some way. It can only be settled by the operation of the statute of limitations. The purpose of this bill is to set that statute in motion and nothing more.

Mr. SPEER. What is the value of that property?

Mr. HOUGHTON. It embraces a very large tract of land. The tract originally included some forty leagues of land. Out of that tract, however, the United States courts have confirmed grants which include the greater portion of it. To those grants patents have been issued. The title of the remaining portion, the United States courts have found, is in the city of San José, and all or nearly all of it has been conveyed by the city of San José in small parcels to individuals. That is the situation of it. It includes the city of San José. A tract of land was set apart by the Mexican government for the pueblo of San José, to which the present city of San José has succeeded.

The same legislation precisely which is asked in this case was had by Congress in relation to a grant identically like this, in favor of the city of San Francisco, in 1866. What we ask here in favor of the city of San José is precisely the same legislation as was passed by Congress in favor of San Francisco.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let me inquire of the gentleman whether, in the San Francisco case, there were not adverse reports in both branches of Congress? And let me inquire further, if the title has been confirmed by a decree of the proper courts in California, why has not the Land Office issued a patent for this land?

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I rise to a question of order. I am entirely unable to hear a single word that is said about this bill which I am reporting and for which I am at present sponsor.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to make a point of order against the bill, but to waive it until an explanation should be given. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. After the explanation which has been given, I do not insist on the point of order.

Mr. POTTER. Where is this land situated, as regards San Francisco?

Mr. HOUGHTON. It is fifty miles south of San Francisco.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] state a little more particularly the reasons for the passage of this bill than they have been already stated.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I will do so cheerfully, and I think I can convince every member of the House that the bill ought to pass without any opposition at all.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will ask the gentleman why no patent has issued for these lands?

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. There was a difficulty in the way which I do not precisely understand, but I have talked with the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this subject, and he has written to me that there is no objection whatever to the passage of this bill. The necessity for the passage of the bill is simply to secure a legal title to the land in the city of San José. As I said before, by the passage of this bill the United States are not deprived of any right they now hold. This tract of land is about forty leagues in extent; but it is not all held by the city of San José. The greater part of it has already been patented to private individuals, but there was a portion of it which had not been so conveyed at the time of the passage of the act of March 3, 1851, to settle titles to land in the State of California. To the commission created by that act, the mayor and common council of the city of San José made appeal for the confirmation of the title. The commission decided that the right was on their side, and under the act of 1851 the proceeding was certified to the district court of the United States for California. An appeal was taken by the United States to the Supreme Court, and a mandate was issued to the district court of California, under which a decree was entered by that court.

This bill, it will be seen, leaves all this land subject to the deductions, reservations, and limitations contained in the decree of the United States district court. Those deductions and limitations are, first, all tracts of land within this grant specifically mentioned in the decree, and in the next place such other parcels of land as have been by grants from lawful authority vested in private proprietorship and have finally been confirmed to parties claiming under said grants by the tribunals of the United States or shall hereafter be finally confirmed to parties claiming thereunder by said tribunals in proceedings now pending therein for that purpose, all of which said excepted parcels of land are included in whole or in part within the boundaries above mentioned, but are excluded from the confirmation to the mayor and common council of the city of San José. This confirmation is in trust for the benefit of the lot-holders under grants from the pueblo, town, or city of San José or other competent authority, as to any residue in trust for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of the city.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since that confirmation by the Supreme Court of the United States, all of this land has been transferred by the mayor and common council of the city of San José. There may possibly be some very small portion that has not been so transferred. We know of none, and can find none upon examination. As I said before to the House, this bill is carefully guarded, and the only purpose of it is this: to vest in the mayor and common council of the city of San José a legal title against which the statute of limitations of the State of California may begin to run. That is the whole purpose of the bill and all that it can accomplish. It conveys nothing that belongs to the United States. It simply gives a legal title where an equitable title already exists. That is all there is in the bill, and I hope it will be passed at once; and to that end I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN T. SMITH.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 448) for the relief of John T. Smith.

The bill was read. It authorizes the President of the United States to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint, on the retired list of the Navy, with the rank of first assistant engineer, John T. Smith, now second assistant engineer on the active list of the Navy.

Mr. MYERS. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (S. No. 170) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy who were dropped, furloughed, or retired under the act of February 28, 1855.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill provides that all officers now in the Navy, and the widows or heirs of those who have died while attached to the Navy, including the widow of Captain Elisha Peck, retired by special act of March 3, 1873, who were dropped, furloughed, or retired under the act of February 28, 1855, and who were afterward promoted and restored to the active list of the Navy under the operations of the act of January 16, 1857, or by the President under the operation of subsequent laws, shall be entitled to receive the difference between the pay respectively received by them and the pay at that time designated by law for officers on the active list of the rank to which they were respectively promoted, for and during the time they were affected by the operation of the said acts of February 28, 1855, and January 16, 1857.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that bill is subject to a point of order, I desire to make it; but I will withhold it until some explanation is made. The bill is somewhat voluminous, and its effect is not readily seen.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. I ask that the report of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs upon this bill be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred petitions of several officers of the Navy, praying a modification of the act of January 16, 1857, that they may receive the pay of their actual rank, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The petitioners, officers in the United States Navy, were, by the action of a board of naval officers, constituted under the act of February 28, 1855, placed on the retired list, furloughed, or dropped.

That in accordance with the act of January 16, 1857, and the joint resolution of March 10, 1858, authorizing the President to restore certain officers to the active list where the records of courts of inquiry "may render it advisable," these officers were placed on the active list, and were also promoted to date from the day they were placed on the retired list, furloughed, or dropped by the naval board.

The sixth section of the act of January 16, 1857, provides "that all officers who may be restored to active service under the provisions of this act shall be entitled to draw the same pay they were drawing at the time they were retired or dropped, for and during the time of such retirement or suspension from the active service aforesaid."

By the construction given to this section by the accounting officers, these claimants only received the pay to which they were entitled at the time of their retirement, although their commissions on reinstatement to the active list gave them an advanced rank, to date from the time they were retired.

This act and the resolution of March 10, 1858, authorized the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to restore these officers to the position and rank in the Navy which they would have held had they not been retired, furloughed, or dropped, on the report of the naval board or court of inquiry, but by the interpretation of the sixth section above quoted, they were not allowed and have never received the pay of the rank they hold upon restoration to the active list.

The committee have not deemed it necessary to inquire into the justice or injustice done by this naval board, for if a wrong was perpetrated on the officers who were ordered before it for examination, the President, in the exercise of his powers, reviewed the action and corrected the errors, in restoring these officers with the advice and consent of the Senate; and at the same time promoted them to the positions they would have held, respectively, had it not been for the recommendations of the court of inquiry.

The committee have given this matter a most careful examination, and can see no good reason why an officer in either branch of our service should not receive the pay of his proper rank, withheld from the petitioners as before stated, and therefore report the accompanying bill and ask its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCUDDER] how many officers will be affected by this bill?

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. About seventeen.

Mr. HOLMAN. What period of time is covered while these officers were retired, and during which by the provisions of this bill they will receive full compensation?

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. The retirement was in 1855, by a naval retiring board which retired many efficient officers. In 1857, for the purpose of doing justice to these officers, they were replaced. The act replacing them authorized their pay to proceed the same as if they had not been retired; but in the construction of that act their pay was reduced. The purpose of this bill is simply to remedy that injustice.

Mr. HOLMAN. One other question. What sum of money will be taken from the Treasury in carrying out the provisions of this bill?

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. About $20,000.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWAMP LANDS, BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York, from the same committee, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 734) to provide for reclaiming and improving the swamp and overflowed lands connected with the United States navy-yard at Brooklyn, New York; and the same was laid upon the table, and the report, with accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

DWIGHT F. HAYS.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York, from the same committee, also reported adversely upon the petition of Dwight F. Hays, praying to be paid one-half the proceeds of the sales of certain cotton or to be authorized to present his claim to the Court of Claims; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GRACE B. PECK.

Mr. HAYS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 1602 for the relief of Grace B. Peck.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that the act entitled "An act for the relief of Grace B. Peck," approved March 3, 1873, shall be so construed that in making up the difference of pay to be allowed the said Grace B. Peck, she shall receive the duty pay of a captain during the time her late husband was upon duty while upon the retired list as if he had been a captain when he was retired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. KELLOGG. This is exactly like the cases included in the general bill we have just passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then why does not that bill cover it?

Mr. HAYS. The Committee on Naval Affairs have carefully considered this bill, which has been before them for a long time. It would be doing this party great injustice not to pass this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to have the report read.

Mr. HAYS. There is no report accompanying the bill. Captain Peck was put on the retired list, and remained there some time. He was ordered on duty as captain, and this bill is for the purpose of giving his widow the difference between the pay of lieutenant-commander and captain while he was actually on duty.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why does not the general bill just passed apply to this case?

Mr. HAYS. It does not affect this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. KELLOGG. The phraseology of the Senate bill just passed is so peculiar that it is doubtful whether it will apply to this case. This is the only other case of that class of cases. The phraseology of the Senate bill is this: "who were afterward promoted and restored to the active list of the Navy." Every case is covered by that clause except that of Captain Peck. He was not "afterward promoted and restored to the active list of the Navy;" he was only restored, not promoted. This case of Mrs. Peck stands upon precisely the same ground as all the other cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. The very ground upon which this bill stands is that these officers were restored and promoted.

Mr. KELLOGG. He was restored, but not promoted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should have been a report accompanying a bill like this.

The SPEAKER. The bill can be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs for a report.

Mr. HAYS. I make the motion to recommit the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. As the morning hour has expired, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUSK. I hope that the committees will be called through before that motion is agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired. This is objection day; and the gentleman from Illinois desires the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. There is much more business on that Calendar than can possibly be disposed of to-day.

Mr. LAMISON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired five minutes since.

Mr. LAMISON. I have a bill which I desire to report.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Cannot the House limit debate in Committee of the Whole to the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. This is objection day; and there can be no debate in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar without unanimous consent.

Mr. RUSK and Mr. LAMISON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] yield?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I do not.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, there were—ayes 69, noes 39; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, and Mr. RUSK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 87, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 4119) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant a patent for certain land in the Territory of Arizona; and

An act (H. R. No. 4163) to provide an appropriation for continuing the construction of the post-office and custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, (Mr. POTTER in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

LANDS, ETC., IN CALIFORNIA.

The first bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1718) relating to the equitable and legal rights of parties in possession of certain lands and improvements thereon in California, and to provide jurisdiction to determine those rights.

The bill was read.

Mr. COBURN. I object.

EUGENE JACOBS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3158) for the relief of Eugene Jacobs, United States consul at Montevideo.

The bill was read. It provides, as amended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that $750 be paid to Eugene Jacobs, United States consul at Montevideo, in full compensation for taking charge of and preserving the archives of the United States legation at Montevideo, from the 17th day of May, 1873, until the 1st day of January, 1874.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of E. Jacobs, United States consul at Montevideo, praying an allowance to be made him of $750 for expenses incurred in performing diplomatic duties at Montevideo in the absence of United States minister, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

Mr. E. Jacobs, the petitioner, was appointed consul at Montevideo, in the republic of Uruguay, in February, 1873, and arrived at his post of duty about the middle of May in the same year.

The salary of consul at Montevideo is $1,000 a year.

When Mr. Jacobs arrived at Montevideo he found the United States minister, Hon. John L. Stephens, absent.

The archives of the legation were committed to the care of Mr. Jacobs, without authority being given him to act as chargé d'affaires.

Mr. Jacobs being the only official representative of the United States at Montevideo, the entire business of the United States legation had to be performed by him, creating the necessity, among other expenses, of his employing a clerk.

Mr. Jacobs seems to have performed all these duties with fidelity, and in a manner satisfactory to our State Department, and in the performance of these duties was put to the additional and extra expense of $750. In addition to the performance of these extra duties, Mr. Jacobs more than doubled the fees of his consulate. The fees for that consulate for the year ending June 30, 1873, were $884.44; while the fees collected by Mr. Jacobs for two quarters ending December 31, 1873, amount to over $1,100, being at the rate of over $2,200 per annum; "this, too, in a time of greater depression of business than has been known before for many years."

Taking all these facts into consideration, also the high character of Mr. Jacobs, your committee recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3158) for his relief as amended.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

RICHARD HAWLEY & SONS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2279) for the relief of Richard Hawley & Sons.

The bill was read. It provides, as amended by the Committee on Ways and Means, that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to refund to Richard Hawley & Sons, of Detroit, Michigan, $615.84, collected of them as duty on malt in excess of the amount authorized by law.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2279) for the relief of Richard Hawley & Sons, respectfully report as follows:

The facts as shown to the committee are as follows: Richard Hawley & Sons, of Detroit, imported from Canada, in July, 1870, three successive lots of malt, amounting in all to sixty-four hundred and fifteen bushels. An excise tax of one cent per pound was imposed in Canada on all malt consumed in that country, but was not imposed on malt for exportation, and did not in fact enter into the price of malt so sold in bond to buyers for the market in the United States. It is shown that the entry in this case was made at the Detroit custom-house, at the true market price paid in Canada. But it was claimed by the customs officers, according to the decision of the precise question previously made by the Secretary of the Treasury, that the excise tax must be added to the market price of malt in bond, and the duty must be collected also on this excise tax, which had never in fact been either demanded or paid. This tax added to the actual cost the sum of forty-eight cents per bushel, in the total $3,079.20, on which the duty was exacted at the rate of 20 per cent., equal to $615.84.

Hawley & Sons paid it, verbally protesting against it, and declared their intention to appeal to the Department against the exaction. They were told by the collecting officer that of course this was their right, but that the Department would undoubtedly reaffirm its decision which had already been made. He then read to them the decision which had been made by the Secretary.

So the business was left for the time. This was in July, 1870. Toward the close of that year Judge Drummond, of the United States court in Chicago, gave a decision on the identical question, then pending in that court, annulling the ruling of the Secretary, and in favor of the importer's claim, deciding that the market price for exportation gave the dutiable value. The Secretary of the Treasury thereafter recognized that decision, and refunded all duties which had been paid under and following the protest and appeal by the importer. But he did not refund the excessive duties paid by this importer, because of his failure to bring up his case regularly on appeal, not deeming himself authorized to recognize the special equities in this case in the absence of the forma' documents.

The committee regard the special facts above recited, and which are fully certified by the collecting officer, as bringing him within the spirit of the remedial statute, and entitling him to relief. They agree perfectly to the rule established by the court, and are of opinion that the United States should return the money so paid into the Treasury in excess of the requirments of law, and report back a bill to accomplish that object.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Ways and Means was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

JOHN N. REED.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3268) for the relief of John N. Reed.

The bill was read. It appropriates $4,978.28 to pay John N. Reed for material delivered, labor, time, and demurrages upon the contract of Reed, Pitt & McPherson, approved by the Secretary of War on the 3d day of September, 1860, and assigned to Reed. This payment is to be in full discharge of all claim against the United States in any manner arising upon or by reason of the contract or for any nonfulfillment thereof.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 707) for the relief of John N. Reed, beg leave to report—

That on the 14th day of July, 1860, the said John N. Reed, together with Alexander Pitt and W. McPherson, entered into a contract with the United States, by their agent, Lieutenant W. H. Stevens, to furnish at the wharf at the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay, one hundred thousand cubic feet of fine shells, one hundred thousand cubic feet of clear clam or cockle-shells, and ten thousand cubic feet of clear, sharp sand, * * * the whole amount delivered not to be less than forty thousand cubic feet of each kind of shell and ten thousand cubic feet of sand per month. The price of fine shells to be two and a half cents per cubic foot, six and one-quarter cents per cubic foot for clam or cockle-shells, and eight and three-quarter cents per cubic foot for sand. And by the contract the United States agreed to receive the shells and sand at the rail of the vessel along side the wharf on the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay.

Upon a call of the committee the Secretary of War reported that this contract was duly approved by the then Secretary of War on the 3d day of September, 1860; and upon a like call upon the Secretary of the Treasury he reports that Lieutenant W. H. Stevens, United States Engineers, who was engaged in building the fort at Galveston, paid the contractors upon said contract on the 4th day of October, 1860, the sum of $2,040. There is proof made by the clerk and subalterns of Lieutenant Stevens that the United States received from the contractors 52,214 feet of shell:

52,214 feet, at 2½ cents per foot	$1,305 35
14,684 feet cockle-shell, at 6½ cents per foot	954 46
15,926 feet mixed, (half fine and half cockle,) at 4 6-8 cents, which at contract price is equal to	696 76
14,567 feet sharp sand, at 8¾ cents per foot	1,274 68
	4,231 25
These deliveries are proved by the receipts of the officers. If we deduct the payments by the Secretary of the Treasury	2,040 00
There remains a balance due for actual delivery	2,191 25

But the same officers prove that the Government was not prepared to receive the shell at a wharf at the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay, as stipulated by the contract, and consequently the agents could not receive the articles at the rail of the vessel, but, on the contrary, these agents employed the hands of the contractors for a time, equal to one hundred and thirty-eight days of labor, at $1.50 per day, to wheel off the shell and sand from the vessels to the fort, thus making a just charge of $237. The same officers also certify that the steamer San Antonio and the two schooners Dinslow and Jane were detained seventeen days because the United States were not ready to receive the articles at the rail of the vessel, as stipulated in the contract; and for this demurrage the petitioner charges $2,550, which, under the circumstances, seems to be a just charge.

Add therefore the balance for material actually delivered	$2,191 25
Labor of the petitioner's hands while employed by the United States	237 00
Demurrage for detention of the vessels	2,550 00
Makes a balance	4,978 25

Your committee believe that this whole sum should be allowed to John N. Reed, to whom the whole contract has been assigned.

The claimant insists that owing to the failure to construct a wharf, and the consequent detention of his vessels, and the fact that the United States failed to comply with the contract, after the contractors had purchased a steamer, schooners, and barges for compliance on their part, they are entitled to the whole benefit of the contract, which would give the claimant $9,625, besides the labor of his hands and demurrage of his vessels. The contract was not complied with in consequence of the secession of Texas and the civil war which followed; and while it is true that the claimant lost his vessels, which were seized by the confederate authorities, and was deprived of the further benefit of his contract, the Government cannot be responsible for these casualties.

The committee may add that it was in proof that the claimant, John N. Reed, remained loyal to the United States, and immediately after the close of the war he was appointed one of the deputy collectors of internal revenue in the district of his residence in Texas.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

AUGUSTUS SPRAGUE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1914) for the relief of Augustus Sprague, late a private of Company B, Second Michigan Volunteers.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money appropriated, or hereafter to be appropriated, for the payment of the Army, to Augustus Sprague, late a private of Company B, Second Regiment of Michigan Volunteers, $756, with interest from November 7, 1864, it being the amount by him paid on the date aforesaid to relieve himself as a drafted soldier, to which draft he was not liable by reason of physical disability then existing.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1914) for the relief of Augustus Sprague, late a private of Company B, Second Michigan Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, ask leave to report:

That said Sprague enlisted as a private in Company B, Second Michigan Volunteers, May 24, 1861, and was discharged by reason of surgeon's certificate of disability October 18, 1862, at Washington City, District of Columbia.

On the 24th of October, 1862, he entered the service of the Government in the capacity of nurse, and while acting in that capacity, in said city of Washington, in 1863, was enrolled and drafted, but alleging some disability by reason of which he had been previously discharged he was exempted by order of the Secretary of War in consequence thereof. On the 26th day of October, A. D. 1864, he was again drafted at Washington City aforesaid, and was examined and accepted by the examining surgeon, and thereupon furnished, at the cost of $756, a substitute, who was regularly mustered into the service of the United States. He, said Sprague, alleges that at the time he was drafted and furnished a substitute as aforesaid the disability which resulted in his discharge from the military service still existed, and your committee believe this may be true; but said Sprague having been regularly examined and accepted by the proper officers, your committee deem it unwise and unjust to open that question to investigation by Congress. They therefore report adversely upon said bill, and recommend that it be rejected.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be laid on the table.

A. L. H. CRENSHAW.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3269) for the relief of A. L. H. Crenshaw, of Jackson County, Missouri.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. As I think this bill had better go over for examination, I object.

A. H. VON LUETTWITZ.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3270) to amend an Army officer's record.

The bill was read.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object to this bill, as one precisely the same in substance has been passed by both Houses of Congress and is now a law.

MARY CONLY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3118) for the relief of Mary Conly, late widow of R. H. Murrell, late an officer in the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mary Conly, late widow of R. H. Murrell, late acting commissary of the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry, the pay of a regimental commissary from the 15th day of September, 1863, to the 26th day of December, 1863, deducting any allowances that Murrell may have received during his term of service.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the case of Mary Conly, late widow of R. H. Murrell, late acting commissary of the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry, submit the following report:

The committee find the following facts: That the said R. H. Murrell was appointed by the colonel of the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry commissary of that regiment; that the regiment was recruited in the lines of the enemy, and that no rolls were made out up to the death of the said R. H. Murrell; that he never was mustered into the service, but that he did perform all the duties of commissary of the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry, and that he did contract the disease of which he died in the earnest performance of his duties in the service of the country, and under the peculiar circumstances of the case the committee recommend the allowance of the relief asked for, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

STEPHEN M. HONEYCUTT.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3271) for the relief of Stephen M. Honeycutt.

The bill was read. It directs the Paymaster-General of the Army of the United States, out of any money in his hands for the payment of the Army, to pay to Stephen M. Honeycutt an amount equal to the pay and allowances of a private soldier from the 25th day of March, 1864, until the 8th day of August, 1865.

The report was read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Stephen M. Honeycutt, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence submitted to the committee that petitioner enlisted in Company E, Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry, as a private, on the 25th day of March, 1864, but was not mustered into the service, owing to there being no mustering officer present, and that on the 20th of September, 1864, he was detailed on recruiting service; that he went into western North Carolina and recruited a large number of troops for the United States Army, and that while so engaged in recruiting, under the orders of a United States officer, he was captured by the enemy.

The committee, being satisfied that the petitioner rendered valuable service, and the fact of his not being mustered into the service being no fault of his, believe that he should not be refused his compensation as a private soldier. They therefore report the accompanying bill, and recommend that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

JOHN T. BURCHELL, KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3272) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered in a small-pox hospital.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Paymaster-General of the Army of the United States, out of any money in his hands for the payment of the Army, is authorized and directed to pay to John T. Burchell the sum of $135, the balance due him for services rendered at the small-pox hospital at Knoxville, Tennessee, from December 10, 1863, to January 12, 1864.

The report was read. It appears from the testimony that claimant was, on or about the 10th day of December, 1863, in the employ of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, at Knoxville, Tennessee, and at the request of Dr. E. Goetz, United States Army, he abandoned his employment to take charge of a small-pox hospital, and rendered service therein for one month and two days. Claimant alleges that Dr. Jackson, medical director Twenty-third Army Corps, agreed to pay him at the rate of $150 per month; and it appears that the only compensation he received for the service was $25, paid him by Quartermaster-Captain Lunt.

The committee are of the opinion that the amount of $150 per month was not an unreasonable compensation for the character of the services rendered, and therefore report the accompanying bill, and recommend that it pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

NICHOLAS JOSÉ MERRIMET.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3526) for the restoration of the property of Nicholas José Merrimet.

The bill, which was read, provides that in lieu of the schooner Amelia Ann, taken for the use of the United States without right and which cannot be returned, there be allowed and paid to Nicholas José Merrimet the value of said schooner and for damages for taking the same the sum of $1,800; and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report was read. It appears that the petitioner was a captain and owner of the schooner Amelia Ann on the 15th day of December, 1863, on a trading-voyage from Havana to Matamoras, and that he was captured while approaching the port of his destination by the United States armed steamer Granite City, commanded by one Charles W. Lawson, an officer in the Navy of the United States, duly commissioned in that behalf; that the cargo of said Amelia Ann was sent into New Orleans for adjudication, but the vessel was not sent in, but retained for the use of the Government of the United States upon that station; that on the 25th of June, 1867, upon a libel duly heard and determined, a copy of the record of which is produced by the petitioner, it was determined that there was nothing whatever in the evidence or in the papers found on board that could be held in the slightest degree to justify the capture, but that there was evidence in the case that the schooner had been made use of by the United States authorities as a lighter; and it was therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed by said court that said vessel and cargo be restored to claimant with costs and damages. Thereupon the cargo was duly delivered to the owner, but the schooner was never returned by the authorities of the United States, leaving the petitioner without any remedy, although he has made every endeavor to recover his property and damages for the taking from the officer then in command of the steamer. And it appears that said Lawson, the officer, is insolvent and not in the country.

It further appears, upon application to the Navy Department, that there is no evidence to controvert the above-stated facts; that thereupon Merrimet brought his loss to the attention of the representative of the Grecian government, whose subject he is, who represented the same to the Department of State, and that no action had been taken by the State Department, nor was there anything in the archives of that Department showing why this claim should not be allowed, which it cannot be without an appropriation by Congress.

Your committee further find that these facts were presented to the Forty-second Congress, and that a bill was reported by the Committee on Claims which passed the House of Representatives, but that the same did not pass the Senate. Believing that this claim is entirely just and exceedingly moderate in its demand, as the whole value of the schooner claimed is only $1,450, and the petitioner claims $3,000 altogether, yet as part of that claim is consequential damages which cannot in this form be allowed by one government to a citizen of another, they recommend that the sum of $1,800 be allowed, and have reported the accompanying bill therefor.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is that bill for the relief of an alien?

Mr. HALE, of New York. It has the adjudication of the court in its favor.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

NICHOLAS FOUQUÉ AND MARC ANTOINE FOUQUÉ.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2860) for the relief of the heirs of Nicholas Fouqué and Marc Antoine Fouqué.

Subsequently the following occurred:

Mr. HALE, of New York. I understand this merely refers to the Court of Claims a claim already established of record. As I did not apprehend at the time the scope of the bill, I now withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is an old claim, and I think there ought to be a statute of limitation on cases one hundred years old. I object to the bill.

MRS. MARY J. ORR.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1456) for the relief of Mrs. Mary J. Orr, widow of Hon. James L. Orr, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia, reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs with the recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELLA P. MURPHY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3596) for the relief of Mrs. Ella P. Murphy, widow of Patrick Murphy, deceased.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object to that. We cannot afford to pay for all the Indian depredations.

HENRY WARREN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3597) for the relief of Henry Warren.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I object.

WILLIAM J. COITE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of William J. Coite.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to William J. Coite, late acting assistant paymaster, United States Navy, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $953.33; the same being the amount falsely returned by the clerk of said Coite, when the same was unable, through sickness, to supervise his final accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

The claimant entered the United States naval service June 12, 1862, and was honorably discharged November 7, 1865. In the final adjustment of his accounts with the Treasury Department there was found to be a deficit of $953.33. As to this amount, the claimant in his petition says:

"That amount ($953.33) I could not comprehend; but at the time I gave it no serious thought or attention, having in my mind the intention of going to Washington as soon as my business would permit, and intending, when there, of inquiring into the matter; all the more deferring the inquiry, as I supposed the item some error, or caused by the absence of some voucher which I could easily replace, and knowing that the matter, if found to be in my favor, would be as readily rectified as ever at a later period. I had no opportunity to go to Washington until on or about the 15th of December, 1872, at which time I went to the office of the Fourth Auditor, and made due inquiry as to the item of $953.33 in my account. I then ascertained that the same was composed of only two amounts, credited in the account current, as follows:

Cash paid officers and crew in specie	$483 75
Prize-money paid to E. Eldridge, engineer	469 58
	953 33

"No vouchers for these amounts had been filed, nor did any mode of accounting for the alleged discrepancy occur to me until I recognized the handwriting of the account current to be that of a clerk in whom I had had the most implicit confidence.

"The writing in the pay-rolls is my own. I remember that this account current was the very last work which this clerk had done for me, and my cash balances, being precisely the amounts called for by this account current, were remitted by me to the Department according to that statement."

This last act of the clerk was performed when Coite was confined to his bed by sickness, caused by a relapse from the yellow fever, which he had while on duty. And it was done in obedience to an order from the Treasury Department. No one could then make it out but this clerk.

The making out of this account current gave him an opportunity to conceal and cover up thefts which he must have committed, and of which the claimant had no suspicion till December, 1872.

Your committee would state that the claimant was furnished with a clerk, Henry S. Beedle, detailed from the enlisted men on the boat on which he did service. The clerk was not required to give any bond to the Government or to Mr. Coite, as will appear by the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 5, 1874.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry, you are informed that the Department is not aware of any law under which clerks of disbursing officers of the Navy have at any time been required to give bond for the faithful performance of their duty.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. MARK H. DUNNELL,
House of Representatives.

During the service of this clerk, and near at the close of it, false entries were made in the account current, as already stated, covering items which had already been charged or entered on the pay-rolls. These double credits were not discovered by the Treasury Department or Mr. Coite till many months after he had been discharged. At the final settlement of his accounts Mr. Coite was called upon to pay into the Treasury the sum of $2,221.75. This amount he paid, and the books were settled. Afterward it was ascertained that the two items, amounting to the sum asked for, had, as stated, been placed both on the pay-rolls and also on the account current, so placed at the time as wholly to escape detection.

The claimant further makes the following statement: "The original rolls of the steamer Magnolia contained the names and accounts of eight officers and one hundred and ten men. From May 5, 1863, they were increased by the addition of the names and accounts of thirty-eight officers and three hundred and ninety-three men, making a grand total of five hundred and forty-nine accounts, all of which were extras as to pay, subsistence, &c., and were accumulated in a period of about four months from May 5, 1863. Additional to the above, extra duties, as acting in the place of the fleet paymaster until the arrival of the regularly ordered fleet paymaster, a period of about four months, were performed by order of Rear-Admiral T. Bailey, and the responsibility and work of my position were incalculably increased. The extra work had hitherto been and was thereafter performed by a regularly appointed paymaster for the purpose, whose salary was $3,000 per annum. My pay at the time was $1,200 per annum. I performed all these duties cheerfully, promptly, and satisfactorily, and I have not demanded or received any extra compensation or difference in pay for the service."

Your committee, in view of the manner in which the clerk was appointed, in view of the fact of the sickness of the claimant at the time the false entries were made and therefore without any fault or neglect of Coite, and also in consideration of the fact that he did extra service, which was a saving to the Government of an amount equal to about two-thirds of the amount claimed, report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE CHORPENNING.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3533) to remit the claims of George Chorpenning against the United States to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.

Mr. DAWES. I object.

SARAH MORRISON.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3733) for the relief of Sarah Morrison, administratrix of the estate of Christian B. Morrison, deceased.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that requires further explanation, and I object.

WILL R. HERVEY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3734) for the relief of Will R. Hervey.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object.

MONTRAVILLE PATTON, BUNCOMBE COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bil (H. R. No. 1628) for the relief of Montraville Patton, of Buncombe County, North Carolina.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Quartermaster-General be, and he is hereby, instructed to pay Montraville Patton, of Buncombe County, North Carolina, the sum of $130 for supplies furnished the Army in the year 1866, as appears from proofs on file.

The report was read, as follows:

The petition of the claimant, sworn to, is as follows:

"Montraville Patton, of the county of Buncombe, and State of North Carolina, swears that in the year 1865, about the 18th of November, Captain Overturff, of the Federal Army, was stationed at Asheville with troops, and that he bought of me first about seventeen hundred pounds of hay, for which Captain Overturff gave me a voucher, which was paid; and that Captain Overturff was so pleased that he bought of me thirteen thousand pounds of hay at one dollar per hundred pounds; and that Captain Overturff fed the hay to the horses belonging to his company; and Captain Overturff therefore gave him a receipt for the hay, and said when he left Asheville that he would send me a 'voucher from Salisbury for the hay,' but he never did, and if he did, I never received it, and I have never been paid for the thirteen thousand pounds of hay which was sold to Captain Overturff. I held the receipt of Captain Overturff until about two years ago, when I sent it to Colonel Harper, a member of Congress from my district, and he informed me that he offered a resolution to pay me for the hay and it was referred to the Committee on Claims, and that the receipt was filed with the resolution. What has become of it I know not."

Your committee communicated with Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, and the Quartermaster-General replied that if the memorandum receipt stated to have been filed with the Committee on Claims, House of Representatives, could be found and proved genuine, it would be good evidence that the hay was furnished to and used by the United States Army. "The within evidence appears to establish the fact that a receipt was given for the property." The "within evidence" is the sworn statement. Mr. Harper, the ex-member of Congress above referred to, testifies under oath as follows:

"That during the second session of said Congress he presented a bill for the relief of Montraville Patton, of Buncombe County, North Carolina, which bill was referred to the Committee on Claims. That said bill provided for the payment to said Patton of the sum of $130 in full of thirteen thousand pounds of hay, bought by one Captain Joseph E. Overturff from said Patton, in the month of October, 1865, the said Captain Overturff giving a receipt for the same in the usual printed form, and payment was refused by the Government on the ground that, under some regulation or decision of one of the Departments, the war was not at an end (legally) until some time after the date of the said receipt, and in that case (proof of loyalty being required) the said Patton could not collect.

"The said receipt of Captain Overturff, together with an attached certificate from the Second Auditor's Office of the Treasury Department as to the genuineness of the signature of the said Overturff, were filed with said bill for the use of the committee. The said Harper attended meetings of the Committee on Claims on several occasions, but failed to procure any action on said bill; and just before the close of the last session of said Congress he called on the clerk of the committee to procure the receipt in order to return it to Mr. Patton, and on search being made the receipt could not be found, the said Harper having no knowledge whatever as to the cause of the loss of the same."

Your committee report back the bill with the recommendation that the same be passed.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GUSTAVUS F. JOCKNICK.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1515) for the relief of Gustavus F. Jocknick.

The bill, which was read, provides that the sum of $1,717.44 be, and the same is thereby, appropriated to reimburse Gustavus F. Jocknick for expenses incurred by him in defending a prosecution against him in the United States district court for the western district of North Carolina, for an alleged offense committed by him while in the discharge of his duties as an officer of the Government.

The report was read, as follows:

In May, 1869, Silas H. Swetland was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to make payment of certain moneys to the Eastern Cherokees in North Carolina; and, at the same time, the Secretary directed the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to detail a clerk of the Department to witness the payments; the detail to be made "with particular reference to personal integrity and tried experience as an accountant, as also his qualifications to judge of the evidence filed in support of the claim of legal representatives," &c.

Mr. Jocknick, being a clerk in the Department, was selected by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and detailed to accompany Swetland and witness the payments. He did not seek this duty, nor was he consulted as to his wishes in the matter.

The payments were made, so far as Swetland had funds in his hands to make them; and all the payments made were witnessed by Mr. Jocknick.

Long afterward, and about the 29th day of March, 1873, Mr. Jocknick was arrested at his desk in the Department of the Interior, upon the charge, preferred against him in the United States circuit court for the western district of North Carolina, of conspiracy to defraud the Eastern Cherokee Indians. This was the first intimation he had that his actions were not fully approved, both by the Indians and the Department.

At the May term, 1873, of the circuit court, held at Asheville, Mr. Jocknick appeared with his witnesses and counsel. When the case was called, the United States attorney moved the court to enter a nolle prosequi as to Mr. Jocknick; whereupon the following proceedings were had:

In the circuit court of the United States in and for the western district of North Carolina.

UNITED STATES
S. H. SWETLAND et al.

The above criminal action having come on to be tried before this court at the May term, 1873, thereof, holden at Asheville, in the county of Buncombe, and the State of North Carolina, and a motion having been made by the district attorney on behalf of the United States to enter a nolle prosequi and dismiss the indictment against the defendant, the said Gustavus F. Jocknick; and the court, Hon. Robert P. Dick presiding, having directed a suspension of the entry of a nolle prosequi as to the said defendant until the evidence on his behalf should be heard by the court; and the evidence on his behalf having been offered, heard, and considered by the court:

It is considered by the court that the district attorney have leave to enter a nolle prosequi in the action as to the said Gustavus F. Jocknick; that the action of the said district attorney in so doing is proper, and approved.

It is further considered by the court that the evidence offered on behalf of the said Gustavus F. Jocknick fully exculpates him from the charges contained in the indictment against him.

ROBERT P. DICK,
United States District Judge.

MAY 15, 1873.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western District of North Carolina:

I, E. R. Hampton, clerk of the United States circuit court for the western district of North Carolina, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the order made by his honor Judge Dick, who was at that time the presiding judge of the said circuit court, in the case of Gustavus E. Jocknick, and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said court, at office in Asheville, on this 16th day of May, A. D. 1873, and in the ninety-seventh year of the American Independence.

[SEAL OF THE COURT.] E. R. HAMPTON,
Clerk United States Circuit Court, Western District of North Carolina.

The Hon. Robert P. Dick, holding the circuit court at Asheville, also certified in regard to the attendance of witnesses as follows:

In the circuit court of the United States in and for the western district of North Carolina.

S. H. SWETLAND et al.

I, Robert P. Dick, judge of the district and circuit courts of the United States in and for the western district of North Carolina, hereby certify that it appeared to me in evidence in open court that Major C. A. Earnest, United States Army, Alexander Johnston, and Henry R. Clum were produced as witnesses before this court at the May term, 1873, thereof, at Asheville, on behalf of the defendant, Gustavus F. Jocknick; that subpœnas, under seal of this court, were issued to procure the attendance of said witnesses, under which they were produced; that said first-named witness came from Omaha, Nebraska, and said other witnesses came from Washington, District of Columbia; that an affidavit of said defendant has been filed in this court, declaring his inability to pay the expense of such attendance of such witnesses, but that the same was not filed until after the issuing of said subpœnas, and that consequently an order of this court directing their payment by the United States marshal cannot be made; but, in my judgment, such expenses ought to be paid and reimbursed to the defendant by the Government, and especially under the circumstances of his complete exculpation from the charges brought against him, after hearing by the court, and on motion of the district attorney on behalf of the United States.

It also appeared in open court that said witnesses were very material for the defense.

Dated the 15th day of May, 1873.

ROBERT P. DICK,
United States District Judge.

After his return to Washington, Mr. Jocknick made application to be reimbursed the expenses incurred by him in defending this prosecution, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and board of Indian commissioners recommended payment; but the Comptroller of the Treasury decided that there was no appropriation out of which it could be paid, and that its payment was not authorized by existing laws.

The expenses incurred by Mr. Jocknick in this case, according to vouchers placed in the hands of your committee, amount to the sum of $1,717.44.

Your committee regard this as a peculiar case of hardship on Mr. Jocknick, and recommend the passage of an act for his relief.

It may be proper to say that after his arrest he was suspended from his clerkship in the Department of the Interior, but after his exculpation he was reinstated, and has the full confidence of the Department.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ANNA W. OSBORNE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3735) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Anna W. Osborne the sum of $600, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being the amount of personal property belonging to her and to John W. Osborne, her late husband, of the United States Army, destroyed by fire at the destruction of post hospital at Fort Ripley, Minnesota, July 21, 1870.

The report was read, as follows:

The petition of the claimant is as follows:

My late husband, John W. Osborne, a native of Belfast, Maine, enlisted in the Thirty-sixth Regiment of Massachusetts Infantry on or about June 19, 1862, and was honorably discharged as sergeant Company E, June 19, 1865, at Louisville, Kentucky.

He there re-enlisted on June 22, 1865, and was promoted to hospital steward, United States Army, and was on duty at the Surgeon-General's Office in this city until about the 1st of September, 1866, when he was ordered to Saint Paul, Minnesota, and remained there on duty until June 22, 1868, when he was honorably discharged the second time, having served six years in succession.

He again re-enlisted as hospital steward, United States Army, (I cannot now give the date,) was ordered on duty at Fort Ripley, Morrison County, Minnesota, in April, 1869, and there remained on duty until October 28, 1870, the date of his death, which was accidental, and occurred in this wise: Albert A. Osborne (his brother) and himself were practicing shooting at the target at the above-named fort, one of them remaining in the rifle-pit while the other fired his three shots. His brother had once fired, and for some cause considerable time elapsed before firing the second shot. As he discharged the rifle the second time, John W. Osborne rose from the pit just in time to receive the contents of the piece, which penetrated his neck, severing the jugular vein, and he lived but a few moments, leaving me with two small children, the eldest only three years of age. Another child was born to me on June 1, 1871.

On June 10, 1869, my late husband purchased improvements on homestead, the same being the south half of northeast quarter and west half of southeast quarter section 20, township 130, range 29, State of Minnesota; it being near the fort, we made it our residence until the date of his death. I remained thereupon until about the 20th December, 1870, when I left there and came to Washington, District of Columbia, my native place, it being impossible for me to remain there under the circumstances.

After the birth of my third child, and before I was able to return to my homestead, the six months' limit had expired, and I lost the title, all that was left me, as I was totally unable to commute the said homestead.

I am informed by the officers of the Pension Bureau that "I have no legal claim to a pension, (as the pension law now exists,) as my late husband was not in the actual performance of his duty when he lost his life." Yet, he was not excused from duty at the time, was simply practicing shooting at a target, as was customary at the fort. I therefore pray that the above petition may be favorably considered by your honorable body.

Very respectfully,

MRS. ANNA W. OSBORNE,
Widow of John W. Osborne, deceased.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1874.

The claimant makes the following further affidavit:

My late husband, John W. Osborne, was at that time hospital steward, United States Army, stationed at said fort. Shortly after the date of the fire he presented a claim for loss by fire to Hon. HENRY WILSON, then United States Senator, requesting said Senator to interest himself in his behalf, and giving a complete list of property destroyed belonging to said John W. Osborne and family, authenticated by the certificate of four officers stationed at that time at Fort Ripley, namely: Colonel Mason, Lieutenants Weaver and Hamlin, and Surgeon Charles K. Winnie.

Said petition, I am informed, has been either lost or mislaid.

The following is the list of articles belonging to my late husband and myself, destroyed by said fire, so far as I can at this late day call to mind, to wit: six ladies' suits, three gentlemen's suits of clothing; jewelry, library, pictures, crockery-ware, &c.

The value of private property so destroyed was estimated in the original petition at $800, to the best of my recollection.

I therefore humbly pray that you will grant the above petition.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ANNA W. OSBORNE.

Subscribed and sworn before me, at the city of Washington, District of Columbia, this 4th day of April, 1874.

THOMAS C. CONNOLLY,
Notary Public.

The above-declared military record of John W. Osborne is confirmed by evidence from the Surgeon-General's Office and also from the Adjutant-General's Office.

An extract from a letter from the Surgeon-General, dated February 25, 1874, is as follows:

"The post hospital at Fort Ripley, Minnesota, was destroyed by fire at 2.30 a. m., July 21, 1870, and all the hospital property, save a few articles of bedding and the hospital records, were consumed."

Your committee recommend that, in view of all the facts in the case, justice demands some compensation, and report a bill giving to the claimant the sum of $600.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is an omission in the report, on the first page, and hence the seeming incongruity of some of the later sentences in the report. While this man was in charge of the hospital at Fort Ripley, it was burned, and while saving the patients in the hospital he lost his own private property. His widow, who has three small children depending upon her, cannot draw a pension.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM A. GRIFFIN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 597) for the relief of William A. Griffin.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William A. Griffin, late superintendent of the national cemetery at Andersonville, in the State of Georgia, the sum of $2,325, in full discharge for all claims and demands whatsoever for labor done and damages sustained by him in and about said cemetery.

The report was read, as follows:

The petitioner is a loyal citizen of Tennessee. Immediately after the rebel forces left Andersonville he was informed by some negroes that the swine were uprooting the remains of the Union soldiers and destroying all traces of their graves. He at once visited and examined the grounds, ascertaining that something must be done forthwith to prevent the loss of all traces of identity. He voluntarily took charge of the grounds, secured help, covered up the exposed bodies, placed a guard over them, and personally reported the facts to Major-General Wilson, at Macon, Georgia, then in command of that district. He began operations on the 24th of May, 1865, and reported the facts to General Wilson about the 1st of June. At that time the grounds were unfenced, many of the head-boards were removed from their places, the bones and bodies were being exposed by the washings of rain and the action of swine, and the appearances were very offensive and disagreeable. The people of the neighborhood were opposed to having anything done for the protection or honor of the remains of Union soldiers, or "Yankee bones," as they termed them.

General Wilson gave him verbal orders to take charge of the work, fence the grounds, put the graves in good condition, and do all in his power to preserve their identity. For this purpose General Wilson directed him to provide the requisite number of men and teams and amount of materials, assuring him that the Government would reimburse him for all his expenditures. Upon that assurance he commenced the work, employing from twenty to fifty men and twelve mules constantly, increasing or lessening the number from time to time, as required, until July 25, 1865, and furnished most of the required provisions for their subsistence and forage.

On the 25th July, 1865, Captain (now Brigadier-General) J. M. Moore, assistant quartermaster, arrived at Andersonville and assumed general charge of the place, approved all that had been done by the petitioner, and appointed him superintendent of the cemetery, which appointment was subsequently confirmed by the Quartermaster-General, to date from June 1, 1865.

The petitioner schedules his losses and expenditures thus:

Nine mules died of glanders	$ 1,800 00
Thirteen mules stolen	2,600 00
Five mules taken by Captain M. M. Rankin	1,000 00
Tools and nails	625 00
Cash for subsistence of men six weeks	200 00
Cash for railroad transportation of self and materials	175 00
Cash paid men for labor	325 00
	6,725 00

In explanation of this account, the petitioner sets forth in the petition, in reference to the disease called "glanders:" "There was no such disease in or around this locality until brought there by Army horses. It spread to all the mules in use, which were well and sound until this time;" and in reference to property being stolen, he says: "When not in use the mules were under the protection of the military guard, and were stolen either by the lawless soldiers or the rebels around, who sought every opportunity to oppress your petitioner." "In December, 1865, your petitioner was accused by one H. B. Weldon, verbally, of malfeasance, was removed, and was compelled to leave all his personal property, mules, tools, &c.; that after an examination by the Quartermaster-General he was restored to his position, but his property had passed into the hands of the military."

The petitioner further shows, that to procure or pay for portions of this lost property, he was obliged to encumber his property in Tennessee, and in consequence of not being reimbursed by the Government, he has lost said property, making to him a loss in the aggregate of not less than $15,000. He alleges that he has never received any property in lieu of that lost, nor any compensation therefor.

In consideration of service and expenditures of a peculiar interest to thousands of families in the land, performed at a time when it was dangerous to show attention to the remains of Union soldiers, the petitioner asks such relief as Congress may think proper. He swears that all statements in his petition are true.

The proofs other than his own oath consist of a printed report of Miss Clara Barton, of her visit to Andersonville in July, 1865, in which she mentions finding him at work there, with men and mules, doing good work, and extols him as a self-sacrificing and energetic volunteer in a good cause, pronouncing hearty encomiums upon him, &c., &c. Also the statement of one John Alexander, of Fort Valley, Georgia, who represents himself as one of the workmen under Griffin, in which is set forth many of the facts alleged in the petition, detailing the difficulties of the situation, the loss of the animals, and the supplying of tools, materials, and provisions by the petitioner in a graphic manner. This statement is very full and minute. It is not sworn, but appears to be attested by a justice of the peace, who says: "We believe the party to be perfectly reliable, having known him for several years."

Another certificate by Thomas W. Brock, who represents himself as an assistant of Mr. Griffin and superintending the work during Griffin's absence from time to time. He details many circumstances of the losses and furnishing of materials, corroborative of the petition. This certificate is not sworn to, but attested by a person signing as justice of the peace.

Colonel James M. Moore, assistant quartermaster, who appears to have been requested to do so by the Quartermaster-General, makes the following report upon the claim:

ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE, DEPOT OF WASHINGTON,
Washington, D. C., November 24, 1866.

GENERAL: In compliance with your indorsement of the 4th of August, 1866, on the inclosed claim of W. A. Griffin, for animals lost in the public service at the Andersonville National Cemetery, &c., I have the honor to submit the following report:

I have submitted the claim of W. A. Griffin to a careful scrutiny, and though I do not consider myself competent to attest that all the animals, &c., for which compensation is claimed, were used up or expended in the public service, I do know from personal observation during my stay at Andersonville that claimant sustained severe losses.

On my arrival at that place, I found Mr. Griffin with a force of laborers actively engaged in inclosing the cemetery with a fence and preserving the graves for future identification.

As no material was furnished him, he had resource to his private means for purchasing the necessary tools and means of transportation, for all of which outlays he has never been compensated. From the general knowledge of the man, I fully believe that he actually lost the animals and expended the moneys as stated in his claim.

Though some of the charges made, such as expenses for counsel, &c., will probably not be honored by the Quartermaster's Department, I would respectfully give as my opinion, that by reason of his valuable services rendered at Andersonville, prior to my arrival there, he is justly entitled to some compensation and worthy of the kind consideration of the Government.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JAMES M. MOORE,
Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel and Assistant Quartermaster, U. S. A.

Brevet Major-General M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General United States Army.

The following letter shows the decision of the Quartermaster-General:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1867.

SIR: Your letter of the 1st of August, 1866, submitting account for mules, &c., alleged to have been furnished the Andersonville Cemetery, Georgia, subsequent to June, 1865, amounting to $7,375, has been duly considered, and in reply I have respectfully to inform you, that however equitable this claim may appear to be from your statement, and from the report of Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel James M. Moore, assistant quartermaster, of the 24th November, 1866, yet the Quartermaster-General has no authority to settle, or to recommend for settlement, claims of this class.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,
By order of the Quartermaster-General:
JAMES A. EKIN,
Deputy Quartermaster-General, Brevet Brigadier General, U. S. A.

W. A. GRIFFIN, Washington, D. C.

The committee are satisfied by the papers and proofs that the petitioner is a faithful and patriotic man; that he undertook this enterprise of preparing and perfecting the Andersonville cemetery in good faith, and performed good service, and is entitled to some compensation for his expenditures at least. He seems to have entered upon the work with great enthusiasm, and without a doubt that the verbal assurances of the major-general commanding the district would be affirmed by the Government. It is questionable how far these irregular and volunteer services should be sanctioned by Congress; but in a case of this kind, where the undertaking is permitted and encouraged by the authorities, and the claimant has proceeded in good faith and conceded efficiency, suffering heavy losses, and expending his money in a praiseworthy object, for the public benefit, it would seem some remuneration should be made. But in fixing damages some reasonable rule should obtain; and the loss of animals by disease and larceny appears too remote for allowances, and must be considered among the risks assumed by the claimant.

The committee have concluded to allow the sum of $2,325 in consideration of the use of animals, and the tools, materials, provisions, and forage furnished and money expended by petitioner at Andersonville.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 40.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POTTER reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar and had directed him to report back sundry bills, some with the recommendation that they do pass and others that they be laid on the table.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, with the recommendation that they do pass, were severally read a third time, and passed:

The bill (H. R. No. 3158) for the relief of Eugene Jacobs, United States consul at Montevideo:

The bill (H. R. No. 3268) for the relief of John M. Reed;

The bill (H. R. No. 3118) for the relief of Mary Conly, late widow of R. H. Murrell, late an officer in the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry;

The bill (H. R. No. 3271) for the relief of Stephen M. Honeycutt;

The bill (H. R. No. 3272) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered in a small-pox hospital;

The bill (H. R. No. 3526) for the restoration of the property of Nicholas José Merrimet;

The bill (H. R. No. 1628) for the relief of Montraville Patton, of Buncombe County, North Carolina;

The bill (H. R. No. 1515) for the relief of Gustavus F. Jocknick;

The bill (H. R. No. 3735) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne; and

The bill (S. No. 597) for the relief of William A. Griffin.

RICHARD HAWLEY & SONS.

The bill (H. R. No. 2279) for the relief of Richard Hawley & Sons, was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALDRON. Since this bill was reported an examination in the Customs Bureau has shown that there is an error in the bill of about $200. I therefore offer the following amendment:

Strike out "$615.84" and insert "$410.56.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a decrease in the amount.

The SPEAKER. The amendment reduces the amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

The following bills, on which the Committee of the Whole reported adversely, were laid on the table:

The bill (H. R. No. 1914) for the relief of Augustus Sprague, late a private in Company B, Second Michigan Volunteers; and

The bill (H. R. No. 1456) for the relief of Mrs. Mary J. Orr, widow of Hon. James L. Orr, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. VANCE. I move to reconsider the several votes by which bills reported to-day from the Committee of the Whole have been passed or laid on the table; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 4456) to amend certain postal laws was recommitted yesterday to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SAMUEL S. POTTER.

Mr. LAWRENCE. When the bill (S. No. 786) for the relief of Samuel S. Potter was reported to-day by the Committee on War Claims, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] made the point of order, and it was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. The gentleman from Massachusetts now withdraws the point of order, and I ask that the bill may be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not on the Clerk's desk. Gentlemen who desire to bring up bills should always give notice of their intention. This bill, as soon as disposed of, went to the Clerk's office.

BERNARD T. SWART.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4467) for the relief of Bernard T. Swart, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the House meet to-morrow for debate only.

Mr. RAINEY and others objected.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ARMSTRONG: Memorial of the Legislature of Dakota Territory, for an appropriation of lands to the University of Dakota, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. BANNING: Letter from the governor of Ohio, transmitting joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio relating to the expulsion of officers and members of the Louisiana Legislature, to the Select Committee on that portion of the President's message relating to the condition of the South.

Also, the petition of Mary E. Wainwright, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BIERY: The petition of 40 citizens of Conshohocken, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of so much of the act of June 6, 1872, as reduced duties on imports, and remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal taxes, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CESSNA: The petition of Mrs. Celeste McGowan Freytch, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The petition of Peter Murray & Co., for relief, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLAYTON: Letter of United States shipping commissioner at San Francisco, California, in relation to time for filing claims under the Geneva award, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COTTON: The petition of William Ballantyne and Dixon & King, to be compensated for supplies furnished public schools in the District of Columbia prior to act of June 20, 1874, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petitions of citizens of Scott County, Iowa, for the construction of the proposed canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, the petition of citizens of Muscatine County, Iowa, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. DUNNELL: A paper for the establishment of certain post-routes in Minnesota, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HAMILTON: The petition of Miller Hoppock, John Burns, and 320 others, citizens of New Jersey, for the repeal of so much of the act of June 6, 1872, as reduced duties on imports, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia: The remonstrance of R. B. Dunlap and others, of Virginia, against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KASSON: The petition of 500 citizens of Des Moines, Iowa, for the construction of the proposed canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. LOUGHRIDGE: The petition of citizens of Poweshiek County, Iowa, of similar import, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of the Soldier and Sailors' Union, of Philadelphia, for the equalization of bounties to soldiers, sailors, and marines, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEAL: The petition of William N. Hall, of Pike County, Ohio, to be compensated for services as private in Company C, One hundred and seventeenth Ohio Volunteers, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ORTH: The petition of R. E. Bryant, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: The petition of William P. Harvey, of Charles County, Maryland, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEPHENS: The petition of Albert G. Boone, of Denver, Colorado Territory, commissioner appointed in 1861 to make a treaty for cession of territory to the United States with the Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians, and to secure afterward from said Indians their agreement to an amendment to said treaty made by the United States Senate, to be compensated for services as such commissioner and for personal expenses incurred by him and for supplies furnished said Indians, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 25, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The SECRETARY (Hon. GEORGE C. GORHAM) called the Senate to order, saying:

Senators, I have received this communication from the Vice-President:

VICE-PRESIDENT'S CHAMBER,
Capitol, January 23, 1875.

SIR: Please state to the Senate that indispensable engagements will prevent my attendance at the opening of the Senate Monday morning next.

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY WILSON.

To the SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Secretary, I submit for consideration of the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the absence of the Vice-President Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY be, and he is hereby, chosen President of the Senate pro tempore.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Rhode Island is chosen President pro tempore.

Mr. ANTHONY thereupon took the chair.

On motion of Mr. BOUTWELL, it was Ordered, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that in the absence of the Vice-President the Senate has chosen Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, President of the Senate pro tempore; and that he make a similar communication to the House of Representatives.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, and having proceeded for two minutes—

Mr. SARGENT. As there is a full quorum of the Senate present, I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not think that is proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained.

The Secretary continued the reading of the Journal; which was approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented the credentials of Hon. HANNIBAL HAMLIN, chosen by the Legislature of Maine a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1875; which were read and ordered to be filed.

REPORTS OF COMMISSIONER ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed five thousand additional copies of the reports of the Commissioner on Fish and Fisheries for the years 1872 and 1873; one thousand copies thereof to be for the use of the Senate, three thousand for the use of the House of Representatives, and one thousand for the use of the Commissioner.

ALEXANDER BURTCH.

The bill (H. R. No. 4462) for the relief of Alexander Burtch was read twice by its title.

Mr. WRIGHT. That bill, which involves about eighty dollars for the relief of Mr. Burtch, passed both Houses of Congress at the last session at a very late hour in the session and did not reach the President of the United States in time for his approval. It was reported from the committee here as also in the House. There is no question as to the propriety of passing it, and I ask that the bill may now be put on its passage.

Mr. SARGENT. I object until after the morning hour. I will not make any objection after the morning hour.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I trust it will be laid on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting to the Senate, in compliance with a resolution of the 11th instant, copies of correspondence relative to certain disturbances in the State of Louisiana; which, on the motion of Mr. SARGENT, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLANAGAN presented a petition of the mayor and council of the city of Houston, Texas, praying that Houston be declared a port of entry; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of citizens of Michigan, soldiers in the late war, praying an amendment of the homestead law so as to authorize a wounded soldier to enter upon and improve one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands by proxy; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Wyandotte, Michigan, protesting against the restoration of tax on tea and coffee; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I present the petition of about 300 employés of the Raritan Woolen Mills, in Raritan, New Jersey, asking the repeal of so much of the act of June 6, 1872, as reduces the existing duties on certain foreign commodities inported into this country 10 per cent.; and in presenting this petition let me say that I believe the granting of its prayer would increase our revenue and at the same time give activity to our sluggish industries. A protective tariff, while it fosters home industry, also by giving wealth to the people increases our revenue. And we ought to protect our industry until we have here an aggregation of capital that will enable us successfully to compete with those with whom we are brought into competition. That is the safest and surest and, I hope, the shortest road to free trade. I am happy to learn, I hope correctly, that the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended to the proper committee of the other House, where a measure of this nature must originate, the passage of such a law; and I am glad that that recommendation comes from so worthy a representative of the Western States. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking for a preliminary survey of the Saint Croix and Saint Louis Rivers, which form the boundary between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, with a view of connecting the Mississippi River by that route with Lake Superior. A similar memorial to this has been presented from the Legislature of Wisconsin within a year or two, and I ask the special attention of the Committee on Commerce to this. I move its reference to that committee, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT presented the memorial of the Board of Trade, the Commercial Exchange, and the Marine Underwriters, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying the passage of House bill No. 4034, to provide for the signal service; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT. I also present a memorial of citizens of Reading, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee or any revival of internal taxes, and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. tariff reduction of 1872. I also present similar memorials from citizens of Pittsburgh, citizens of Philadelphia, citizens of Danville, citizens of Huntingdon County, and citizens of Blair County, all in the State of Pennsylvania. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has made the speech which I would make upon presenting such memorials if speeches were admissible. I adopt his.

The memorials were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, presented a memorial of delegates of the Creek Nation of Indians, praying to be reimbursed for expenses incurred in negotiating the treaty of 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a memorial of a number of citizens of Hocking County, Ohio, praying for a repeal of the law of 1872 reducing the duties on certain foreign goods by 10 per cent., and also remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee. It seems to be similar in form to those presented by the Senators from New Jersey and Pennsylvania. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Cincinnati Light Guard, Ohio Independent Militia, in favor of the passage of a law providing that the arms issued to that State under the act of 1808 shall not be charged to the State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of Libby Sharp, of Cumberland County, Kentucky, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William B. Scott, of Adair County, Kentucky, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS. I present the petition of George Harmon and 47 others, of Gladesville, West Virginia, praying that tea and coffee be continued on the free list, and that if the Government must have additional revenue the 10 per cent. taken off the duties on certain goods two years ago be restored. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELLY presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in favor of the passage of an act extinguishing title to the Umatilla Government reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in favor of the passage of an act to refund to the State of Oregon the expenses of the provisional government of Oregon which were paid by that State; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in favor of a further appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Willamette River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in favor of the passage of an act providing that all United States securities hereafter issued shall be liable to taxation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in favor of an appropriation of money to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Ashland, by way of Linkville, to the Hot Springs in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of navigation at the mouth of the Coquille River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented a memorial of James Leonard and a number of other citizens of Shenandoah County, Virginia, remonstrating against any taxation on tea and coffee, and asking for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I present a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of South Carolina, relative to the deepening and widening of Charleston Harbor, and memorializing Congress in relation to the same. I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Concurrent resolution relative to the deepening of Charleston Harbor, and memorializing Congress in relation to the same.

Whereas the interests of the people of South Carolina are identified with the commercial importance of the city of Charleston as the chief city on the south Atlantic coast; and whereas the commercial statistics of the past few years conclusively show a constant and rapid increase in every element of commercial prosperity; and whereas her situation on the highway of nations, as the nearest and most available outlet to the growing wealth of the West, her proximity to the trade of the West Indies and South America, makes her the natural emporium of this vast commerce; and whereas the increasing value of her market stands approved in the fact that in 1867 her receipts of cotton, the great southern staple, were 165,000 bales, while in 1874 they had increased to 437,000 bales; her receipts of rice in 1867 were 15,000 tierces, while in 1874 they had increased to 43,000 tierces; her receipts in naval stores had increased in the same time from 54,000 barrels to 221,000 barrels, and her lumber trade from 8,000,000 feet to 20,000,000 feet, showing concusively that the trade of the city of Charleston in the past eight years has been nearly trebled in nearly all the important elements of southern prosperity; and whereas, notwithstanding these facts, and that Charleston, as the commercial center of the south Atlantic coast, throbs with the life and energies of the entire South, and is peculiarly blessed with a most genial climate and a safe and unequaled harbor, yet the National Congress has almost ignored our State in its appropriations to develop the material interests of the South, giving to Georgia over $321,000, to North Carolina over $740,000, and to South Carolina $88,000, a disparity for which there is apparently no just reason; and whereas, with all her great natural advantages, there is but a single disadvantage, the depth of water on her bar, that keeps the city of Charleston from moving vigorously forward to her proper position of commercial greatness, and her citizens recognizing this fact, through her municipality, through her chamber of commerce, through her board of trade, and through every other avenue of public influence, are bending their every energy to the deepening and widening of her splendid harbor; and whereas the city council of Charleston, by the expenditure of nearly $50,000, in which, notwithstanding the hardships of the times, the people of Charleston of all classes have eagerly concurred, have ascertained that the work can be easily and permanently accomplished at an expense comparatively trifling as compared with paramount results it must achieve; and whereas the history of the city of Charleston and the growing trade of this section of our common country prove this enterprise to be of the last importance to the people of South Carolina and to the development of the entire South: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate, (the house of representatives concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, requested to use their utmost influence to secure for the city of Charleston an appropriation of $100,000, for the purpose of deepening and widening its harbor, and to advance the material interests of the people of this State.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN presented the petition of Catharine S. Winslow, widow of Rear-Admiral Winslow, praying to have a reconsideration of her application for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON. I present twenty memorials from different parts of Pennsylvania, signed by workingmen entirely, who remonstrate against the imposition of duties on tea and coffee and who urge the restoration of the 10 per cent. tariff duties repealed in 1872. I move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition signed by seamen of San Francisco, California, urging a modification of the marine-hospital service; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have a memorial signed by the governor, the executive council, and the senators of the Legislature of the State of Maine, in which they ask that Congress provide by law that corporations and others may be prevented from repudiating and delaying the payment of honest and legal debts through the resignation of the officers designated by law to enforce the judgments of courts.

I also present a memorial from Henry Boynton touching the same subject. I move that they be referred severally to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask the careful attention and consideration of that committee to the subject. It is one, I think, which demands prompt action. A very serious evil exists, I think, in very many localities; and honest creditors by the resignation of officers are absolutely prevented from collecting their debts on judgments issued by the courts. I ask the careful attention of the committee to the consideration of this subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON. I present a memorial of citizens of Buffalo, New York, among whom I recognize several prominent business men and manufacturers, protesting against the reimposition of the duties on tea and coffee and asking that the 10 per cent. reduction made by the act of 1872 be repealed. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented a petition of engineers of the United States Navy, praying an amendment of the Navy prize-law of June 10, 1864, in regard to the distribution of prize money, so as to give a fleet engineer of the Navy a share therein equal to that of a fleet captain commanding; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS presented resolutions of a public meeting of citizens of Labette County, Kansas, relating to the establishment of courts in the Indian Territory; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARVEY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of Galveston Harbor, in the State of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, asking that certain post-routes be established in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of navigation at the mouth of the Coquille River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of the construction of a military wagon-road between the Illinois River and Chiteo, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, asking an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Yam Hill River, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, asking that the channel of the Nehalim River be surveyed and marked by buoys; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, asking that the duties on jute and burlap, and sacks made from them, be removed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON presented a petition of workmen of Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee, and asking the imposition of such duties on foreign trade as will lighten the burdens of the citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRATT presented the petition of John Eobbs, late a private in Company C, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOGY presented the petition of Albert G. Boone, praying compensation for certain public services rendered by him and also for moneys advanced to the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALCORN presented the petition of F. Moore, praying for compensation for services rendered by him as assistant assessor of internal revenue in the third district of Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of William de Rohan, for redress from the government of Italy for the seizure of certain vessels belonging to him; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. ALCORN, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of R. W. Edmondson, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

FIRE AT THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SARGENT. I send a telegram to the desk, and I ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 25, 1875.

From the War Department to Hon. A. A. SARGENT:

The Navy Department is on fire.

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 170) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy who were dropped, furloughed, or retired under the act of February 28, 1855;

A bill (S. No. 448) for the relief of John T. Smith; and

A bill (S. No. 597) for the relief of William A. Griffin.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 1515) for the relief of Gustavus F. Jocknick;

A bill (H. R. No. 1628) for the relief of Montraville Patton, of Buncombe County, North Carolina;

A bill (H. R. No. 3118) for the relief of Mary Conly, late widow of R. H. Murrell, late an officer in the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 3526) for the restoration of the property of Nicholas José Merrimet;

A bill (H. R. No. 3658) for the relief of William J. Coite;

A bill (H. R. No. 3735) for the relief of Anna W. Osborne;

A bill (H. R. No. 3870) to confirm to the city of San José, in the State of California, the title to certain lands;

A bill (H. R. No. 2279) for the relief of Richard Hawley & Sons;

A bill (H. R. No. 4466) permitting Lieutenant-Commander Frederick Pearson, of the Navy, to accept a decoration from the Queen of Great Britain;

A bill (H. R. No. 3158) for the relief of Enoch Jacobs, United States consul at Montevideo;

A bill (H. R. No. 3268) for the relief of John M. Reed;

A bill (H. R. No. 3271) for the relief of Stephen N. Honeycutt;

A bill (H. R. No. 3272) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered in a small-pox hospital; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3399) authorizing the sale of certain lands at Vincennes, Indiana.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the bill (H. R. No. 3593) to constitute Patchogue, on the south side of Long Island, in the State of New York, a port of delivery.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. LEWIS, it was Ordered, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 1098) to aid the Washington and Ohio Railroad Company, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 668) to incorporate the Anglo-American Mutual Company, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1104) authorizing the issue of patents to mining claims in certain cases, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1149) declaring the meaning of an act approved March 9, 1868, relative to a patent for induction apparatus and circuit breakers, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 986) explanatory of section 25 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights," reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Julius D. Pickering, praying for the extension of letters-patent for an improved method of attaching straps to boot-legs, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of J. S. Savage, of Newton, Massachusetts, inventor of a safety ballot-box, praying to be allowed to appear before the proper committee and explain its advantages, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 900) granting a pension to the widow and minor children of Ira Wilkins, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PRATT. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1952) granting a pension to Nancy C. Marlette, to report it adversely and move its indefinite postponement, because the object of the bill has been accomplished during its pendency in this body by the granting of a certificate by the Commissioner of Pensions for the arrears claimed in this bill.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 916) for the relief of Mrs. Ann Cornelia Lanman, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3695) granting a pension to Eliza A. Flamant, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3721) granting a pension to Ezra C. Owen, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 619) granting a pension to Elizabeth Tipton, of Tennessee, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2254) granting a pension to the minor heirs of John H. Evans, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of George H. Wellman, for himself and on behalf of the heirs of the late George Wellman, deceased, praying for a further extension of the patent granted his father for an apparatus for stripping top flats for carding engines, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1051) authorizing the extension of the patent granted to Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, for a self-locking shutter-hinge, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William Wickersham, a citizen of Massachusettss, praying an extension of his patent for an improvement in sewing-machines, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Elias M. Ritz, praying for the passage of a special act to allow him back pension from June 18, 1866, to April 23, 1873, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3697) granting a pension to Belinda Craig, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2400) granting a pension to William White, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3273) granting a pension to Rachael W. Phillips, widow of Gilbert Phillips, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. The same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lucy J. Loop, praying to be allowed a pension for the services of her husband and son, who were killed in action in the late war, direct me to report that the petition is not verified and is accompanied by no evidence. They therefore ask to be discharged from its further consideration; and I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3192) granting a pension to the minor children of J. A. Brewer, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2352) granting a pension to Lewis Hinely, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Daniel G. Gallick, praying for a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. INGALLS. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lucy G. Clark, widow of General Marston G. Clark, of Indiana, praying to be allowed a pension, to report it back. The committee have reported a general bill, which includes the case of the petitioner, and they ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

WAGON-ROAD IN UTAH.

Mr. PRATT. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1166) granting the right of way over the public lands for the construction of a wagon-road in Salt Lake County, Utah Territory, have had the same under consideration, and directed me to report it back with an amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to have the wagon-road bill which has just been reported by the Senator from Indiana acted upon now.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It grants the right of way, not exceeding four rods in width, over the public lands of the United States to the Miners' Protective Toll-Road Company, a corporation formed and existing under the laws of Utah Territory, and its assigns, for the construction of a public wagon-road from Granite, at the mouth of the canyon, to or near its head; and from some convenient point on the county-road to and through Big Cottonwood Canyon, to or near a point in that canyon called Silver Springs, with the right to collect tolls thereon at such rates as shall be approved by the district court of the Territory held in and for Salt Lake County; but the right of way thus granted is not to interfere with any rights of settlers upon the public lands heretofore acquired. In case the roads are not constructed within three years after the passage of the act, the right of way is to revert to the United States.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was in line 16 of section 1, after the word "acquired," to insert:

And provided further, That said right of way shall not be located upon the road-bed of any railroad heretofore constructed, except where it may be necessary to cross such road-bed; and in making any such crossing it shall be so located as not unnecessarily to obstruct the use of such road-bed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. In section 1, line 16, after the word "acquired," I move to add "or with any existing toll-road or public highway."

Mr. SPRAGUE. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. CONKLING. Without delaying the passage of the bill, I want to inquire whether the bill contains no grant of any kind except the right of way?

Mr. SPRAGUE. That is all.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1187) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move that the bill be printed and lie on the table. I desire at an early day, and at the convenience of the Senate, to submit some remarks in relation to it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1188) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels," approved March 3, 1855; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1189) making an appropriation to fulfill treaty stipulations with the Creek Indians; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have been furnished with a bill to meet the wishes of the memorialists whose memorial I this morning presented. I do not know how fully it may meet the case. I ask leave to introduce it.

Leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1190) to amend the fourteenth section of the act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 29, 1789; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 17) authorizing the appointment of a commissioner to an international penitentiary congress; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (having called for resolutions.) If there be no resolutions, under the order of the Senate, the Chair will call for business from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for enlistments in the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be considered as before the Senate, if there be no objection.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

DISCHARGE OF SEAMEN.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 706) to amend the act approved July 17, 1862, entitled "An act for the better government of the Navy of the United States."

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Naval Affairs had reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That the seventeenth section of the act approved July 17, 1862, be so amended as to read as follows:

SEC. 17. That it shall be the duty of the commanding officer of any fleet, squadron or vessel acting singly, when on service, to send to an Atlantic or to a Pacific port of the United States, as their enlistment may have occurred on either the Atlantic or Pacific coast of the United States, in some public or other vessel, all petty officers and persons of inferior ratings desiring to go there at the expiration of their terms of enlistment, or as soon thereafter as may be, unless, in his opinion, the detention of such persons for a longer period should be essential to the public interests, in which case he may detain them, or any of them, until the vessel to which they belong shall return to such Atlantic or Pacific port. All persons enlisted without the limits of the United States may be discharged, on the expiration of their enlistment, either in a foreign port or in a port of the United States, or they may be detained as above provided beyond the term of their enlistment; and that all persons sent home, or detained by a commanding officer, according to the provisions of this act, shall be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy until their return to an Atlantic or Pacific port and their regular discharge; and all persons so detained by such officer, or re-entering to serve until the return to an Atlantic or Pacific port of the vessel to which they belong, shall in no case be held in service more than thirty days after their arrival in said port; and that all persons who shall be so detained beyond their terms of enlistment, or who shall, after the termination of their enlistment, voluntarily re-enter to serve until the return to an Atlantic or Pacific port of the vessel to which they belong, and their regular discharge therefrom, shall receive for the time during which they are so detained, or shall so serve beyond their original terms of enlistment, an addition of one-fourth of their former pay: Provided, That the shipping articles shall hereafter contain the substance of this section.

Mr. CRAGIN. This is only a slight change in the present law. As the law now exists, seamen and petty officers are discharged at an Atlantic port or on the Atlantic coast. This puts in the Pacific coast and Pacific ports, as within a few years enlistments have taken place upon that coast. This is all the change there is in the law. The bill was prepared at the Navy Department, and is earnestly and urgently recommended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. CRAGIN. I suppose, since the Revised Statutes have been enacted, it is necessary to amend this bill by striking out lines 3, 4, and 5, in the following words:

That the seventeenth section of the act approved July 17th, 1862, be so amended as to read as follows.

And inserting

That section 1422 of the Revised Statutes be so amended as to read as follows.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 1422 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

HOLMES WIKOFF.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3006) authorizing the President to nominate Holmes Wickoff an assistant surgeon in the Navy.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to hear some explanation. I hate these exceptions. Such special legislation I object to.

Mr. CRAGIN. I think the Senator will vote for this bill when he hears the explanation.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to hear it.

Mr. CRAGIN. By regulation of the Navy Department some years ago any person was to be admitted as an assistant surgeon of the Navy over the age of twenty-six years. Mr. Wikoff had graduated at the University of Pennsylvania, and was attending another course of lectures. He came to the Secretary of the Navy, asked the privilege of being examined for admission into the naval service, saying to the Secretary that he desired to finish his present course of lectures, which would carry him two or three weeks beyond the age of twenty-six years. The Secretary waived that regulation so far as that gentleman was concerned and he continued at his course of lectures, but before he finished the course of lectures and applied for examination Congress passed an act fixing the age at twenty-six years as the limit, so that the agreement of the Secretary of the Navy was null and void. He then came to be examined, was examined, and passed a very splendid examination, and, there being no way by the law for him to be appointed, the Secretary appointed him an acting assistant surgeon, and he has been in the service ever since. This bill is a House bill simply to cure that two or three weeks' difference in age. He is a very excellent officer, and it is the desire of the Department that the President may be authorized to nominate him notwithstanding this difference in age.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVIVORS OF THE POLARIS.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I now call up the bill (S. No. 843) for the relief of the survivors of the Polaris, which was reported by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.]

The bill was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the survivors of the Polaris engaged in the Arctic exploration under command of Captain Charles F. Hall, their widows, or minor children, and in the order named, a sum of money in addition to that already paid equal in amount to one year's pay, which each would have been entitled to respectively, if continued in the service, under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy for that exploring expedition; and to pay to Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Hall, a sum equal in amount to two years' pay, which her husband would have received if living and continued in the service as before provided; and to pay three hundred and sixty dollars each to Joe Eberbing and Hans Hendrick, Esquimaux, who rendered valuable assistance to that part of the ship's crew rescued from the ice-floe on or about the 30th of April, 1873. The payment is to be made direct to each individual claimant upon satisfactory evidence of his identity; and if any sale, assignment, or transfer shall be made of any interest in the gratuity provided by the act, the amount so assigned is to revert to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, since this bill was reported a bill has been passed for the relief of Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Hall, and I suppose it is not intended that that shall be duplicated. It was not exactly in the shape of a gratuity, but the purchase of certain documents prepared by her husband of his explorations; and the amount was larger than it would have been had it not been for the unfortunate fate of her husband, leaving his family destitute. I therefore move, in order that it may not be duplicated, to strike out after the word "expedition," in line 12, down to and including the word "provided," in line 15, which will leave the bill to provide simply for the sailors and others who suffered these hardships in the expedition. I submit the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, beginning in line 12, to strike out the words—

> And that Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Hall, be paid a sum equal in amount to two years' pay, which her husband would have received if living and continued in the service as before provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. The time remaining of the morning hour is so brief, there being other important business of the committee, as every Senator unquestionably is acquainted with the history of the Polaris expedition, and knows that the men who are relieved by this bill to the extent of a year's pay were one hundred and ninety-six days upon a floe of ice; were upon one occasion washed off into the sea and recovered their place upon the ice almost by a miracle; that this vessel penetrated to 82° 16′ north, farther than any other vessel ever penetrated upon an exploring expedition; that the gratuity here given, small as it is, has examples much more magnificent by other governments in making compensations for services of this character; that the expedition, although the vessel did not return, was really a great success, so far as its objects were concerned, in carrying the flag of the United States nearer the North Pole than it ever had been before, and also in solving certain geograpical problems to science—I say I will not take up time in reviewing these matters, but will ask that the bill may be favorably considered.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER CLARA DOLSON.

Mr. CRAGIN. The next bill is one reported by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] being the bill (H. R. No. 2101) for the relief of the owners of the steamer Clara Dolson.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to the owners of the steamer Clara Dolson of $22,050, in full of all claims for the use of the vessel by the Navy Department, and for all claims for damages to the vessel and furniture while in the service of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there a report?

Mr. SARGENT. The written report in this matter is not made by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, but was made by the House Committee on Appropriations, a very careful committee. The report is nearly four pages of print. I have no objection to its being read, provided we have time to consider the bill; but if no Senator desires that it shall be read, I can make a statement of the facts, as I understand them and have personally examined them.

Mr. CRAGIN. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senate that this morning, and every morning hereafter until otherwise ordered, each committee as it is called shall have one hour from the time that the committee is called. This has been suggested to me by several Senators, and it strikes me that it would be a great economy of time and labor. If there be no objection, I hope we may pass on that now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the report read in this case, because I do not think we ought to vote $20,000 without knowing what it is for.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose there will be no objection to our having the hour.

Mr. CRAGIN. My suggestion, if adopted, will enable the report to be read and other committees coming after to have much more time. I ask unanimous consent to submit the motion.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will ask an hour for his committee now, I will not object to that; but I do not think we had better break into the rule quite so summarily. All committees may not need an hour.

Mr. CRAGIN. Very well; I will modify my motion, though I would prefer to make it general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the Committee on Naval Affairs have an hour this morning.

Mr. CRAGIN. We may not wish to occupy the whole hour; but it is not my way to be selfish and ask for myself what I would not give to others.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I hope that motion will not be made to-day. If the Senator will say half an hour, I will not object.

Mr. SARGENT. Say until half past one o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Committee on Naval Affairs having until half past one o'clock to consider bills in their charge? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The report of the committee in the case before the Senate will now be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HANCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, in the House of Representatives, on the 20th of February, 1874:

> The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of the Navy of the 7th of January, 1873, together with the petition of the claimants asking an appropriation for the payment of the amount reported to be due to the owners of the steamer Clara Dolson, have had the same under consideration, and adopt the following report made at the last Congress:
>
> The letter of the Secretary is as follows:
> NAVY DEPARTMENT,
> Washington, January 7, 1873.
>
> SIR: The sum of $91,200 is stated by the Solicitor, on examination, as the balance due the owners of the steamer Clara Dolson for the use of that vessel by the Government.
>
> This claim, as reported by the Solicitor, seems to be just and the amount due, but there is no appropriation at the command of the Department from which it can properly be paid at this time.
>
> I therefore, at the request of the parties in interest, refer the claim to you, with the request that a proper appropriation be made to enable the Department to pay it. The grounds upon which it rests are stated in the reports of Admiral Porter and of the Solicitor, herewith transmitted.
>
> Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
>
> GEO. M. ROBESON,
> Secretary of the Navy.
> Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
> Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
> House of Representatives.

The Clara Dolson, a steamer belonging to loyal citizens residing in the North, was, without the knowledge or consent of the owners, and during their absence, in September, 1861, seized by the confederate forces at Memphis, on the Mississippi River and was for a time held and used by said confederate forces. Afterward the agents of the owners thereof managed to get possession of the steamer, and while in their possession she was seized by the United States naval forces on the 5th day of July, 1862, and libeled in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, on the ground that "said steamer had been used by the knowledge and consent of the owner in aiding the present rebellion, contrary to the act of August 6, 1861."

Edward Walsh, William T. Dunning, and Samuel S. Edwards claimed the vessel as owners, and prayed that the vessel be delivered to them upon their giving such bond as the court might order, and filed their answer on September 2, 1862, denying that the vessel had been used with their knowledge or consent to aid the rebellion. The court ordered the vessel to be delivered to said owners upon their entering into bond for the appraised value of the vessel, conditioned to abide by and pay the money awarded by the final decree of the court.

The marshal returned to this order that the appraisers having appraised the vessel at $45,000, the claimants, on the 19th day of December, 1862, tendered an approved bond as required by the court, but that he could not deliver the vessel because the officers of the United States Navy were using the said steamer as a receiving-ship, and declined to surrender her. The court finally dismissed this libel because the vessel was not in possession of the court, and ordered the marshal to restore the vessel to her owners.

After the dismissal of this libel an agreed case was submitted to the court upon a libel for the violation by said vessel of the non-intercourse act, which is as follows:

EXHIBIT F.

In the United States district court, southern district of Illinois.

vs.
STEAMER CLARA DOLSON.

Agreed statement of facts.

It is agreed by and between the claimants and the district attorney, on behalf of the libelant, that the Clara Dolson was impressed into the service of the rebel military authorities at Memphis in the month of September, 1861; that while she was in such service she made several trips to Fort Pillow and one trip to Columbus, Kentucky. That when she made those trips she was in charge of the confederate military authorities, and used to transport munitions of war and supplies for the rebel troops at those points, and made one voluntary trip, transporting goods, wares, and merchandise from New Orleans to Columbus, Kentucky, and back to New Orleans in January, 1862. That Columbus, although situated in the State of Kentucky, was at the time the Clara Dolson made those trips, and for a long time before and after that, in the actual military occupation of the rebel forces, and that all that portion of country in the immediate vicinity of Columbus, and all that portion of Kentucky bordering on the Mississippi River below Columbus and down to the line of the State of Tennessee, was under the civil and military control of the rebel forces, and continued so to be for a long time thereafter, as it had been for a long time before the Clara Dolson made the trips above referred to. The claimants, Edward Walsh and William T. Dunning, reside in the city of Saint Louis, and Samuel S. Edwards resides in the State of New Jersey, and, as the district attorney is informed, are loyal citizens of the United States.

J. H. RANKIN,
For Respondents and Claimants.
L. WELDON,
For United States.

On this the court decreed the confiscation of the vessel. The owners filed an application for the remission of the forfeiture, and the judge indorsed it as follows:

THE UNITED STATES
vs.
THE STEAMER CLARA DOLSON. HER engines, tackle, furniture, &c.

The Clara Dolson was condemned because of a voluntary trip made between New Orleans and Columbus, as stated in the agreed case, (Exhibit F.) In my opinion the Secretary of the Treasury may safely remit the forfeiture thus incurred, on the ground that the trip was made without the consent or connivance of the owners, the case showing that they were residents of a loyal portion of the United States, and it failing to show that they were guilty of any disloyal acts or practices.

S. H. TREAT,
District Judge.

The forfeiture was remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, by virtue of the authority conferred on him by law.

The Secretary of the Navy gave the following order:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 4, 1864.

SIR: The proceedings in prize in the case of the Clara Dolson being terminated by a dismissal of the libel on the motion of the district attorney, and a consequent final decree of restitution from which there is now no appeal, and in the proceedings for forfeiture under the statutes, the court having ordered the marshal to deliver the vessel to her owners on their bond, you will deliver the Clara Dolson, after taking out of her all Government property, to the marshal to be disposed of according to the order of the court.

If, after the delivery of the vessel to the owners, you consider it important to retain her in the naval service, you are authorized to do so, and to make the necessary arrangements with them as to compensation in full of all claims on account of the boat, informing the Department of your action in the case.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Rear-Admiral D. D. PORTER,
Commanding Mississippi Squadron, Cairo, Illinois.

In obedience to this order, the steamer was delivered to the owners, but as the naval officers in command at Cairo could not dispense with the use of the vessel at the time, she was retained by agreement for two months longer at a compensation to be paid therefor of $150 per day. For this last term of two months payment has been made by the Department amounting to $9,450.

The vessel was actually in the service of the Government from the 5th day of July, 1862, until the 5th day of May, 1864, as appears by the official certificate of Lieutenant John Scott, commanding receiving-ship at Cairo, Illinois, dated May 6, 1864. The owners presented their claim for this period amounting to the sum of $100,650, and also for the sum of $45,000 damages to the vessel while in the service—the cabin having been torn to pieces to make a small-pox hospital of the vessel, and all the furniture lost or destroyed. But the claimants abandoned the claim for damages, it being conceded that the Navy Department could not adjust a claim for damages, but only for the loss of the vessel. Accompanying the claim were full proofs of the value of the use of the vessel, the damages done upon her, and of the absolute loyalty of the owners.

Your committee are of the opinion that the Secretary of the Treasury was fully justified in remitting the forfeiture. We will not here discuss the validity of the decree, but it is manifest that the judge was satisfied that the forfeiture should be remitted; and, in the opinion of your committee, it is at least questionable whether the decree was authorized by the law and facts of the case.

But as the judgment of your committee is not based on the validity or invalidity of said decree, we will not enter upon a discussion of its merits. It is clearly proven that the use of the vessel was worth at that time at least $150 per day, and the Navy Department has allowed at that rate for the full time that she was in the possession and in the service of the Navy Department, that is, $100,650, deducting the $9,450 heretofore paid. Your committee, however, do not feel satisfied of the justice or equity of the claim against the Government for the use of the vessel from the date of her seizure on the 5th day of May, 1862, to the 18th day of December, 1862, when, the claimants having given satisfactory bond as required by the court, the vessel was by the court ordered to be returned to them. From that time the claimants were unquestionably entitled to the possession and use of their vessel, and that entirely independent of the course or result of subsequent litigation in regard to her.

From the said 18th day of December, 1862, to the 4th of March, 1864, when the Secretary of the Navy issued his peremptory order for the return of the vessel to the owners, and she was actually returned, is four hundred and forty-one days, and at $150 per day would amount to $66,150, which your committee find should be paid, and report herewith a bill to that effect, and recommend its passage.

Mr. SCOTT. There is one inquiry I would wish to make about the facts in this case. I noticed in the reading of the report it was stated that this vessel was used for illicit purposes by the rebels, and that in some way the owners succeeded again in getting possession of her. If she was in possession of the rebel authorities and used for an unlawful purpose, I should like to have explained fully how the owners did again get possession of her; whether it was by capture, or by their intimacy with and knowledge of the rebel authorities.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have an objection to this claim. This is a bill involving a most dangerous class of claims against the Government of the United States, claims for the use of vessels which were of doubtful allegiance during the whole war, sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other. The owners were of doubtful allegiance, and the vessels still more so in many cases. I do not speak of this particular case, for I do not know anything about it; but this vessel was in the service of the confederates at one time and in our service at another, and in the service of its owners at another. It is not a naval claim in any sense of the term. It is simply an ordinary claim for the use of property during the war, taken from the confederates either by private citizens or by the Army or Navy of the United States. I think therefore the claim ought to go to the Committee on Claims and be governed by the rules which control that committee; or rather in my judgment it ought to go to the Court of Claims if the law is so framed as to allow such a claim to go to that court, but I do not know that it is. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOGY. First, there can be no doubt as to the loyalty of the claimants. Mr. Walsh, who was the principal owner of this vessel, was one of the most steadfast Union men we had in Saint Louis, and he was so from the beginning of the war to the very end of it. He was a man of large means who contributed liberally, and of whose loyalty there never was the slighest doubt. Many of the steamboats on the Mississippi River were in a very peculiar condition; some of the officers were not perhaps very loyal, as in this case, and those boats were actually captured on the Lower Mississippi and made to do service in the rebel lines as in this case; but as soon as they could escape, they did escape and got into the Union lines. The owners without exception were all Union men, loyal in every sense of the word.

The amount reported is really very small. The claim, in my estimation, is beyond all doubt. It has been very thoroughly investigated and reported on favorably by the Department. I cannot see how there can be any just objection to a claim of this kind. The boat was used by the Government for a long time, and entirely used up, I may say. It was a large, costly vessel. If the owners had had possession of the vessel during the war, they would have made a very large amount of money. I cannot see really what objection there can be to this claim. The owners were loyal. Some of the officers might not have been, as was the case with a great many of our steamboats in the West, as the Senator from Ohio, who is a western man, should know. But as to the owners themselves, there is no doubt of their loyalty and fidelity at all times.

Mr. SCOTT. I dislike to interpose an objection to a proper claim; but I would present my question to the Senator from Missouri if he can answer it; and that is this: After this property was once in the possession of the rebel authorities, can he inform us in what manner the owners again obtained possession? Was it by capture, or did they voluntarily return it?

Mr. BOGY. Not only in this case, but in many cases, boats south of a particular line, south of Memphis at one time, were captured by the confederates, but most of them afterward escaped and came up to Saint Louis. While they were there, they could not avoid it; there was no help; it was a matter of life and death, and they had to do the work they were assigned to do by the confederate commanders as in this case, but they escaped when they could and came to Saint Louis. Many of them never did escape, but remained down there in spite of all the owners could do. I remember a Captain Miller who was there three years and never escaped, but was a loyal man all the time.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt of the correctness of the position taken by the Senator from Ohio, that claims of this character should be referred to the Committee on Claims. The business of that committee is such that it can give more attention to a particular case, and therefore I think it is a bad plan to send these individual cases to the Committee on Appropriations, or the Committee on Military Affairs, or the Committee on Naval Affairs; but after that has been done in a particular case and the committee has taken pains to get such information as it could, and it has made a report and recommendation of the particular case, it perhaps would be well to give due faith to its proceedings.

Now, as the Committee on Naval Affairs understood this case, here was a vessel that was in the pursuit of ordinary commerce; the rebellion broke out, and the rebels, taking territory after territory, State after State, finally embraced the territory which contains Memphis, where this vessel was in September, 1861. They seized the vessel and ran it two or three trips. On the 5th of July, 1862, as I understand, the owners got possession of her by running her off by going North, as a great many vessels did at that time, and by that means got within the lines controlled by the United States forces.

Upon these proceedings being had, a libel was brought in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, for the confiscation of the vessel, on the ground that the third trip the vessel made while she was in the power of rebeldom was made voluntarily or with the consent of the owners of the vessel. The vessel, while that libel was pending, was appraised, the owners applying for possession of it, and offering to give bond. They gave bond to the amount of the appraisement. The United States by that time had taken possession of the vessel and were using it for a small-pox hospital. The United States authorities refused to deliver her on the filing of this bond, and retained possession for a considerable time thereafter. Consequently the judge, as he could not get possession of the vessel, dismissed the proceeding for libel.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But had the judge any authority to make such an order for a delivery bond? He had not any jurisdiction of the case at all.

Mr. SARGENT. That may be. I do not know that the owners of the vessel should be held responsible for a judicial error of the judge of that kind, not by their own procurement; at any rate, it might be a technicality which we could overlook if we were disposed to decide upon the equity of the matter, and I understand that to be the principle on which any application is made here. If there were a positive, clear, ascertained legal right under a contract, I suppose they could have a remedy in the Court of Claims; as they cannot, they come here and ask us to take into consideration the equities of the case.

The libel suit being dismissed, the vessel being in the hands of the United States authorities, and the owners having no apparent method of resuming possession of their property, and the prospects of the war in 1862 being dark and gloomy, without any hope of an early close, when it might run for years, the vessel being entirely used up, as the last resort, I suppose, the owners of the vessel made up an agreed case with the Government authorities to get an adjudication upon it, and upon that agreed case a decision was made against the owners of the vessel; that is to say, it was held that on account of the violation of the non-intercourse act, or whatever it may be called, the vessel was property forfeited to the United States. This forfeiture, however, was remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury on the recommendation, as will be found in the report, of the judge, on the ground that these owners unquestionably were loyal men. The forfeiture being remitted, the Government from that time paid for its use of this vessel at the rate of $150 a day, making the compensation nine or ten thousand dollars. The owners come in with a claim for $100,650 for the use before that, from the time of their proffering the bond, the time that they claimed the vessel ought to have been delivered up to them, and for $45,000 additional for damages which were done to the vessel by tearing out the cabin and otherwise using it as a hospital-ship for infectious disease. The amount of the claim originally was then $100,600 besides $45,000 which was not considered by the Navy Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the whole value of the vessel was $45,000.

Mr. SARGENT. That was for the purpose of the bond. I do not know what the condition of the vessel was at that time. It may have been already used as a small-pox hospital, and its value decreased. It may, during the time the owners were not in possession, have been subject to great abuse and become very leaky or dilapidated. I should judge that after the Government got through with the vessel it must have been in a very bad condition.

That was the original claim. The Secretary of the Navy, upon that claim and upon the report of Admiral Porter, recommended the payment of $91,200. The House committee, acting upon it, and making the report which has been read, recommended the sum of $66,150, they all proceeding upon the assumption that $150 a day was a fair price, but that the time claimed by the owners was greater than ought to be equitably allowed. They cut down the time, but the House of Representatives, cutting down the time or cutting down the compensation very largely, passed the bill allowing $22,050, which would be something about $50 instead of $150 a day.

It seems to me that, with these facts before the Senate, the Senate is as capable of judging on the merits of the claim as after it shall have been sent to another committee, where it will probably be snowed under and not be heard of during the rest of the session.

There is one consideration in all these cases which must strike every Senator. The importance of action is not as to the amount of relief you give; it is not the larger or the lesser sum; it is prompt relief. It is a reproach to our system of doing things, I think, not to individual Senators, that men and women come here when they are young and grow gray-haired waiting at the portals of the Capitol for that relief which perhaps after they have become gray-haired is found to be their due and is doled out to them, or it may be never is granted, although an examination would show that it is perfectly proper.

Now, this little claim, cut down to about one-fifth of the amount originally recommended after examination, to one-fourth of the amount recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and to about one-third of the amount recommended by the House Committee, it seems to me, ought to be acted upon promptly. If you send it to another committee after the examination that has been had, it will simply postpone it beyond the session, it may be to a to-morrow that will never come. I therefore hope we may have a vote on the bill, whatever may be its fate.

Mr. ALCORN. I trust this bill may be referred to the Committee on Claims; for as at present advised, if the vote is taken, I shall vote against it, and it might be on an investigation of the case I might be induced to go for it, and I should regret to do injustice on account of any knowledge that may be within my own breast.

I remember the Clara Dolson, if I am not mistaken, and I remember, too, that she was in the employ of the confederate government in the transportation of troops and supplies. I think I cannot mistake the facts in this case. There were a great many vessels, when the war began, that did not know exactly which side to be on, and there were a great many people who did not know which side to be on, who were willing to risk, however, the strong side of the case. The Clara Dolson, my impression is, was one of the vessels that took the chances of the southern confederacy, and when those chances failed sought an opportunity to place herself upon the other side; and if that be true, her owners ought not to be entitled here to compensation.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask the Senator at what time the chances failed so that the Clara Dolson took the stronger side?

Mr. ALCORN. I will give the Senator full information on that subject, and I state it now, so that if I am mistaken in what I say, I may hereafter be corrected, for I would not say that I may not be mistaken, though I think I cannot be.

The Clara Dolson remained in the employ of the confederate government until the city of Memphis had fallen into the Federal hands, until the Federal forces had taken possession of Memphis. Then it was that Federal forces also had possession of Vicksburgh. That was in the spring of 1862.

I remember upon the banks of the Mississippi River, one hundred miles south of Memphis, at the place where I reside, to have seen the Clara Dolson after the Federal forces had occupied Memphis, and I think too—but perhaps I may be mistaken about that—I was going to say after they had occupied Helena; but I am sure after they occupied Memphis I saw the Clara Dolson coming down the river in a very considerable hurry. That, I think, was in May, 1862. I am stating from memory, and may not be correct as to dates. These suspicious circumstances of her flight caused me to tarry upon the banks of the river for a time, and then I saw a tug-boat, which I took to be a tug in the Federal employ, chasing the Clara Dolson, and they went off down the river together. My judgment at the time was that the Clara Dolson desired to be captured. I thought that. My information subsequent to that time was that the tug-boat after a time came back towing the Clara Dolson up the river into the Federal lines; and that is, I judge, the way the Clara Dolson got back into the Federal lines.

In what I have said I answer the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania. If I am mistaken in what I have said, I speak it here that those who are interested in this claim may correct me before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOGY. I will not detain the Senate. I think it would be better, perhaps, to refer this bill to the Committee on Claims now. I think it will be made to appear that this vessel was in the service of the Government from early in 1862—May or June, 1862—until the end of the war. There is no doubt of the fact that at the beginning of the war the vessel was within the confederate lines, but she was not there with the consent of the owners beyond the fact that the owners had agreed that the boat should go to a certain point south before the lines were drawn between the northern and the southern army. She for a while did remain there, and here is the evidence of the fact in the order made by the judge of the district court in the southern district of Illinois:

> The Clara Dolson was condemned because of a voluntary trip made between New Orleans and Columbus, as stated in the agreed case, (Exhibit F.) In my opinion the Secretary of the Treasury may safely remit the forfeiture thus incurred, on the ground that the trip was made without the consent or connivance of the owners, the case showing that they were residents of a loyal portion of the United States, and it failing to show that they were guilty of any disloyal acts or practices.

The vessel was for awhile in the employment of the confederate forces, and it may be that the officers of the vessel might have been inclined that way, but the owners, who are the claimants here, never assented to it in any shape, way, or form.

However, sir, to avoid any consumption of time, and so that this matter may be thoroughly investigated, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALCORN. I would suggest that the honorable Senator present some testimony to show the reason why the Clara Dolson remained in the confederate lines from 1861, at the time the lines were drawn, up to May, 1862. I would wish to be informed on that point, to know why she did not escape, as she had plenty of opportunities; and why did her owners sleep on their loyalty for that long period of time?

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator from Missouri, who takes some kindly interest in this matter, desires the bill to go to the Committee on Claims, I shall certainly not object and shall ask the Senate to make that order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WHEELER HUBBELL.

Mr. CRAGIN. There is only one other bill that the committee designed to call up this morning, and in that case the report is some five pages of print, which will more than occupy the time left to the committee. It is a bill to settle for the inventions and patents of William Wheeler Hubbell, which is a very just case. In my judgment it ought to be considered; but seeing that it will be impossible to dispose of it in the time left this morning, as I understand the time of the committee lasts only five minutes longer, I shall give way now to allow the unfinished business to come up.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the bill (S. No. 1009) to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to make a special distribution of seeds.

ALEXANDER BURTCH.

Mr. WRIGHT. During the morning hour I called attention to a little bill that passed both Houses at the last session and has now passed the House of Representatives again, involving only eighty dollars. I trust the Senate will proceed to its consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4462) for the relief of Alexander Burtch. It directs the Adjutant-General of the Army to change the record of desertion against Alexander Burtch, late a veteran soldier of the First Iowa Artillery, and substitute therefor "absent from September 25, 1865." He is to be allowed the amount due to him up to the time of his absence from his regiment, but shall not be entitled to any bounty subsequently granted by the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3823) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (S. No. 170) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy who were dropped, furloughed, or retired under the act of February 28, 1855;

A bill (S. No. 448) for the relief of John T. Smith; and

A bill (S. No. 597) for the relief of William A. Griffin.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered, That the Committee on the Judiciary have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

ROSALIE C. P. LISLE.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 580) granting a pension to Rosalie C. P. Lisle, was indefinitely postponed. It was reported adversely on the 5th of January.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late to enter a motion to reconsider if the indefinite postponement was on the 5th of January; but it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. That is what I ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote indefinitely postponing the bill will be reconsidered. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. Now I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

SELF-GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution submitted by Mr. SCHURZ on the 8th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire what legislation by Congress is necessary to secure to the people of the State of Louisiana their right of self-government under the Constitution, and to report with the least possible delay by bill or otherwise.

Mr. JOHNSTON. When I yielded the floor on Friday I was referring to the action of the returning board, and had read some extracts from the report of the committee sent down by the House of Representatives to investigate affairs in Louisiana.

In regard to the parish of Iberia, which gave a conservative majority, they reported that the officer who should have had charge of the returns secreted himself and could not be found for twenty-four hours to receive the returns; and when he was found, after the expiration of the twenty-four hours, he refused to receive the returns, upon the ground they were not delivered to him in time; and yet the same officer afterward received other returns, giving the result to a republican member. They also report that in the parish of De Soto the returns showed a majority for the conservative candidate, and the board refused to count the vote of that parish. In Winn Parish, where there were four hundred and four conservative and one hundred and sixty-four republican votes, they rejected the vote of the parish altogether, and returned the radical candidate as elected. And after a full hearing of both sides, and a full and exhaustive examination of the testimony, the committee came to this conclusion in regard to the returning board:

Without now referring to other instances, we are constrained to declare that the action of the returning board, on the whole, was arbitrary, unjust, and, in our opinion, illegal; and that this arbitrary, unjust, and illegal action alone prevented the return by the board of a majority of conservative members of the lower house.

When the returning board got through its long session, lasting nearly two months, the results of its labors was that it made returns of one hundred and six members, the whole number of the House being one hundred and eleven. The other five, be it recollected—and I desire to have the Senate particularly observe and remember that—the other five persons were democrats and had returns from the commissioners of election, and their seats were not contested, but the returning board gave no certificates at all to the members from those parishes, and referred the question of who should be seated to the house itself. On the morning of the 4th of January the Legislature was to meet, and of course the day was anxiously expected. And when it came what a spectacle presented itself! Did we see the capitol of the State open and the citizens going quietly to witness the organization of their Legislature? On the contrary, on that morning the first sight that met the eye was the capitol of the State barricaded, the doors of the building guarded by armed policemen, and the streets around in the possession and occupancy of United States troops, eighteen hundred in number, with guns and bayonets. Nobody was permitted to approach or enter the capitol except at the pleasure of the military.

And though the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] called for information upon the special point as to how the troops came to be there, the President has given us no information. The President has not told us how it was that the officers of the United States Army were permitted to station troops in the city of New Orleans to prevent the citizens of the State and the people of the country from visiting that capitol on that day. The President's message is as silent as the grave as to how it was—by whose orders it was—that those troops came to be there on that day.

But the hour of meeting came. When it came the parties were nearly balanced. A ballot was taken for speaker. On that ballot, if we count only one hundred and six members as entitled to seats, fifty-four made a quorum; if we count one hundred and eleven, fifty-six were required. But there were no returns from five parishes, and only one hundred and six members had certificates, of which fifty-three were republicans and fifty-two democrats, and one reputed a fishy democrat. Then when the time for organization came on the vote was put. Mr. Wiltz received fifty-five votes, two were given to Hahn, and one blank. So that there were fifty-eight votes cast, more than a quorum, even if it be admitted that a quorum should be a majority of the whole number of a full house. Then the house proceeded to business—the five men elected from the parishes to which I have already referred were in their seats. After the house had been organized two or three hours and was proceeding quietly, General De Trobriand appeared in the capitol accompanied by troops. He appeared in obedience to this order from William P. Kellogg, claiming to be governor of the State of Louisiana:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, January 4, 1875.

General DE TROBRIAND, commanding:

An illegal assembly of men having taken possession of the house of representatives, and the police not being able to dislodge them, I respectfully request that you will immediately clear the hall and State-house of persons not returned as legal members of the house of representatives by the returning board of the State.

WM. P. KELLOGG, Governor.

KELLOGG TO GENERAL DE TROBRIAND.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, January 8, 1875.

General DE TROBRIAND:

The clerk of the house, who has in his possession the roll issued by the secretary of state as the legal members of the house of representatives, will point out to you those persons now in the hall of the house of representatives returned by the legal returning board of the State.

W. P. KELLOGG.

The propriety, legality, and constitutionality of that order are the questions under consideration. I insist that Governor Kellogg, as the governor of the State of Louisiana, admitting him to be such, admitting that he had a legal right to be and was governor of the State of Louisiana de jure as well as de facto, had no right to give this order under the constitution and laws of Louisiana. When may the United States be called upon to assist the State authorities? The Constitution expressly declares that the Legislature of the State when in session, or the governor of the State when the Legislature cannot be convened, may call in the aid of the United States to suppress domestic violence, and for that purpose only.

Now, I ask the Senate to say whether the order of the so-called Governor of Louisiana was a proceeding under the Constitution of the United States or justified by any of its provisions? He does not pretend to say any domestic violence exists; he does not pretend to say that these five persons were either then guilty of domestic violence or had it in contemplation. The whole purport of the order was that these five persons did not have any right to the seats they occupied, and for that reason, and that reason only, he asked the United States to eject them. He does not say "these men are subverting the government; these men are overthrowing the State constitution; these men are in rebellion against it; these men are guilty of domestic violence;" he says nothing of the sort, but he says "I undertake, as governor of the State, to violate the constitution that I have sworn to support, which makes each house the judge, and the sole judge, of the election of its own members; and I undertake to say who shall and who shall not have seats on the floor, and I call upon the Army of the United States to execute for me this unconstitutional decision. I call upon them to assist me in violating the constitution and laws of my own State and of the United States, by entering the State-house and declaring who shall and who shall not be members of the house of representatives, who are and who are not regularly elected members of that body and entitled to seats upon the floor." That is all; "only that and nothing more." His order, besides, contains upon its face a false statement. He says "an illegal assembly of men having taken possession of the State-house and the police not being able to dislodge them," &c. The police had not been called upon to dislodge them and had made no attempt to do so. There were only five unarmed and peaceable men to dislodge. The spectators and persons not claiming seats only numbered one hundred and twenty-seven by actual count. There were twenty-seven armed policemen present and eighteen hundred United States troops just outside. The police could as easily have ejected the five men as the troops did; but that did not suit the views of Kellogg and his allies. They wanted to enlist the whole power of the Government in their support, and therefore took advantage of the power given them by the President to bring in the troops and make them do the work of constables.

Mr. President, I submit whether under any state of things that order of Kellogg's was such a one as the governor of any State, de facto or de jure, had a right to make, and whether it was one that the President of the United States should have allowed the Army of the United States to obey and to execute? The constitutions of the States should be recognized by the President of the United States as well as the Constitution of the United States. It is no part of the duty or power of the President to decide who are and who are not members of a State Legislature. I insist that these five men had as much right to their seats as any other men in the body; and let us see whether that is not so. The constitution of the State of Louisiana guarantees to every part of it a right to representation. The parishes of Winn, Grant, De Soto, and Bienville were just as much entitled to representation as any other parishes in the State of Louisiana, and they could not be deprived of it without violence to the constitution and to the inherent rights of the people of the parishes as citizens of the State. The laws of the State of Louisiana provided that at the elections there should be commissioners of election in each parish, and that they should send up the returns to the returning board of the State, whose duty it was to canvass the returns.

Now, what are the facts in regard to this matter? The commissioners of election gave certificates of election to these five members from the parishes I have mentioned, all being conservatives. They all had a considerable majority, so great that there was no contest to their seats, nobody else claiming them. Then when the returns came to the returning board with these returns of the commissioners of elections giving the seats to the men who had obtained large majorities, against whom there was no protest and no contest, the returning board refused to give them certificates. Of course that action was arbitrary, contrary to law, and fraudulent. There being no contest, no written protest, and only one claimant to the seat, the returning board, unscrupulous and lawless as it was, seemed to shrink from audacity of giving returns to anybody else, and so they declared that they would not decide the question in regard to these parishes, and referred it to the house of representatives.

Even if they had attempted to seat other persons, they could not by that act have deprived the house of its constitutional right to decide upon its own members. The decisions of the returning board were not final, but were subject to revision and reversal at the hands of the house.

Mr. WEST. I trust the Senator will allow me to remind him that in one of those parishes the commissioners of election gave the return to a republican, and in one of the others there was a republican contestant. In the two democratic parishes there were no contestants; but the returns were rejected on account of alleged violence, and in the two other parishes there were republican contestants, and in one of those two republican parishes the commissioners had given a certificate of election to the republican.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I have seen no account anywhere of either protests or contests, and hear of them now for the first time from the Senator from Louisiana. The report of the House committee shows nothing of the sort. Here is what the committee says:

> So in the parish of De Soto, in which the returns showed a conservative elected by over one thousand majority, it was alleged that the supervisor of registration had brought the returns to New Orleans, and had left them with a woman of bad character, who offered to produce them on payment of $1,000. The conservative committee took legal proceedings to compel their production; but the court held that it had no jurisdiction to that end. They then caused to be produced before the board the duplicate of those returns from the office of the secretary of state, together with the tally-sheets, poll-lists, &c., filed there according to law. These duplicates corresponded exactly with the alleged result of the compiled returns which the said woman had produced; and of these alleged facts undisputed proof was also submitted to the board. Nevertheless the board refused to count the vote for that parish.

Again:

> So in Winn Parish, where 404 conservative and 164 republican votes were cast upon a verbal protest that the registrar of elections was not properly qualified, of which the only proof was that he had failed to forward his oath of office to the secretary of state—although there was no pretense that the election was not a fair representation of the will of the people—the whole vote of the parish was rejected, and the case referred to the Legislature.

In Terre Bonne the same, and in Bienville the same. Then, as these conservatives had returns from the commissioners of elections in the parishes, as the returning board did not act upon their cases at all, as the constitution guaranteed these parishes representation, as the returning board expressly referred the matter to the house, I ask when the Legislature was organized and did act upon the question and give these men their seats, why were they not as much entitled to them as anybody there? But I do not care whether they had been admitted or had not been admitted; I insist that there is no power in the President of the United States, in the governor of Louisiana, to pronounce, either before these men were seated or after they were seated, or at any time, whether they were entitled to their seats or not. The time makes no difference; it is a question of constitutional and legal right, and it is no answer to say that these men were not admitted properly or at the right time. I say no matter when the question comes up, either before or after they were qualified, it was equally a breach of the Constitution and laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of Louisiana for the President and the governor of Louisiana to undertake to decide upon their qualifications. I insist that they were there just as much entitled to their seats as any members of the body; and if they were not, there was only one body that could constitutionally unseat them, and that was the house itself.

So it was that these men were admitted. Upon the call of the governor, General De Trobriand marched in with files of soldiers, armed with muskets and bayonets. Everything was quiet in the hall; nobody was creating any disturbance; these five men were pointed out, were taken by the soldiers and ejected from the hall. They were not charged with any crime, because if they had been it would have been the duty of the officers to have kept them in custody and brought them to trial for a criminal offense; but they were simply led to the door and turned into the streets. The object was not to punish men for a crime either against the State or the United States. It could not have been that. If it were, they should have been arrested and regularly tried. But when they were simply taken out of their seats and turned into the street, we cannot suppose that anybody believed that those men were guilty of any breach of the laws of the United States or of the State of Louisiana, or contemplated any domestic violence or intended an overthrow of the government. When the five members were arrested the democrats left the hall, and let us now examine what then occurred.

It is a conceded fact, and reported by the committee of the House, that only fifty-three republicans had certificates from the returning board—a number not sufficient to make a quorum in any event. After the departure of the democrats, Vigers, the clerk of the last house, proceeded to call the roll, and the House committee tells us what then happened.

> Two democratic members had answered to their names when Wiltz interrupted the clerk and called upon the conservative members to refuse to answer and to leave the hall. The interruption over, Vigers began anew his roll-call, and obtained only fifty-two responses; but as the two democratic members had just before answered on the roll-call which was interrupted, he assumed it right to announce fifty-four members had answered to their names. Those who remained after Mr. Wiltz and his friends withdrew elected Hahn speaker by acclamation, and proceeded to the business of the Legislature. There was no subsequent roll-call by which the number of those members whose names were returned by the returning board and who still remained present at these deliberations could be determined.

The report shows that only fifty-three republican members had returns. There is no aspect in which fifty-three could be a quorum of the Legislature. It was not a quorum of those who had certificates; it was not a quorum of the whole number of the Legislature; and admitting the fact that the whole fifty-three republicans were all there present, though we know they were not, still there would be no quorum of the House; and yet the republicans proceeded to elect Hahn speaker and organize and claim to be a Legislature; and one of the first things they did was to seat men from these very parishes from which democrats had just been elected. It was conceded here by the Senator from Louisiana on Friday last that four men had been thus seated. These four men did not even have the returns of the commissioners of elections; they had no majority of the popular vote; they had no returns from the returning board; they were not admitted to their seats by a quorum of the house; and yet they are to-day holding seats without let or hinderance.

The governor, so called, of Louisiana says that the presence of those other five men admitted by the democrats constituted that body an illegal assembly of unauthorized persons and he ordered their expulsion. The President of the United States in his message says that they were a "mob," a "tumultuous and riotous assembly," and therefore properly expelled. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] said that they were "strangling a Legislature," whatever that means. But how is it now? We find that here are four men in the house, republicans, not having the tithe of a right to their seats that those five men had; and the governor does not say that is an "illegal assembly of unauthorized persons." The President of the United States does not designate them a "mob, or a tumultuous and riotous assembly;" and the Senator from Wisconsin does not accuse them of "strangling a Legislature." Why, sir, if those five democrats were wrongly there, are not these four republicans much more wrongly there? Where be your bayonets now, and why is it that the troops are not called in now, and "this illegal assembly of unauthorized persons," "this mob, this tumultuous, riotous assembly," expelled? There can be but one answer to the question, and that answer is that that the five men who were expelled were democrats and the four men admitted are republicans. That is the answer, and the only answer. If the purpose was only to maintain and vindicate the law and the Constitution, apply the same rule to all persons irrespective of political associations.

It cannot have escaped the attention of the Senate and the public that, although the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] which was adopted by this body, called upon the President to show by what authority and by whose orders the representatives from four parishes were expelled from their seats, you may look in vain in the message of the President and the papers accompanying it for any authority from anybody except the single order of Kellogg. The President does not tell us under what orders the troops of the United States came to be in Louisiana. He does not inform us what instructions were given to them when they were sent to the State. As far as we can gather from the whole case as it stands now, these troops were sent to the State of Louisiana, as the President himself says, without any order or without any instructions, and are there yet in the same way. Is that exercising the duties of Commander-in-Chief properly? According to the republicans in this body and elsewhere, that southern country is a powder-magazine, ready to explode at any moment. The President says that soldiers are not lawyers, and endeavors to excuse his officers on the ground of their ignorance of those plain provisions of the Constitution which every citizen who can read understands so well. But can he be permitted to offer the excuse of ignorance for himself and his Cabinet? When he leaves a body of ignorant officials, armed with so much power and clothed with so much responsibility in the midst of a community ready, it is said, to explode at any time, it is like putting a man with a lighted torch in his hands in a powder-magazine. And the country will not hold the President blameless for his failure to give these officers definite and specific instructions as to what they were to do, whose orders they were to obey, and what was to be their general scope of action. They have, it appears, been only told "go to Louisiana; do what Kellogg tells you to do." They were to obey Kellogg's orders, right or wrong—lawful or unlawful—constitutional or unconstitutional.

We have not been informed by whose order eighteen hundred soldiers were stationed in the streets of New Orleans on the morning of the 4th of January, nor who directed them to prevent the citizens of the State from going to visit their capitol.

The status of the United States troops this day in that southern country is properly a source of the greatest alarm to the whole community, North and South. It is the duty of the President, as chief executive officer of the United States, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, to protect everybody and keep the peace. If his generals do not know what the Constitution is, he should have them instructed. If they do not know what the law is, he should tell them what it is. He should tell them what orders of Kellogg they may legally obey. If they do not know their duty, he should not leave them there to excite at any time a riot by executing illegal, unconstitutional, and improper orders. General De Trobriand plainly must have had orders from some superior officer who had the right to direct him. He surely knew his duty well enough to know that Kellogg's orders as such were nothing to him, and could only be made binding on him by authority from the President. He would not have obeyed Kellogg at all unless he knew that it was sanctioned by those in authority; yet no such order is produced.

The President on that subject in his message says:

> Respecting the alleged interference by the military with the organization of the Legislature of Louisiana on the 4th instant, I have no knowledge or information which has not been received by me since that time and published. My first information was from the papers of the morning of the 5th of January. I did not know that any such thing was anticipated, and no orders nor suggestions were ever given to any military officer in that State upon that subject prior to the occurrence. I am well aware that any military interference by the officers or troops of the United States with the organization of the State Legislature or any of its proceedings, or with any civil department of the Government, is repugnant to our ideas of government. I can conceive of no case, not involving rebellion or insurrection, where such interference by authority of the General Government ought to be permitted or can be justified. But there are circumstances connected with the late legislative imbroglio in Louisiana which seem to exempt the military from any intentional wrong in that matter. Knowing that they had been placed in Louisiana to prevent domestic violence and aid in the enforcement of the State laws, the officers and troops of the United States may well have supposed that it was their duty to act when called upon by the governor for that purpose.

Here the President admits that these men, so ignorant as he says they were, were placed in Louisiana without "orders or suggestions." He himself tells us that he got his first information of the events of the 4th from the papers on the morning of the 5th. Perhaps his officers got their information in the same way—from the newspapers—for they seem to have no other source than that.

Those were the events of the day, and at nine o'clock at night General Sheridan, like a well-graced actor, steps upon the stage and immediately begins an active series of telegrams. His first is as follows:

> HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF MISSOURI,
> New Orleans, January 4.
>
> Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
> Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:
> It is with deep regret that I have to announce to you the existence in this State of a spirit of defiance to all lawful authority and an insecurity of life which is hardly realized by the General Government or country at large. The lives of citizens have become so jeopardized, that unless something is done to give protection to the people all security usually afforded by law will be overridden. Defiance to laws and murder of individuals seem to be looked upon by the community here from a stand-point which gives immunity to all who choose to indulge in either; and the civil government appears powerless to punish, or even arrest. I have to-night assumed control over the Department of the Gulf.
> P. H. SHERIDAN,
> Lieutenant-General.

That was on the 4th of January, at nine o'clock p. m. Then, on the next day, he sent the celebrated "banditti" dispatch—the dispatch in which he showed so much knowledge of the Constitution and laws of the country that he pretends to try to execute, and so much Christian charity. He says, in substance, "Let Congress declare them banditti, then they can be tried by a military commission, or let the President issue a proclamation declaring them banditti, and nothing else need be done except what would devolve upon me."

Sir, I say that you may search in vain for so much ignorance or so much disregard of the Constitution and laws of the United States in the same space as are to be found in that brief dispatch. Let us see if it is not so. His first proposition is, "If Congress will declare them banditti, I can try them by military commission." Who he means by "them" does not clearly appear. I lament that law-abiding general and profound constitutional lawyer had not pointed to the law under which he could try "banditti" by military commission. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] entertained us with a long definition and disquisition on the word "banditti." A bandit is a robber. He is not necessarily a rebel; he may be a warm supporter of the government. The Mexican banditti, I suppose, do not want that government overthrown, because it affords them the opportunity of practicing their profession; yet a bandit who is guilty of a violation of the civil law, and the civil law only, and who is liable to be tried by the civil tribunals, this learned general says you may try by a military commission. If there is any law of that sort, I should be much obliged to General Sheridan, or some of his advocates, to point out the law and let us see it. He does not want the law to take effect from the time of its passage and punish men for what they commit thereafter, but he wants it retroactive, to punish them for what they have done in the past; that is to say, he wants an ex post facto law; he wants some power to punish them for what they have done in the past not punishable by existing laws, and he desires, therefore, to have a plain breach of one of the best provisions of the Constitution, namely, that no ex post facto law shall be passed. But that is not the only provision of the Constitution which he desires to have disregarded and set at naught. That instrument provides that no man shall be held to answer a criminal charge except upon indictment or presentment, and that he shall have the right of a trial by a jury. Yet he wants no presentment nor indictment and no trial by jury.

But this is not all. He suggests to the President, "You declare them banditti by your proclamation, and if you will do that, then nothing else need be done except what devolves upon me. I will do the rest."

The House committee tell us the purposes of the White Leagues and what description of men General Sheridan wants declared banditti:

> In this connection we refer to the White League mentioned in the message of the President. In the last campaign of Louisiana the opposition was composed of various elements—democrats, reformers, dissatisfied republicans, liberal republicans, old whigs; and in order to induce the co-operation of all, some of whom refused to unite with an organization called democratic, they took the name of "the people's party," called in some localities "the conservative party;" in others, "the white man's party;" in others, "the White League;" and had ordinary political clubs under these names throughout the rural districts, which were ordinary political clubs and nothing more; neither secret nor armed nor otherwise different from usual political organizations. These must not, however, be confounded from similarity of name with the White League of the city of New Orleans.
> That league is an organization composed of different clubs, numbering in all between twenty-five and twenty-eight hundred; the members of which have provided arms for themselves, and with or without arms engage in military drill. They have no uniforms, and the arms are the property of the individuals, not of the organization. They comprise a large number of reputable citizens and property-holders in the city of New Orleans. Their purpose they declare to be simply protective; a necessity occasioned by the existence of leagues among the blacks; by the hostility with which the Kellogg government arrayed the black against the white race; and by the want of security to peaceable citizens and their families, which existed for those reasons, and because, also, of the peculiar formation of the police brigade.

This dispatch of General Sheridan naturally called forth responses from the people, who felt themselves outraged by it. Among the persons who made answers were the clergy of New Orleans—Catholics, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, and members of the Jewish creed. All of these men, leading Christian and holy lives, come forward and deny these wholesale charges of General Sheridan, and General Sheridan cannot even treat them with the respect their religion and station demand; for his dispatch of January 8 says sneeringly:

> To W. W. BELKNAP,
> Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:
>
> I shall send you this evening a report of affairs as they actually occurred here on the 4th instant. My telegram to you of that date and those of the 5th and 6th instant are so truthful of the condition of affairs in this section and strike so near the water-line, that the ministers of the Gospel and others are appealed to to keep the ship from sinking. Human life has been held too cheaply in this State for many years.
>
> P. H. SHERIDAN,
> Lieutenant-General.

He is not content with aspersing the people in general terms: but when Christian ministers interpose a remonstrance to his slander, he must needs respond in a telegram to go over the world that these men are called upon, not because they believe they are telling what is true upon their honors and their consciences, but because they are engaged in a partisan scheme merely to sustain a sinking cause!

These were the dispatches of General Sheridan up to this time. He has been excused by the President, and by his friends in the Senate, upon the ground that he was a soldier; that he was not very well informed about the Constitution and the laws of the United States, nor skilled in the use of language, but that, according to the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] "he wrote as he felt," and, therefore, his dispatches must not be too closely criticised. But no worse apology could have been offered for him. His apologists had much better have declared that he did not mean what he said. But if he is to be excused for what cannot be openly justified, on the ground of ignorance both of law and language, the Senators who excuse him upon that ground will not offer the same excuse for the President and his Cabinet; for, observe, General Sheridan did not take command, according to his own showing, until nine o'clock on the night of the 4th. He had done nothing up to that time but send telegrams up to the time of the dispatch of the Secretary of War dated January 6. He had given no orders, but other generals were in command when the events of the 4th took place. What did the Administration say about that? On the 6th, two days after, the Secretary of War telegraphs:

Your telegrams all received. The President and all of us have full confidence, and thoroughly approve your course.

And, not content with one telegram, for fear that it might not be emphatic enough and that Sheridan might not understand how fully, how deeply, and how profoundly the President and Cabinet approved his course, the Secretary on the same day says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January, 6, 1875.

General P. H. SHERIDAN,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

I telegraphed you hastily to-day, answering your dispatch. You seem to fear that we had been misled by biased or partial statements of your acts. Be assured that the President and Cabinet confide in your wisdom and rest in the belief that all acts of yours have been and will be judicious. This I intended to say in my brief telegram.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Then, as General Sheridan had done nothing but send dispatches, as his principal act had been his "banditti" dispatch, as he had given no order, and as the President and Cabinet sent two telegrams the same day emphatically approving him, what did the President and Cabinet approve? They approved the proposition to pass an ex post facto law; they approved the proposition to try men who, if guilty of any crime at all, were guilty of a civil offense, by military commission; they approved the proposition that a man should be taken up and tried by a military commission when the Constitution of the United States gives him the right to be tried by a jury; they approved the proposition that a man should be tried for a criminal offense without an indictment or a presentment by a grand jury; and finally, they approved the intemperate and lawless suggestion that the President should by his proclamation declare certain classes banditti, and leave the rest to General Sheridan. I presume that they will not be allowed to say, "We are not lawyers; we do not know what the Constitution is; we do not know what the rights of the citizens are." Though they say that of General Sheridan they cannot say that of themselves, and they must be written down before the world as having willfully erred when they knew better and of having given their approval and support to illegal and unconstitutional suggestions and propositions.

But General Sheridan was not quite done. He sent a long dispatch purporting to give an account of the situation. He says in one part of it:

I repeatedly heard threats of assassinating the governor, and regrets expressed that he was not killed on the 14th of September last; also threats of the assassination of republican members of the house, in order to secure the election of a democratic speaker.

After such a statement as that it behooved the friends of General Sheridan to say in his defense that he did not understand the meaning of language. If he really meant to say that he heard such threats with his own ears, the statement is incredible. The man must be credulous indeed who believes that the people of New Orleans made such declarations and threats in Sheridan's presence and hearing. It is scarcely possible that he could mean that he heard them himself; he must have meant that he heard them through others. That he is far from being choice or considerate in the uses of phrases is exhibited in the manner in which he describes another event, about which he could not know anything of his own knowledge. Yet one would suppose he was ready to swear to it in a court of justice. He says:

I knew of the kidnaping by banditti of Mr. Cousinier, one of the members-elect of the Legislature.

The report of the committee rather takes issue with him upon that point. He knows so little about it that he does not even know the name of the man whom he says was kidnaped. He puts it down as Mr. Cousinier, the real name of the man being Cousin and the report of the committee states the fact about that. Here is what the report says:

The republicans claimed that one of their members, A. G. Cousin, had been kidnaped and forcibly taken to a district parish to prevent his presence at the organization of the house. Your committee was about to investigate this charge, when in public session it was claimed by the democratic counsel and admitted by the republican counsel, that the arrest was under legal process and by the hands of the sheriff. It was further claimed, and not denied, that the privilege of his office did not shield him from arrest. The charge was embezzlement.

So far from this man being arrested by what General Sheridan calls the banditti, he was arrested by legal process. A warrant was issued by one of Kellogg's own officers and he was seized by one of Kellogg's sheriffs, and General Sheridan was perhaps not far wrong in charging that "banditti" had him.

The President in his message says:

Nobody was disturbed by the military who had a legal right at that time to occupy a seat in the Legislature.

I protest against the President, in response to a resolution asking only a statement of facts, undertaking to say in his message who has or has not a legal right to a seat in the Legislature of Louisiana. That is a thing to be settled by the Legislature only, and it is out of the province of the President to volunteer any opinion on this subject. He was asked who gave orders under which the soldiers entered the capitol of Louisiana and put out certain persons. In response to that he tells us that nobody was taken out that had a right there. The Senate did not ask him who had or who had not a right there, because such a request would have stultified this body. Where in the Constitution or the laws is there anything justifying the President to pronounce an opinion on that subject and then undertake to enforce that opinion with the armed soldiery? The claim of such a right was nothing short of assumption, and its execution nothing but usurpation.

The President also in his message makes this positive statement:

That there was intimidation of republican voters at the election, notwithstanding these precautions, admits of no doubt.

Let us see how the report of the committee, who were there upon the ground and examined witnesses, agrees with him. When they went there the parties who were interested in the contest selected certain parishes as specimen parishes. The republicans say, "These are the facts in a certain parish." The democrats say, "Let us take them then as specimen parishes, and instead of going over the whole State look in the question as to whether there was intimidation in them or not." The parish of Rapides was one of the selected parishes, and here is what the committee says about that:

It so happens that that parish was taken as a sample parish of intimidation. Many witnesses from both parties were examined in reference to it; they show beyond question that there was a free, full, fair, and peaceable election and registration there.

The President says there can be no doubt of intimidation. The committee say that there was a free, full, fair, and peaceable election; and say—

There was no evidence of any intimidation of voters practiced on the day of election, although it was asserted that intimidation of colored men before election had been effected by threats of refusal to employ them, or discharge them, if they voted the republican ticket. No evidence, either of discharge or of refusal to employ, was produced. Certain witnesses, themselves every one office-holders, testified generally to such action; but hardly any one was able to specify a single instance in which he heard of any employer so threatening or discharging any voter, or knew of any employé being so threatened or discharged. Not one single colored man throughout the entire parish was produced to testify, either to such a threat or to the execution of such a purpose, whether before or after the election.

Now let the country put these two statements in contrast. Here is a positive statement of the President declaring that there is no doubt of intimidation. On the other side is the report of the committee, made upon the ground, formed from examining the testimony of persons who were there, some of whom were United States officers, who testify that the election was free, full, fair, and peaceable. The general statement was that the air was full of intimidation, as General Sheridan says it was of assassination; but when the committee asked the witness, "Who was intimidated, where was he intimidated, by whom was he intimidated, when was he intimidated, how was he intimidated?" he could not tell. Witnesses appeared and were ready to swear republican voters were intimidated; that negroes were kept away from the polls, were not allowed to register nor to vote; but when a "bill of particulars" was called for, and names, dates, places, and specific acts demanded, they were not forthcoming.

But was there no intimidation on the other side? If a colored man wanted to exercise the right of a freeman and vote the conservative ticket, could he safely do so? He could not, for the committee says:

On the other hand, it was in evidence that blacks who sought to act with the conservative party were on their part sometimes exposed to enmity and abuse. In the interior, one colored man was shot for making a conservative speech; and in New Orleans, it appeared from the testimony that colored men who sought to co-operate with the conservatives were subject to so much abuse from the police, and otherwise, that an association of lawyers volunteered to protect them, but with little effect.

Not the colored people only but the police—Kellogg's police—the paid and sworn guardians of the people and custodians of the peace, visited abuse upon the colored man whose inclinations and judgment led him to the conservative party. That is the way the question of intimidation stands in the State of Louisiana. The only intimidation proved was of colored men—whose rights the republican party claim to defend exclusively—who wanted to vote as they pleased.

The President, following up his line of excuse and extenuation, says in his message:

If error has been committed by the Army in these matters, it has always been on the side of the preservation of good order, the maintenance of law, and the protection of life.

"Always on the side of maintenance of law?" Is it on the side of the maintenance of law for the President to decide who were entitled to seats in the Legislature of Louisiana? Is it on the side of maintenance of law that Kellogg's orders in that respect should be obeyed? Is it on the side of maintenance of order that soldiers should march into a State-house in which a Legislature was organized, or was trying to organize, and seize persons claiming to be members? Is it in maintenance of law that the streets of a city should be barricaded and no one be allowed to pass except at the pleasure of the soldiery? Is it in the maintenance of law that the doors of the capitol should be guarded by armed police? These be the ideas of the President as to how to maintain law!

It is not only in Louisiana that the President and his soldiers "maintain the law." They have extended the sphere of their operations into Mississippi, and not only make and unmake legislators but make and unmake sheriffs. Witness the following dispatch from Vicksburgh:

VICKSBURGH, January 18.

Major George E. Head, with a squad of Federal troops with fixed bayonets, acting, it is said, under orders from General Emory, to-day entered the sheriff's office here, and forcibly ejected Sheriff A. J. Flanagan, who is in possession by virtue of the recent election, about which there is a constitutional question. His right to the office has not, however, been questioned by any legal proceedings. The military appear to have acted under Army orders alone. Major Head reported his action to Chancellor Hill, who was holding court in an adjacent room, by whom the action of the military was countenanced and seemingly approved. Sheriff Flanagan also reported the facts to Chancellor Hill, and appealed to the court to protect him in the discharge of his duties, which request was refused.

"The action of the troops has been always in behalf of the maintenance of the law!" Here is a man elected sheriff by the people, inducted into office, quietly performing its duties, the question of his right undergoing judicial investigation. But the soldiers are prompt people; they cannot await the slow movements of a court, so they "maintain the law" by wresting the case from the courts and by driving the sheriff from his office into the street. By whose orders was this done? The President's; Governor Ames's; General Sheridan's; Collector Casey's; Marshal Packard's; Attorney-General Williams's;—all of whom have at times had command of the Army. If all this was done without the knowledge of the President and is esteemed unlawful by him, why have not the guilty officers been rebuked and punished?

The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in his speech on Friday went into the past for the purpose of showing that there once existed in the South an order known as the Ku-Klux, which he says were guilty of enormous offenses. The Ku-Klux, like the dodo, are an extinct race. Not one can now be found on the North American continent. Yet so illogical and inconsequential are the arguments of the honorable Senator and his political friends that the mere former existence of the Ku-Klux is made a reason to justify interference with the Louisiana Legislature.

What connection have the two things? How is it that the former existence of the Ku-Klux justified the removal of five democrats from their places in the Louisiana house of representatives? They reason also that murder goes unpunished in the South, and insist that therefore these five democrats should have been ejected; that four thousand murders have been committed since the war in Lousiana, and therefore that the five democrats must be turned out of the hall; that a new order called the White League has sprung into existence, therefore the five democrats cannot be permitted to stay in their seats; that negroes are intimidated, and therefore the five democrats must go; that the very air is impregnated with assassination, therefore the five democrats cannot be longer tolerated.

Never were premises and conclusions further apart. Nothing of all the various excuses alleged affords the slightest justification for the act we complain of.

It is claimed by our republican friends that crime in Louisiana meets with no punishment, that the democrats enjoy an entire immunity for their offenses, and that the law is hopelessly powerless. If that be so, and if the purpose and desire of the democrats be as is charged to weed out the negroes, it can be done with entire success under Kellogg's administration, and why should the democrats want a change of government? But if the democrats have such a hellish purpose, how would they be assisted by having a democratic majority in one house of the Legislature? The senate and the executive department being in the hands of the republicans, a democratic house could pass no laws to protect democratic murderers, nor provide a statute for the speedy extinction of the negro. Suppose the object had been to get an entire democratic government in all its branches; still, according to the charges made on the other side of the Chamber, that democratic government could not do less toward punishing crime than the republicans have done and are doing. If the purpose was merely to escape punishment for crime, there would be no object in changing the government; Kellogg was the best man to be had for that purpose.

Mr. President, the reasons and excuse advanced are all idle. They have no connection with the act done. They afford no pretext for it. There is not one pretext. The whole thing was done, not to insure law and order in Louisiana, not for the purpose of protecting the colored people, but for one purpose and one purpose only; and that was to keep a republican majority in the Legislature of Louisiana; to retain the ascendency of the republican party at all hazards, and, if necessary to that end, to subvert the constitution, make the military force the government in fact, and utterly obliterate the last vestige of civil liberty.

Mr. Lincoln, who had an intuitive wisdom, never exhibited it in a greater degree than when he said in his inaugural address:

Where hostility to the United States in any interior locality shall be so great and so universal as to prevent competent resident citizens from holding the Federal offices, there will be no attempt to force obnoxious strangers among the people for that object.

I do not believe there is hostility to the Government of the United States in the Southern States. But how has the wise and kind advice of the man almost canonized by the northern people been respected? I of course speak in general terms; but as a class, with some honorable exceptions, there has never been in any country government officials so ignorant, so insolent, so incompetent, so dishonest, so justly "obnoxious" to the people as those sent to the South since the war. Collectors, assessors, marshals, deputy marshals, detectives, spies, district attorneys, all seemed to believe they represented in their own persons the whole Government of the United States, and were ready, if a southern man but came between the wind and their nobility, to unfurl the flag of the United States and call in the Army and Navy. They neglected the duties of their offices to meddle in politics; they exasperated by every means in their power the blacks against the whites.

History offers us an example which it would be well for the republican party to take notice of, and that is the conduct of England with regard to Wales. We find it detailed fully in the speech of Mr. Burke on conciliation with America. I have had occasion to read the same extract to the Senate before, but it is so applicable to the present question that I will read some portion of the speech now. He said:

My next example is Wales. This country was said to be reduced by Henry III. It was said more truly to be so by Edward I. But though then conquered, it was not looked upon as any part of the realm of England. Its old constitution, whatever that might have been, was destroyed; and no good one was substituted in its place. The care of that tract was put into the hands of lords marchers—

These lord marchers being a sort of carpet-baggers sent down from England—

a form of government of a very singular kind; a strange heterogeneous monster, something between hostility and government; perhaps it has a sort of resemblance, according to the modes of those times, to that of commander-in-chief at present, to whom all civil power is granted as secondary.

The manners of the Welsh nation followed the genius of the government; the people were ferocious, restive, savage, and uncultivated; sometimes composed, never pacified. Wales, within itself, was in perpetual disorder, and it kept the frontier of England in perpetual alarm. Benefits from it to the state there were none. Wales was only known to England by incursion and invasion.

Sir, during that state of things Parliament was not idle. They attempted to subdue the fierce spirit of the Welsh by all sorts of rigorous laws. They prohibited by statute the sending all sorts of arms into Wales, as you prohibited by proclamation (with something more of doubt on the legality) the sending arms to America—

That is one thing Kellogg did. He prohibited the sending of arms to the State of Louisiana, arrested people, and searched their houses for arms, and seized their arms—

They disarmed the Welsh by statute, as you attempted (but still with more question on the legality) to disarm New England by an instruction. They made an act to drag offenders from Wales into England for trial, as you have done (but with more hardship) with regard to America. By another act, where one of the parties was an Englishman, they ordained that his trial should be always by English. They made acts to restrain trade, as you do; and they prevented the Welsh from the use of fairs and markets, as you do the Americans from fisheries and foreign ports. In short, when the statute-book was not quite so much swelled as it is now, you find no less than fifteen acts of penal regulation on the subject of Wales.

Here we rub our hands—a fine body of precedents for the authority of Parliament and the use of it! I admit it fully; and pray add likewise to those precedents, that all the while Wales rid this kingdom like an incubus; that it was an unprofitable and oppressive burden; and that an Englishman traveling in that country could not go six yards from the high road without being murdered.

The march of the human mind is slow. Sir, it was not, until after two hundred years, discovered that by an eternal law Providence had decreed vexation to violence and poverty to rapine. Your ancestors did, however, at length open their eyes to the ill husbandry of injustice. They found that the tyranny of a free people could of all tyrannies the least be endured; and that laws made against a whole nation were not the most effectual methods for securing its obedience. Accordingly, in the twenty-seventh year of Henry VIII, the course was entirely altered. With a preamble stating the entire and perfect rights of the crown of England, it gave to the Welsh all the rights and privileges of English subjects. A political order was established; the military power gave way to the civil; the marches were turned into counties. But that a nation should have a right to English liberties, and yet no share at all in the fundamental security of these liberties—the grant of their own property—seemed a thing so incongruous that eight years after—that is, in the thirty-fifth of that reign—a complete and not ill-proportioned representation by counties and boroughs was bestowed upon Wales by act of Parliament. From that moment, as by a charm, the tumults subsided; obedience was restored; peace, order, and civilization followed in the train of liberty. When the day star of the English constitution had arisen in the hearts, all was harmony within and without.

Does not that describe exactly the course of this Government toward the State of Louisiana? Look at our statute-book, full of penal legislation directed exclusively against the South. Should not this Government profit by that example? Let these people alone; let them govern themselves.

A form of government of a very singular kind; a strange heterogeneous monster, something between hostility and government, with a sort of resemblance, according to the modes of those times, to that of commander-in-chief at present.

Here we have a prophetic picture of the mixed government in Louisiana now carried on by Kellogg and General Sheridan.

The House committee on Louisiana gives us this account:

The general condition of affairs in the State of Louisiana seems to be as follows: The conviction has been general among the whites, since 1872, that the Kellogg government was a usurpation. This conviction among them has been strengthened by the acts of the Kellogg legislature abolishing existing courts and judges, and substituting others presided over by judges appointed by Kellogg, having extraordinary and exclusive jurisdiction over political questions; by changes in the laws, centralizing in the governor every form of political control, including the supervision of the elections; by continuing the returning board, with absolute power over the returns of elections; by the extraordinary provisions enacted for the trial of titles and claims to office; by the conversion of the police force, maintained at the expense of the city of New Orleans, into an armed brigade of State militia, subject to the command of the governor; by the creation in some places of monopolies in markets, gas-making, water-works, and ferries, cleaning vaults and removing filth, and doing work as wharfingers; by the abolition of courts with elective judges, and the substitution of other courts with judges appointed by Kellogg, in evasion of the constitution of the State; by enactments punishing criminally all persons who attempted to fill official positions unless returned by the returning-board; by unlimited appropriations for the payment of militia expenses and for the payment of legislative warrants, vouchers, and checks issued during the years 1870 and 1872; by laws declaring that no persons in arrears for taxes after default published shall bring any suit in any court of the State or be allowed to be a witness in his own behalf—measures which, when coupled with the extraordinary burdens of taxation, have served to vest, in the language of Governor Kellogg's counsel, "a degree of power in the governor of a State scarcely exercised by any sovereign in the world."

With this conviction is a general want of confidence in the integrity of the existing State and local officials—a want of confidence equally in their purposes, and in their personnel—which is accompanied by the paralyzation of business and destruction of values. The most hopeful witness produced by the Kellogg party, while he declared that business was in a sounder condition than ever before, because there was less credit, has since declared that "there was no prosperity." The securities of the State have fallen in two years from 70 or 80 to 25; of the city of New Orleans from 80 or 90 to 30 or 40, while the fall in bank shares, railway shares, city and other corporate companies have in a degree corresponded. Throughout the rural districts of the State the negroes, reared in habits of reliance upon their masters for support, and in a community in which the members are always ready to divide the necessaries of life with each other, not regarding such action as very evil, and having immunity from punishment from the nature of the local officials, had come to filching and stealing fruit, vegetables, and poultry, so generally, as Bishop Wilmarth stated without contradiction from any source, that the raising of these articles had to be entirely abandoned, to the great distress of the white people, while within the parishes, as well as in New Orleans, the taxation had been carried almost literally to the extent of confiscation. In New Orleans the assessors are paid a commission for the amount assessed, and houses and stores are to be had there for the taxes. In Natchitoches the taxation reached about 8 per cent. of the assessed value on the property. In many parishes all the white republicans and all the office-holders belong to a single family. There are five of the Greens in office in Lincoln; there are seven of the Boults in office in Natchitoches.

The southern people have no thought of overthrowing the Government of the United States nor of oppressing or injuring the black race. They desire only to be permitted, without the constant interference of the Army of the United States, to carry on their own private and domestic affairs and their own local self-government. That done, I have no doubt quiet and content will follow, and we will have peace.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. President, I ask consent, as bearing on this subject, to present a resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, relative to the action of General Sheridan in Louisiana. I desire that it be read and laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 20, in relation to the action of Lieutenant-General Philip H. Sheridan, at New Orleans, Louisiana.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Mississippi, (the house of representatives concurring,) That the action of Lieutenant-General Philip H. Sheridan, since assuming control of the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, as part of the military district of Missouri, has been such as should meet with the approval of all law-abiding and peace-loving citizens in the land.

Be it further resolved, That we believe, if the policy enunciated by his letters be carried out, not only will murderers who have long escaped justice be punished for their crimes, but that peace and security for life and property will follow, and that every citizen will be enabled to peacefully enjoy the privileges guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, which up to the present time they have been unable to enjoy in large portions of the above mentioned States.

Be it further resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, and one copy to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Concurred in by the house of representatives January 12, 1875.

I. D. SHADD,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 12, 1875.

A. K. DAVIS,
President of the Senate.

Approved.

A. AMES, Governor.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. President, the subject under consideration has developed one of the most remarkable, and I may say anomalous discussions known in the annals of congressional debates.

On the 5th instant the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] introduced a resolution calling upon the President of the United States to inform the Senate whether any portion of the Army or any officer or soldier thereof had interfered, intermeddled, or in any manner controlled the recent organization of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana; and, if so, by what authority such military intervention had taken place.

For one week we were entertained with a series of speeches from the democratic side of this Chamber, arraigning the President before the American people and the world; denouncing him as a tyrant who had trampled under his feet the Constitution he had solemnly sworn to uphold; as ruthlessly striking down the liberties of the people with the mailed arm of military power.

Why, sir, from the fearful pictures drawn representing the dangers which menace our free institutions growing out of the President's action in Louisiana, characterized by one Senator as "worse than oriental despotism," by another as "Cæsarism," I confess that I was somewhat startled, and felt like joining Senators in their righteous indignation and appealing to the American people to rise in their majesty and hurl the despot from his throne. The senior Senator from Delaware portrayed the President as having already folded around himself the robes of a military dictator, erected his throne, and, Cromwell like, he might at any time march his soldiery into this Chamber and disperse the Senate. From the consternation depicted on the countenances of our democratic friends it seemed as if they had indeed seen the "mysterious handwriting upon the wall," and that the days of the Republic were numbered.

The President was not the only victim of this wholesale denunciation, but vials of democratic wrath were poured out without stint upon the heads of the Secretary of War and the Lieutenant-General of the Army, the gallant soldier and noble hero, Sheridan. His dispatch of ten lines, clothed not in the guarded diction of a statesman or of one learned in constitutional law, but in the language of a practical soldier, had caused a howl from the White League banditti of the South, a hiss from the copperhead democracy of the North, and a general wail and clamor along the entire rebel line from Tammany to Texas. The anomalous feature of the whole proceeding is, that the charges preferred against the President, the Army officers and soldiers, the wholesale denunciation of the republican party, were based upon rumors and partisan newspaper reports.

There was not a republican Senator who was not ready and willing to vote for the resolution without interposing an objection, save in the mere form or phraseology. The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] submitted an amendment so as to make the resolution conform to the phraseology usually adopted in resolutions of that character. I say we were not only ready and willing but anxious to obtain the information sought. We were not prepared, however, to adopt the plan pursued by our democratic friends—that of condemning the President or General Sheridan without a hearing, or pass sentence of impeachment and try them afterward.

The resolution was adopted; and while the Senate was awaiting the response of the President, the honorable Senator from Missouri introduced the pending resolution as the basis of an elaborate oration, which the Senator informed us had been prepared in no partisan spirit, but with calm deliberation and studied impartiality. The opinions thus formed, and digested in an atmosphere high above party strife, he proposed to deliver in mild and temperate language. Occupying a position serenely above the clouds which obscure the vision of less far-seeing statesmen, he had taken in the full situation at a glance, and been thus enabled to frame a judgment not to be influenced by any official facts, nor modified by a more comprehensive knowledge of the circumstances and surroundings. He had tried the President, found the condemnation, and proceeded to pass sentence with judicial fairness, without a hearing and before conviction. Sir, I submit that the Senator's speech was more sweeping in its assumptions and more vindictive in spirit than any other democratic speech which had preceded it in this debate. Why, sir, he openly assumed that the President had willfully violated the Constitution which he had sworn to obey and defend, and pronounced a malediction against him without a jot or tittle of official information; and this the Senator calls calm and dispassionate criticism upon the President's action. Such, sir, has been the character of this debate; such the animus that seems to have prompted it; such the spirit in which it has been conducted. And, sir, it is no exaggeration to say that the discussion has developed a degree of party passion, of partisan hatred, based upon prejudged opinions, and has been characterized by a measure of unfairness, bitterness, and recklessness of calumny that is wholly without precedent in the history of senatorial debate.

Mr. President, I now pass to the consideration of the questions involved in the Louisiana case, with a profound sense of the magnitude and gravity of the interests involved, particularly in its relations to the present and future welfare of the South.

The President of the United States, promptly responding to the resolution of the Senate, has laid before us his message. The character and tone of this message have been highly complimented by a distinguished democratic Senator [Mr. SAULSBURY] on this floor. All agree that it contains a fair and full response to the inquiries propounded by the Senate.

Instead of any attempt being made by the President to interfere with the government of Louisiana, to interfere with the organization of a Legislature in that State, instead of an attempt to overthrow that State government by military interference, the President did nothing more than was required of him under the Constitution of the country, required of him under the oath he has taken to support that Constitution and see that the laws of the country are faithfully executed. It turns out that he upheld liberty as against licentiousness; it turns out by this report that the President sustained a law-abiding majority in the State of Louisiana against a lawless minority. It appears that the President, upon the requisition of the governor of Louisiana, ordered troops to be sent to that State to protect it against domestic violence.

It appears that in September last a rebellion, a revolution, obtained in the city of New Orleans, the object of which was to overthrow the State government. Eight or ten thousand armed men were in the streets of that city setting at defiance the laws of the State, compelling the governor to seek refuge in the custom-house to preserve his life. This armed body of men, it further appears, had stolen the arms that belonged to the State government, and they maintained this attitude toward the government from September up to the 4th of January. They had, to be sure, dispersed apparently, but they held in their possession the arms they had stolen from the government; they maintained their organization; they were ready at a moment's warning to spring forth again into open revolt and overthrow constituted authority and plunge the State into anarchy and revolution.

I shall not attempt in this discussion to go into the details of the history of the State of Louisiana and its government for the last three or four years. Suffice it to say that a government has existed in Louisiana. It has been a government republican in form, if not in essence. It has had the machinery of a republican government. It has had a governor, and that governor has been recognized by the United States Government as the governor of that State. Whether he was the governor de jure or not I shall not attempt at this time to argue. I will say, however, in passing, that from my knowledge of the situation, based not only upon official facts, but also upon personal knowledge and observation, I have a belief which amounts to an absolute conviction that William Pitt Kellogg and the other State officers of Louisiana, now recognized by the President of the United States as the legal government thereof, represent the popular will of the people of that State as expressed at the polls in the election of 1872; and that they were elected by a majority of the votes actually cast, and had the election been fairly held would have received no less than 20,000 more votes than the ticket headed by John McEnery and Penn. But, sir, he was governor de facto. The question of his election had been expressly passed upon by the highest judicial tribunal in the State, and the government of which he was the head had been adjudicated to be the legal government of the State. The President of the United States, following immemorial usage, had recognized that government; it was also recognized by one branch of Congress by the admission of Representatives to their seats.

The President promptly submitted in an official message the fact that he had recognized what is known as the Kellogg government, with the grounds which prompted such recognition, urging, if it entertained any doubt as to the legal character of that government, to take such legislative action as would place the question beyond the reach of controversy. It was the duty of Congress under the Constitution to secure to Louisiana a government republican in form, and either have confirmed the President's action or to have unmistakably affirmed its dissent therefrom. That Congress took no such action was at least a tacit confirmation of the President's position, and that the President was bound to recognize the governor who, under the laws of the State, by the courts of the State, had been declared the lawful governor, and was in the actual exercise of the functions of the office.

We turn now to what took place in that State on the 4th day of January, 1875, and here we find an event that has brought the democratic party all over this country suddenly to their feet. An outcry has been raised that a terrible outrage was committed. An attempt was made by the General Government to subvert the civil authorities of the State with Federal bayonets. Soldiers have entered, it is claimed, a legislative hall and prevented the Legislature from organizing. Now, sir, what are the facts in that case? It turns out that, so far from the military attempting to interfere with the organization of a Legislature in the State of Louisiana, the military were ordered by the governor of that State to quell a riot, to preserve the peace. It turns out that under the laws of that State the Legislature, or men elected to the Legislature, attempted on that day to organize the Legislature. Under the law of Louisiana the legislative body consisted of those men who were elected in the several parishes and the returns of whose election had been examined by a board, the duty of which was to canvass thoroughly these election returns and submit a roll of such returns to the secretary of state, and the secretary of state was to furnish the old clerk of the house with a copy of these returns. Such a copy was furnished to Mr. Vigers, the old clerk of the former legislative body, and the Legislature proceeded to organize.

It appears that on that roll submitted one hundred and six members of the Legislature had been elected in the several parishes of that State. This roll contained the only legal evidence of their election. Through many vicissitudes and dangers, both "by land and by sea," the members-elect finally assembled in the place assigned to organize the Legislature. They proceeded according to law to take the initiatory steps to an organization. The roll was called and one hundred and two members answered to their names. While they were in process of organizing, while the clerk of the old house, who under the law of Louisiana was to occupy the position of the presiding officer of that body until a speaker should be elected, it appears that a member from the parish of Lafourche sprang to his feet and placed in nomination one Mr. Wiltz, former mayor of the city of New Orleans, as temporary speaker. The law of Louisiana recognizes no such proceeding and knows no such officer. The law regulating the organization of the Legislature of Louisiana is the same, copied almost verbatim et literatim, as the law regulating the organization of the House of Representatives in Congress. Under that law and under the rules that are adopted the clerk of the former house is the only legal presiding officer over that body until a speaker is elected on a call of the roll of members. It appears, I say, that a motion was made placing one L. A. Wiltz in nomination for temporary speaker. I quote now from the official report of General Sheridan, which is fully corroborated in all its leading facts by the report of a committee of the House of Representatives:

> Vigers promptly declared the motion out of order at that time, when some one put the question, and, amid cheers on the democratic side of the house, Mr. Wiltz dashed on the rostrum, pushed aside Mr. Vigers, seized the speaker's chair and gavel, and declared himself speaker. A protest against this arbitrary and unlawful proceeding was promptly made by members of the majority, but Wiltz paid no attention to their protests.

We are also informed that a call for the yeas and nays was demanded, which was duly seconded, but violently prevented, although explicitly required by the constitution of the State. The usurping Wiltz and his band of co-conspirators proceeded with a pretended organization of the house. Fifty-two members, constituting the majority, subsequently withdrew.

The whole proceeding up to this point was in clear violation of law, and it appears from the evidence now before us that this whole proceeding was a conspiracy; an attempt to overthrow the existing government in Louisiana. This appears from the testimony of a gentleman of character, who speaks from actual knowledge. I refer to General McMillan, who testified before the committee that was sent from the other House to investigate affairs in Louisiana that it was the intention of the democrats to get control in the organization of the lower house, and the democratic senators elected were to join the senators elected on the democratic ticket in 1872 and declare themselves the senate, and that the lower house and senate thus organized in the interests of democracy proposed to declare McEnery governor and revolutionize the government. This was the programme. Now, I ask, in view of the law in the case, in view of the fact that this man Wiltz had no more legal right, no more authority to act in the organization of that Legislature as temporary chairman than you, Mr. President, what becomes of the argument, or clamor rather, that has been made against the President of the United States and the governor of Louisiana for attempting to use the military to overthrow a Legislature? The body presided over by the usurper Wiltz was no Legislature within the purview of the law. It was no more a Legislature than a body of men assembled at the hustings would have been. It was nothing more nor less than a riotous mob usurping the powers and prerogatives of a Legislature. It appears that when the vote was taken for a permanent speaker, Wiltz, contrary to the law regulating the organization of the Legislature and the rules governing its proceedings, contrary to parliamentary usage, declared the vote which elected him a permanent speaker.

The honorable Senator from Missouri gravely informs the Senate that here was a legislative body, organized at the time and place and in the manner provided by law; and he bases the whole superstructure of his argument upon this assumption. He has built up a showy and shadow structure upon this uncertain foundation, which glitters like a prismatic soap-bubble upon its watery bed, but which shall fade away before the breath of truth and vanish

> Like the baseless fabric of a vision.

I ask, Mr. President, if in the light of the facts, which are clear as the sun at noonday, is it not evident that this Legislature was not organized in the manner provided by law, but that it was disorganized in violation of law?

It further appears in the history of this case that when they had succeeded in organizing what they called a Legislature, there was evidently imminent danger of difficulty in the lobby and about the doors. So imminent was this danger that the usurping speaker, Wiltz, entertained a motion that was declared carried that the troops of the United States should be called upon to preserve order. This was done, remember, by a democratic speaker of the Legislature of that State. General De Trobriand appeared in answer to this call, and he very quietly requested the disorderly persons who surrounded and menaced these patriotic white-leaguers to be quiet; and the mob quieted down. Then it appears that this so-called legislative body passed a vote of thanks for his action in the case in the name of the State of Louisiana.

Then it appears in the history of this event that when the majority of the body, fifty-two to fifty, found that they could have no voice, that they were trampled under foot, that all parliamentary usage, the constitution, and the laws of the State were ignored, sought protection from the governor of the State. They succeeded in getting out of that hall, though an attempt was made to prevent them with knives and pistols marshaled in the service of this usurper Wiltz. They appealed to the governor of the State for protection. The governor, upon this information and upon the fact apparent to every man who is at all conversant with the history of Louisiana, and none was more conversant with the then existing condition than the governor himself, when fifty-two members declared to him in writing that it was impossible for them to organize a Legislature as required by the constitution of that State and the laws of the State, it seems called upon a military officer to furnish a posse to protect the members of the Legislature in the work of organization. Here is his order:

> STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
> New Orleans, January 4.
>
> General DE TROBRIAND, Commanding:
> An illegal assembly of men having taken possession of the hall of the house of representatives, and the police not being able to dislodge them, I respectfully request that you will immediately clear the hall and State-house of all persons not returned as legal members of the house of representatives by the returning board of the State.

WM. P. KELLOGG,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.

In a subsequent order he says:

The clerk of the house, who has in his possesion the roll isšued by the secretary of state of legal members of the house of representatives, will point out to you those persons now in the hall of the house of representatives returned by the legal returning board of the State.

Here we come to the gravamen of the offense alleged to have been committed. The governor of the State, after having been appealed to by a majority of the legal members of that Legislature; after they had represented to him that it was impossible for them to proceed with the organization; that the hall was in the possession of a mob; that men claiming to be members of that Legislature without any authority of law were in control of the house, appeals to the military who were present at the State-house to preserve the peace, and they proceed to the hall and without the use of any unnecessary force remove to the lobby five intruders whose votes were revolutionizing and overriding the voice of the majority of the Legislative Assembly.

Another feature, if I may be pardoned for the digression, shows the nature and character of the conspiracy that existed. While in the process of this sham organization a certain member proposes that they appoint additional sergeants-at-arms. That motion is carried, as were other motions, by acclamation, and all at once a large number of men, who had succeeded in getting into that hall under one pretext and another, throw open the lappels of their coats and display badges prepared beforehand, showing that this whole matter had been concocted and that these men were on the spot ready to carry out their part of this plot, this conspiracy, this revolution. I quote from General Sheridan's report:

Wiltz then again, on another nomination from the democratic side of the house, declared one Flood elected sergeant-at-arms, and ordered that a certain number of assistants be appointed. Instantly a large number of men throughout the hall, who had been admitted on various pretexts, such as reporters, members' friends, and spectators, turned down the lappels of their coats, upon which were pinned blue ribbon badges on which were printed in gold letters "assistant sergeant-at-arms," and the assembly was in possession of the minority, and the White League of Louisiana had made good its threat of seizing the house, many of the assistant sergeants-at-arms being well known as captains of White League companies in this city.

General Sheridan further adds:

Notwithstanding the suddenness of this movement, the leading republican members had not failed to protest again and again against the revolutionary action of the revolutionary minority, but all to no purpose, and many of the republicans rose and left the house in a body. * * * The excitement was now very great. The acting speaker directed the sergeant-at-arms to prevent the ingress or egress of members or others, and several exciting scuffles, in which knives and pistols were drawn, took place, and for a few moments it seemed that bloodshed would ensue. * * * Republicans had now generally withdrawn from the hall, and united in signing a petition to the governor, stating their grievances and asking his aid.

In view, I say, of these facts, the governor of the State of Louisiana was perfectly justified in using all legal means within the scope of his powers to preserve the peace, to see that the laws were faithfully executed.

I challenge any Senator on this floor who is learned in the law to show me that the President of the United States, in the exercise of the powers and duties devolving upon him as defined in the Constitution, did anything more or less than he was required to do. I challenge any Senator to show that General Sheridan, who seems to have been made the special target for White League venom and democratic denunciation, has transcended his powers or his duties, or that General Emory or General De Trobriand have disobeyed in any respect the law of the land. The whole question reduces itself to one single issue: Had the governor of the State of Louisiana the legal right to summon as a posse the military to preserve the peace in that hall, to allow the Legislature to proceed under the laws of the State to an organization?

Now, sir, I take the broad ground that the governor of that State had full authority to summon the military as a civil posse in the emergency to suppress riot and disorder or prevent a breach of the peace.

As to the proposition that the governor, as the chief executive officer of the State, and therefore the officer occupying the position of chief conservator of the peace, had the right to issue such an order, we have only to presume that in doing so he exercised a power incident to his office in an exigency, of which exigency he is the sole judge, which could not be properly met by the ordinary means within his reach or under his control by calling out the posse comitatus, the power of the county. Notwithstanding it may be the general impression that the power to call out the posse comitatus is limited to sheriffs, or their bailiffs, marshals, and officers of the like character, yet we have only to refer to the best commentaries upon the common law to find that such limitation upon the exercise of the power is not sustained by authority. In Bacon's Abridgement, which as an authority upon common law cannot be questioned, we find this power is not only allowed the sheriff, but is likewise given to his bailiff or other ministers of justice; also a constable or even a private person may assemble a competent number of people in order with force to suppress rioters and afterward with such force actually to suppress them. So also we find that a justice of the peace who has just cause to fear a violent resistance may raise the posse in making an entry or detaining lands, In this authority we find that the power is not limited to sheriffs. their bailiffs, and officers of like character, but extends to all ministers of justice, constables, and justices of the peace, and that a power, if not the same, equal in extent is given to the private citizen to suppress riotous proceedings. No one after reading this authority can for a moment doubt that the highest executive officer of a State, sworn to uphold the law, can properly exercise it in an emergency or under circumstances which demand its exercise. It is not necessary to rehearse in this connection all the circumstances surrounding this eventful crisis in order to show that the governor of Louisiana, in view of history as well as immediate surroundings, was justified in concluding that a riot was imminent, that blood would be shed, and that the peace of that State was about to be disturbed.

A committee of the House of Representatives reported in relation to the massacre that took place in 1866 at New Orleans, as follows:

The committee examined seventy-four persons as to the facts of violence and bloodshed upon that day. It is in evidence that men who were in the hall, terrified by the merciless attacks of the police, sought safety by jumping from the windows, a distance of twenty feet, to the ground, and as they jumped were shot by police or citizens. Some, disfigured by wounds, fought their way down stairs to the street, to be shot or beaten to death on the pavement. Colored persons at distant points in the city, peaceably pursuing their lawful business, were attacked by the police, shot, and cruelly beaten. Men of character and position, some of whom were members and some spectators of the convention, escaped from the hall covered with wounds and blood, and were preserved almost by a miracle from death. Scores of colored citizens bear frightful scars, more numerous than many soldiers of a dozen well-fought fields can show—proofs of fearful danger and strange escape. Men were shot while waving handkerchiefs in token of surrender and submission. White men and black, with arms uplifted, praying for life, were answered by shot and blow from knife and club. The bodies of some "were pounded to a jelly." A colored man was dragged from under a street-crossing and killed at a blow. Men concealed in outhouses and among piles of lumber were eagerly sought for and slaughtered and maimed without remorse. The dead bodies upon the street were violated by shot, kick, and stab. The face of a man "just breathing his last" was gashed by a knife or razor in the hands of a woman. An old gray-haired man, peaceably walking the street at a distance from the institute, was shot through the head. Negroes were taken out of their houses and shot. A policeman riding in a buggy deliberately fired his revolver from the carriage into a crowd of colored men. A colored man two miles away from the convention hall was taken from his shop by the police at about four o'clock in the afternoon of the riot, and shot and wounded in the side, hip, and back. One man was wounded by fourteen blows, shots, and stabs. The body of another received seven pistol-balls. After the slaughter had measurably ceased, carts, wagons, and drays, driven through the streets, gathered the dead, the dying, and the wounded in promiscuous loads, a policeman in some cases riding in the wagon seated upon the living men beneath him.—Reports of Committees, House of Representatives, second session Thirty-ninth Congress, page 10.

Sir, in view of such a history, in view of the fact that Governor Kellogg knew the nature, the character, the revolutionary intent of the men who only a few days before had paraded the streets with arms in their hands, had made an unsuccessful attempt to overthrow the government—men who were the leaders and abettors engaged in the riots of 1866 and of September 14, 1874—I undertake to say that the governor, knowing these facts, had there not been other and stronger evidence, would have had just cause to believe that danger, that riots, that bloodshed was imminent. If there be a case or could be a case where the chief conservator of the peace would be authorized by law to summon the posse comitatus, it was this case. Not only this, sir; the governor of Louisiana had the history of that State for three or four years in his mind. He knew the character of the men who had been engaged in the terrible murder and slaughter at Colfax; he remembered the inhuman butchery of the men at Coushatta; he remembered the terrible assassination of men in Saint Landry, and he remembered that in 1868, in the short space of four or five months, according to the report of a committee of Congress who were sent there to investigate affairs in Louisiana, two thousand men had been butchered, had been slaughtered, because of their political opinions. I read from the report of that committee:

The testimony shows that over two thousand persons were killed, wounded, and otherwise injured in that State within a few weeks prior to the presidential election; that half the State was overrun by violence; midnight raids, secret murders, and open riot kept the people in constant terror until the republicans surrendered all claims, and the election was carried by the democracy.

But, sir, the governor had more immediate proofs of the desperate intents of these men. During the sittings of the returning board they were constantly surrounded by armed and threatening bodies of men. Moreover, the press of the State teemed with bloody threats, all looking to bloody work at the assembling of the Legislature on the 4th of January. I quote a few of these threats. I also quote from General Sheridan's report to the Secretary of War, as follows:

During the few days in which I was in the city prior to the 4th of January, the general topic of conversation was the scenes of bloodshed that were liable to occur on that day, and I repeatedly heard threats of assassinating the governor and regrets expressed that he was not killed on the 14th of September last; also threats of assassination of the republican members of the house in order to secure the election of a democratic speaker.

In view of all these facts, I again ask, was not Governor Kellogg more than justified, was it not his solemn duty to take every precaution, to resort to every means within his reach to preserve the peace and prevent bloodshed? And yet democrats hold up their hands in holy horror that United States military forces were on the ground and their assistance called in to act with the civil posse.

I now proceed to briefly cite high legal authority that will not certainly be questioned by our democratic friends, to the effect that the power of the governor as a civil magistrate may be properly exercised in calling upon a military officer of the United States and the troops under his command as persons subject to be called upon to act as posse comitatus; and, if so, General De Trobriand, when so called, was bound to obey. Referring to the same authority, Bacon's Abridgement, we find that all the citizens of the country except the decrepit, persons of insane mind, minors, and females are bound to obey. No title, no dignity, no office is exempt. Again we find the extent of this call reaching every citizen. From high American authority I cite the opinion of one of the most learned and distinguished members of the legal profession in this country. I refer to the honorable Caleb Cushing, and the authority I cite is to be found on page 473, volume 6, of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General of the United States. It is as follows:

The posse comitatus comprises every person in the district or county above the age of fifteen years, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations—militia, soldiery, marines—all of whom are alike bound to obey the command of the sheriff or marshal. The fact that they are organized as military bodies, under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in anywise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus.

This rule is also to be found in Lord Mansfield's Parliamentary History, page 672.

These authorities of the highest character must be utterly disregarded, or we are bound to conclude that the governor of Louisiana had the right to call upon General De Trobriand and the troops under his command as a part of the posse comitatus, and that they and each of them were bound to obey.

If the President of the United States cannot be blamed, if all these allegations that have been brought against him have fallen to the ground as they certainly have, if neither General Sheridan nor General Emory nor General De Trobriand has transcended the scope of his power, has not violated the laws of the country, and the governor of Louisiana on the 4th day of January simply exercised a power incident to his office to summon a posse to preserve order, to preserve the peace, and see that the laws of that State were executed—if, as we have seen, the power of the governor to summon the military to act as civil posse is established by the best legal authorities, what becomes of all this arraignment? What becomes of this clamor that the President of the United States, that the governor of Louisiana, have violated the constitution of the United States, have attempted to usurp powers that are not authorized in the organic law of the land, and have been guilty of willfully attempting to overthrow the liberties of the people?

Mr. President, I believe that I have fully vindicated the action of the military in the affairs of Louisiana, as justified both by fact and by law. But as this question of the employment of the military in the affairs of a State, and particularly all military interference with a legislative body, has been so bitterly denounced, I desire to call the attention of our democratic friends to a few conspicuous democratic precedents that mark the history of this country.

I refer to the instance of General Jackson in New Orleans, where he seized a member of the Legislature, one Loviallier, and absolutely arrested a judge of the Federal court because he had granted his petition for a writ of habeas corpus. I refer to the action of President Tyler in the case of the Dorr rebellion in Rhode Island, where, upon a simple letter from the governor of that State a democratic President instructed his Secretary of War to proceed to Rhode Island and investigate the affair; and if, upon his arrival, the governor of that State should make the proper legal requisition for troops, gave him a proclamation already prepared. He was further instructed to investigate the affairs of the State of Massachusetts and of Connecticut, and to ascertain whether they proposed to sustain Mr. Dorr in his effort to establish in Rhode Island a constitution more in consonance with the spirit of our republican institutions. I will also cite another case of Federal interference, the Territory of Kansas, where a democratic governor issued a proclamation forbidding the organization of the free-state legislature, and the Secretary of War, under the instructions of a democratic President, issued orders to the military commandant of the forces in that Territory authorizing the acting governor to use the military forces to disperse the Legislature.

Here is the order of Jefferson Davis, then Secretary of War, which the Clerk will please read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1856.

SIR: The President has by proclamation warned all persons combined for insurrection or invasive aggression against the organized government of the Territory of Kansas, or associate to resist the due execution of the laws therein, to abstain from such revolutionary and lawless proceedings; and has commanded them to disperse and return peaceably to their respective abodes on pain of being resisted by his whole constitutional power. If, therefore, the governor of the Territory, finding the ordinary course of judicial proceedings and the powers vested in United States marshals inadequate for the suppression of insurrectionary combinations or armed resistance to the execution of the law should make requisition upon you to furnish a military force to aid him in the performance of that official duty you are hereby directed to employ for that purpose such part of your command as may in your judgment consistently be detached from their ordinary duty.

In executing this delicate function of the military force of the United States, you will exercise much caution, to avoid, if possible, collision with even insurgent citizens, and will endeavor to suppress resistance of the laws and constituted authorities by that moral force which happily, in our country, is ordinarily sufficient to secure respect to the laws of the land and the regularly-constituted authority of the Government. You will use a sound discretion as to the moment at which the further employment of the military force may be discontinued, and avail yourself of the first opportunity to return with your command to the more grateful and prouder service of the soldier—that of the common defense.

For your guidance in the premises you are referred to the acts of 28th of February, 1795, and 3d of March, 1807, and to the proclamation of the President, a copy of which is herewith transmitted.

Should you need further or more specific instructions, or should in the progress of events doubts arise in your mind as to the course which it may be proper for you to pursue, you will communicate directly with this Department, stating the points upon which you wish to be informed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

Mr. PEASE. The United States troops under Colonel Sumner were used for that purpose; a territorial Legislature were dispersed. That Legislature was menaced with the Army of the United States, with its artillery bearing upon the hall where they were assembled. This was done in the interest and in the furtherance of slavery, and there never has been, to my knowledge, an instance where a democrat has ever censured the action of the President on that occasion. I quote further from the history of that proceeding:

Colonel Sumner, acting under orders from Washington, entered the house of representatives. The roll was called by the clerk, and this officer remarked that he was about to perform the most disagreeable duty of his life, and that was the dispersion of the Legislature. He said his orders were to disperse it; and, in answer to Judge Schuyler, he said he should employ all the force necessary to carry his orders into effect. He then entered the senate chamber, and in like manner dispersed that body.—Wilson's Rise and Fall of the Slave Power in America, page 500.

Federal troops were also repeatedly used to arrest fugitive slaves, and in the city of Boston, in 1854, were called in to suppress the mob which had assembled to aid in the rescue of a fugitive. It was in reference to an event of this kind that Hon. Caleb Cushing decided that United States soldiers and marines could be used as the civil posse.

Then, in the case of the invasion of Virginia in 1859, the President of the United States instructed Colonel Lee to proceed to that State with a company of marines and a battery of artillery, without even being called upon by the governor of the State in the manner provided by the Constitution. Assuming that the State was invaded, he orders Colonel Lee (who afterward became the generalissimo of the confederate armies) to proceed to Virginia and arrest this invasion.

In September, 1861, the Legislature of Maryland, a sovereign State occupying a normal relation to the Federal Government, was about to assemble at Annapolis, the capital of the State, and the following order was issued by General George B. McClellan, which speaks for itself:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
Washington, September 12, 1861.

GENERAL: After full consultation with the President, Secretaries of State, War, &c., it has been decided to effect the operation proposed for the 17th. Arrangements have been made to have a Government steamer at Annapolis to receive the prisoners and carry them to their destination.

Some four or five of the chief men in the affair are to be arrested to-day. When they meet on the 17th, you will please have everything prepared to arrest the whole party, and be sure that none escape.

It is understood that you arranged with General Dix and Governor Seward the modus operandi. It has been intimated to me that the meeting might take place on the 14th; please be prepared. I would be glad to have you advise me frequently of your arrangements in regard to this very important matter.

If it is successfully carried out, it will go far toward breaking the backbone of the rebellion. It would probably be well to have a special train quietly prepared to take prisoners to Annapolis.

Thus was the Legislature of Maryland interfered with by the military. Some democrats howled against the action of the Government as illegal just as they are doing now. But it went far to "break the back-bone of the rebellion" nevertheless, and in 1864 these same democrats ran McClellan for President. So much for democratic precedent and democratic consistency.

In view of the apprehensions entertained by our democratic friends of the overthrow of constitutional liberty in this country, by Federal usurpation and aggression upon the rights of the States, it is a singular fact that in all the apprehensions for the safety of the Republic they see no danger in organized efforts to strike down the fundamental franchise of an American citizen, the right to express at the ballot-box his preferences in choosing those who are to represent his views upon all questions of public policy; they see no danger to republican institutions from lawless minorities who by means of fraud, violence, and intimidation suppress the voice of the majority—see no danger in the anarchical tendencies, the revolutionary spirit which pervades many of the Southern States. Sir, permit me to say that if ever this Republic is destroyed, the historian will record that the seeds of dissolution were sown in the gradual encroachments upon the rights of the citizen at the ballot-box.

Sir, in all their terrible arraignment we find no count in the indictment against revolt, murder, and assassination on account of differences of opinion in political matters; not a word of censure has fallen from the lips of any democrat in this debate of the gang of murderers who inhumanly butchered the parish officers at Coushatta, or the fiends who slaughtered men by the score at Colfax; not a word of condemnation have we heard of the White League revolt in New Orleans on the 14th of September, in which citizens and public officers were murdered, the archives of the State seized and plundered; no censure upon the revolutionary action of the usurper, Wiltz, in his attempt to use the military of the United States in the furtherance of his revolutionary designs; but on the contrary, (and regret that I am compelled to say,) that partisan feeling has led Senators on the other side to offer extenuations and apologies for treason, revolt, domestic violence, murder, and the most diabolical outrages known in the annals of crime.

Sir, I was astonished that an American statesman, a Senator, could stand in his place in the American Senate, and in the face of the official information by the President of the United States now before us, extenuate or apologize for the lawlessness that obtains in the State of Louisiana, when the President has informed us that three thousand five hundred murders have been committed in that State alone since 1866. "Why murders," says he, "occur everywhere; these accounts of murders and assassinations belong to the outrage mill." "This outrage business," says another Senator, "is played out; the republican party will fail to raise any sympathy by presenting these outrages."

I listened with close attention and with mingled pleasure and disappointment to the splendid display of forensic oratory afforded the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] in his speech in support of the pending resolution. I am not insensible to the lofty character and patriotic tone of his brilliant utterances. I congratulate myself and the Senate that while the honorable Senator referred to the adventurers at the South by way of extenuation for treason and revolution, and crime, he had too much self-respect to indulge in the usual diatribe against carpet-baggers or give utterance to the wholesale slander and sweeping denunciation against those who after the war sought homes in the South and saw proper to engage in the political work of reconstruction.

Perhaps the honorable Senator does not indorse the oligarchical theory that only those are entitled to a voice in public affairs who are "to the manner born," or who subscribe to the dogmas of the secession democracy. But for a more enlightened civilization, a more comprehensive statesmanship, the people of Missouri and the American Congress would have been deprived of the service of her brilliant statesman. True, American civilization and the narrow, bigoted, sectional pride which refuses to recognize any merit outside of the landed aristocracy of the South are widely different things, and I am happy to know that the honorable Senator has heretofore subscribed to the former kind of civilization, and per consequentia his place in this body will soon be filled by a representative of quite another type of political philosophy.

Secession democracy, however much it may profess to have been modified, liberalized, or if you please Greeleyized, has no high appreciation of services, however brilliant and patriotic they may be, if as in the Senator's case the public servant should at some period of his political life have deserved well of his country for another and a more commendable service than an apologist for treason and revolution. The eminent Senator has a record which Bourbon democracy can never fully indorse or forget.

I remember when I first engaged in politics, among the first political documents that I ever read, and I read them with great pleasure, were the speeches that fell from the lips of the distinguished Senator in defense of liberty universal, sentiments and arguments against an oligarchy of a million of men controlling thirteen millions. Sir, the history of this Senator is such upon these great questions that have agitated the American people for the last decade, that secession democracy at the South or their allies at the North will never, never forget the Senator. I desire to present some of the views of the Senator on these very questions as expressed in a report that was submitted by him a few years ago relating to the condition of the South, a most masterly report describing every form, feature, and phase of the condition of the South then existing and prospective. In reading this report I was struck with the prophetic utterances of the distinguished Senator. I will read one that struck me with a great deal of force, and that is in relation to these adventurers or carpet-baggers that have brought upon the South, as the Senator would have us believe, much of the present difficulty. Here are some of his views in relation to "adventurers" in the South in 1865:

> A temporary continuation of national control in the Southern States would also have a most beneficial effect as regards the immigration of northern people and Europeans into that country; and such immigration would, in its turn, contribute much to the solution of the labor problem. Nothing is more desirable for the South than the importation of new men and new ideas. One of the greatest drawbacks under which the southern people are laboring is that for fifty years they have been in no sympathetic communion with the progressive ideas of the times. While professing to be in favor of free trade, they adopted and enforced a system of prohibition, as far as those ideas were concerned, which was in conflict with their cherished institution of slavery; and, as almost all the progressive ideas of our days were in conflict with slavery, the prohibition was sweeping. It had one peculiar effect, which we also notice with some Asiatic nations which follow a similar course. The southern people honestly maintained and believed not only that as a people they were highly civilized, but that their civilization was the highest that could be attained, and ought to serve as a model to other nations the world over. The more enlightened individuals among them felt sometimes a vague impression of the barrenness of their mental life and the barbarous peculiarities of their social organization; but very few ever dared to investigate and to expose the true cause of these evils. Thus the people were so wrapped up in self-admiration as to be inaccessible to the voice even of the best-intentioned criticism. Hence the delusion they indulged in as to the absolute superiority of their race—a delusion which, in spite of the severe test it has lately undergone, is not yet given up, and will, as every traveler in the South can testify from experience, sometimes express itself in singular manifestations.

Yes, sir, "singular manifestations." It has been expressing itself, I say, to the Senate for the last four or five years in most singular manifestations. It has expressed itself in the most cowardly, in the most dastardly, in the most abominable murders and assassinations that have ever characterized any nation in the history of this world. Men claiming to belong to the chivalry of the South have armed themselves and covered their cowardly carcasses with disguises, and under the cover of midnight, in bodies of from twenty to one hundred, approached the lone cabin of a negro and taken him out and beaten him until he died because he had the manhood to accept what the Senator himself and the American Congress had given him—the right to vote for whoever he chose to execute the laws of the country. This is one. Another manifestation has developed itself, that because a man happened to be born north of the Ohio River and brought up and educated so as to indorse the ideas of American civilization, believe in free locomotion, believe that a man was a man if he had the elements of manhood about him, virtue, intelligence, and honesty—I say because men entertained those views the singular manifestation in the South has been that that class of men are tabooed; they are ostracized; and those people in their madness, in their rash folly, organize themselves to drive that class of men from their borders, and they are "the adventurers" the Senator so gratuitously threw in our face in his recent speech.

There are some very choice sentiments in this report. I read a sentiment to be found on page 5 of the document:

> The incorrigibles, who will indulge in the swagger which was so customary before and during the war, and still hope for a time when the southern confederacy will achieve its independence. This class consists mostly of young men, and comprises the loiterers of the towns and the idlers of the country. They persecute Union men and negroes whenever they can do so with impunity, insist clamorously upon their "rights," and are extremely impatient of the presence of the Federal soldiers.

I desire to say to the Senator that that condition of things which he found in 1865 obtains in 1875. I regret it; nothing is more painful to me, representing as I do in part here to-day a constituency made up largely of this class of men; but the truth compels me to confess that this condition of things obtains to a greater or less extent throughout the entire South. Men talk about their rights. You cannot find to-day any unrepentant secession democrats, that only a few years ago marshaled themselves together to overthrow the Constitution and to destroy this Government and trample her flag under foot, who are not to-day holding up their hands in horror because the governor of Louisiana summons a portion of the Army to aid as a posse in preserving the peace and preventing a riotous mob of conspirators from usurping the powers and prerogatives of a Legislature.

These patriotic admirers of the Constitution and laws of the country now appeal to Congress and the American people for sympathy! And as these invocations go up from the secession democracy of the South they are met with a hearty response from every "copperhead" democrat at the North, until the country resounds with manufactured clamor. When this clamor was raised a few days ago every miserable unrepenting secession democrat and every copperhead who have through the virtue and patriotism of the American people during and since the war been obliged to hide their faces in shame, when this grand coup d'état was promulgated, the democracy from Tammany to Texas have appeared at the front and are attempting to alarm the American people with a hypocritical cry about the overthrow of republican institutions in this country, because, forsooth, General Sheridan has assumed command of the troops in the city of New Orleans, and in the brusqueness of a soldier telegraphed to the President that if he or Congress would give him the authority he would put a stop to murder and assassination in the South.

But I have a little more of this literature furnished us by the distinguished Senator. On page 7 we find the Senator saying:

> I have read in southern papers bitter complaints about the unfriendly spirit exhibited by the northern people, complaints not unfrequently flavored with an admixture of vigorous vituperation.

That is very elegantly put.

From personal experience I can verify the truth of this admixture of "vigorous vituperation." Every man who has the manhood to declare his political sentiments, if perchance they happen to differ from the old slave-holding oligarchy of the South, is denominated a carpet-bagger; "if he happens to have been born north of Mason and Dixon's line, he is denominated by the press of the country and the people of the country as an intruder, and charged as having left his country for his country's good."

They are called "penitentiary convicts," "thieves," "incendiaries." That is the kind of vigorous vituperation which a northern man meets if he happens to be a republican. And a southern man who, when these "fire-eating" democrats in their madness undertook to overthrow the Government and destroy the South, had the courage to stand up and say he was opposed to their rash and suicidal policy, and had the patriotism to stand by the old flag, such men are persecuted and denounced; they are murdered by cowardly midnight assassins, by the very class of men whom the Senator speaks of, as indulging in this kind of "vigorous vituperation." But he says:

> As far as my experience goes, the "unfriendly spirit" exhibited in the North is all mildness and affection compared with the popular temper which in the South vents itself in a variety of ways and on all possible occasions. No observing northern man can come into contact with the different classes composing southern society without noticing it.

But the Senator will say, "that was the condition of things immediately after the war. It is different now." I undertake to say that while these sentiments obtained in 1865, they have been growing worse and worse from that day to this. I will read another extract or two, and then pass from this valuable historical document. He says:

> There are two principal points to which I beg to call your attention. In the first place, the rapid return to power and influence of so many of those who but recently were engaged in a bitter war against the Union has had one effect which was certainly not originally contemplated by the Government. Treason does, under existing circumstances, not appear odious in the South.

I desire to say to the Senate that the same sentiment obtains to-day. It is not odious with a certain class of people to declare and to maintain that the amendments to the Constitution of the United States—I refer to the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth articles of amendment—are no part of the Constitution; that they are frauds, conceived in iniquity and carried forward in fraud; that, while they are obliged to accept them, whenever the time shall come that they get the power they propose to make these amendments a dead letter practically; in other words, they propose, if necessary, to revolutionize the country and set at naught the constitutional amendments. "Treason is not odious." In this connection permit me to submit the following, which I quote from the statements and speeches of the leading southern statesmen who subscribe to the doctrines of the democratic party:

Three years ago the Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS said he believed "all of the reconstruction legislation of Congress to be unconstitutional, fraudulent, and void." The thirteenth amendment he admitted to be valid, because it had been ratified by the rightful governments of the Southern States—the governments de jure, and not the governments de facto afterward established by bayonets. The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments he claimed were no part of the Constitution, because their pretended ratification had been effected by force and fraud.

In assuming political control of the Atlanta Sun, democratic, he said:

A chief object will be to show, by calm and argumentative appeals to the good sense and patriotism of the true friends of the Constitution, North as well as South, that any departure from the essential principles of that platform will be exceedingly dangerous, if not fatal, to the liberties of the whole country.

The platform referred to above is that adopted by the democratic national convention of 1868.

Robert Toombs, formerly United States Senator, afterward a cabinet officer in the confederate congress, when asked if he would support the new departure of the northern democracy as expounded by Vallandigham, replied:

Never. I would sooner vote for Horace Greeley than for any democrat upon such a platform.

And declared finally—

That the people of the South could never be brought to accept the constitutional amendments as finalities, and if the democratic party took that ground they would have nothing to do with that party. We will fight you again just as soon as we can get ready, and I believe we can get ready much sooner than most people think. I think the South will attempt another war, and I believe I shall live to see southern independence.

Our people are losing the hope that they will see Shiloh in their day, but they are training their children to take up the work.

On the 25th of May, at Augusta, Georgia, Jefferson Davis, who owes his life to the clemency of the Government, thus characterized the people of the North:

Filled with that jealousy which springs from the knowledge of their inferiority and of the justice of your pretensions, and conscious of broken covenants and a violated Constitution, they mistrust every movement and tremble with fear when they think that right may again prevail. But wrong cannot always be triumphant. I will say nothing, and you must do nothing, even though tyranny oppresses grievously upon you. Forbear for a season, and a day will come when all will yet be well. I may not nor may some of you live to see it, but it is surely coming. He who reigns above and lives always will see that justice is done. He will not allow the wicked to always remain in power, nor the righteous to be oppressed. We can wait until that day comes, and in the mean time be quiet. 'Tis an old and wise saying, that "a good biting dog never barks much."

In a speech at Atlanta he said:

I am not of those "who accept the situation." I accept nothing. These cant phrases that we hear so much of about "accepting the situation," and about our rights having been submitted to the "arbitrament of the sword," are but the excuses of cowards. I admit that power prevails over truth. I admit that power is so great that it would be folly to resist it; and therefore I am in favor myself of being acquiescent, and I advise you to the same course; but I do not admit that our rights have ever been submitted to the arbitrament of the sword. Who has the power to submit your liberties to the arbitrament of battle? You never delegated that power to your representatives. I, as your executive, never claimed it, and never, dying or living, will I admit it. And then, my friends, about the much-talked-of subject of "accepting the situation." You are not called upon to acknowledge that you have done wrong unless you feel it. I don't believe I did any wrong, and therefore I don't acknowledge it.

General Leslie, a leading democrat of Kentucky, like Jeff Davis, "accepts nothing." In a stump speech he said:

As to the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, I am out and out opposed to them. I care not who in Indiana, Ohio, or elsewhere may be for them. Those amendments were ingrafted upon the Constitution of the country and proclaimed to the country as part and parcel of the Constitution by force and by fraud, and not in the legitimate way laid down in the Constitution. Ten States of this Union were tied hands and feet, and bayonets were presented to their breasts to make them consent against their will to the passage of these amendments. The procuring of these amendments was a fraud upon this people and upon the people of the whole United States; and having thus been obtained, I hold they ought to be repealed. There may be some democrats who are not for their repeal, but the great body of our party is for it.

A prominent Georgia democrat introduced Mr. Davis at Augusta, and in doing so said:

History will vindicate you. I know that you are not rash. You did what you could to save the Republic, to promote peace, to adjust the quarrel. I do not now propose to review the dread drama that closed in the overthrow of the southern cause. That is not a lost cause. It is the cause of constitutional liberty, and will yet triumph.

The Vicksburgh (Mississippi) Herald says:

The southern people have endured long enough. The democrats North have no special claim upon us. Now that the shoe pinches at home many of them want the South to come forward and aid in arresting the military despotism of Grant, which has for its object the perpetuation of the republican party. Mr. Davis is a representative man of the South; by him we are ready to be judged in the future.

The Memphis Appeal is especially outspoken. It says:

When we assert that the constitutional amendments, except the thirteenth, are odious and will be rescinded whenever a convention of the States or absolute democratic power in the Government may render the consumption possible, we tell the simple, unvarnished truth. * * * We are for the lawful repeal of unlawful mockeries of constitutional law.

In corroboration I read further from the honorable Senator's report:

The people are not impressed with any sense of its criminality. And, secondly, there is as yet among the southern people an utter absence of national feeling. I made it a business, while in the South, to watch the symptoms of returning loyalty as they appeared not only in private conversation, but in the public press and in the speeches delivered and the resolutions passed at Union meetings. Hardly ever was there an expression of hearty attachment to the great Republic, or an appeal to the impulses of patriotism; but whenever submission to the national authority was declared and advocated, it was almost uniformly placed upon two principal grounds: That, under present circumstances, the southern people could "do no better;" and then that submission was the only means by which they could rid themselves of the Federal soldiers and obtain once more control of their own affairs.

I desire to say to the Senator that the same sentiment obtains to-day, and that this whole effort now being made at the South is to carry out that very programme. We have read in the press of the country of the patriotic and Christian advice sent to some of the rash revolutionists at the South. I recollect reading a few days since some advice given to the rioters in New Orleans from one of our distinguished Senators. He said, "Bear it all; suffer on; do not attempt to resent your injuries. Your very sufferings, your martyrdom, is coming up before the American people; it is reaching their sympathetic hearts, and in a short time, if you will only keep quiet, you will be restored again to power, and then all will be well." That was the substance of the advice. It is simply a policy of "stooping to conquer." But the object and aim of these revolutionists is to get power and the control of those State governments. That is what they are for. The American people may attempt to avoid the issue, but it is inevitable. Recent movements at the South mean revolution; it means destruction to this Republic by breaking down the foundations upon which it rests—the right of the majority to rule. I will pause to read an extract from a letter recently written by Bishop Haven, of Georgia:

Papers of the ability of the Times and Tribune, gentlemen of the culture and breadth of Abel Stevens and James Freeman Clarke, are only specimens of the general surrender in whole or in part of the northern mind to the Georgia domination.

This surrender bids fair to bring forth fatal fruit. It may lead to a recapture by the captured of the whole result of the war. It is the set purpose of the whole South to recover what it has lost—the government of the nation; and to recover this without any more surrender of their old claims than is possible.

ALEXANDER STEPHENS declared just at the close of the war that what they had lost on the field they would recover in Congress, even as Cromwell's rebellion succeeded in the revolution of '88. The present governor of Georgia declares that under their present constitution feudalism, or the control of labor and the laborer, can be completely secured.

The words these leaders utter the white South feel. They are unanimous in this desire and purpose. Of course I exclude from this unanimity the men who stood by the Union and still stand by the ideas that Union involves.

They propose, by a system of intimidation in some instances and by a system of quiet acquiescence in other places, to get into power. All these agencies they propose to use to get control of the Government; and when the time comes, and it is not far distant unless the American people arouse themselves to the danger that menaces the country, when in a short time fifteen of these States will be in the hands of men who are inimical to this Government, who have no more sympathy with free government than they had ten or twelve years ago—men who have been inaugurating and pushing forward in their political policy at the South the doctrine that the amendments to the Constitution that gave freedom to the negro, that gave him the right to vote and that protected him in all his rights, immunities, and privileges as a citizen, they will abrogate these amendments to the Constitution; they will place the negro in his nominal place, make him a "hewer of wood and drawer of water" for a "superior race." That is their purpose, and when they control fifteen States of this Union with one or two Northern States they have, as they had before the war for fifty years, the control of this Government. They made then the American Government kneel down to the Moloch of slavery, and they will make it, if they get control again, bow down to the secession democracy of the South. There is another sentence in the Senator's report that I will read; this is prophetic:

As to the future peace and harmony of the Union, it is of the highest importance that the people lately in rebellion be not permitted to build up another "peculiar institution" whose spirit is in conflict with the fundamental principles of our political system; for as long as they cherish interests peculiar to them in preference to those they have in common with the rest of the American people, their loyalty to the Union will always be uncertain.

The distinguished Senator never uttered in his life a truer sentiment or made a truer statement than that. That is the true solution of the question to-day. It is the want in the South of loyalty to the Government and want of sympathy in a new order of things. The people of that country do not "accept the situation;" they do not regard the revolution as having settled the old political heresy of "State sovereignty." They expect and are entertaining the hope that sooner or later they will reinstate that doctrine, and control at least fifteen of these States under the idea of the independent sovereignty of a State. But, sir, from the speech of the distinguished Senator, we are bound to conclude that he has yielded, that he has changed his views, that he has faced about and counsels us to do likewise.

Under his political teachings the State of Missouri has been turned over to the secession democracy and he would now have the republican party deliver Louisiana bound hand and foot over to the White League banditti. There were many sentiments expressed in the Senator's speech which I fully indorsed. I admired its lofty, patriotic tone. It was as a whole an excellent homily on the well-established principles of republican government. But when the learned Senator had finished his eloquent thesis on constitutional liberty, I felt constrained to suggest to him that a government of the people for the people and by the people is no utopianism.

Mr. President, just as the American people were congratulating themselves upon the practical application of this theory of government to all the States, after we were flattering ourselves that the practical doctrine of State sovereignty which had been fostered by an oligarchy of slave-owners in fifteen States of this Union was obsolete, blotted out by the sword, the work of reconstruction and the restoration of the insurrectionary States upon the basis of universal suffrage and the majority rule had been complete, we find ourselves confronted with a gigantic conspiracy to overthrow these governments and re-establish the oligarchical or minority rule. I refer to 1870 and 1871, when we were confronted by the gigantic conspiracy known as the Ku-Klux organization. The history of that organization has become familiar to every American, is known in high places and in low places. No man who is acquainted with the history of his country will deny with the facts we have before us that at least half a million, for this is the statement of the chief cyclops of the organization—I refer to General Forrest of Fort Pillow notoriety—that at least five hundred thousand men were organized in those bands with the object of getting control of the State governments by intimidation, by murder, by all kinds and grades of crime.

Why, sir, in the history of this world there never was such a drama presented as the career of that Ku-Klux organization in the South for a period of three years until Congress acted, until the republican party that had been apathetic became aroused. We had been sending up from the South her plea for mercy, asking the Government to come to the rescue and save us from these diabolical bands. Congress halted just as they have in the last two years on this question of the South, until it became so notorious, until the blood of thousands of men had ascended to the "Lord of Sabbaoth," until the American people began to feel that in the name of Christianity and of humanity the people of the South, the poor negro, and the northern soldier and the southern Union man must have some protection for life, liberty, and castle; and at the close of a session you concluded finally to give us a law that would hunt out these assassins and punish them in the United States courts, and you allowed the Government to use the military to arrest them. No sooner was it done than this revolution, this conspiracy was broken up. When once it is disbanded, lo! we are confronted with another organization of the same intent, with the same purpose. It is the same old organization revamped, but with more power, better organized; and it has in addition to that the esprit du corps that it gets by receiving sympathy from the northern democracy, by having on this floor apologists for their assassinations and murders. Men who complain of high taxes and of being plundered of their property because of infamous radical negro rule can find money enough to buy muskets to arm these White Leagues; they can contribute of their pittance hundreds and thousands, yea millions of dollars to organize and arm these bodies of men whose object is, and whose sole object, to overthrow those governments and ultimately to destroy this Republic.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PEASE. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator has said that assassination and murder have apologists on this floor. I demand of the Senator to name an apologist for assassination and murder.

Mr. PEASE. I perhaps ought to qualify that remark. I have not heard a Senator stand in his place and advocate murder and assassination, but I have heard, and the country is aware of the fact, that the speeches which have been delivered from that side of the House have been treating lightly the subject of murder and assassination. When we cite you cases numbering hundreds of peaceable, quiet, inoffensive citizens who have been stricken down at midnight, who have been murdered in the day-time by your political organizations, you say it is a "radical outrage-mill" gotten up for political purposes. When we point you to Trenton, when we point you to Coushatta, when we point you to New Orleans, "O!" you say, "this outrage business is played out." If that is not a kind of apology for crime, for assassination, I know not what it is. When the facts have been presented here by the distinguished Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] particularly when he has said that murder abounded throughout that country, that assassinations are common, he is met on the other side with the statement that these things are untrue. When the Senator declares that the reports which have gone up from the Southern Associated Press, a press subsidized by this democracy, a press that has done more by misrepresentation to poison the American mind, done more to bring about this condition of revolution than any other agency—when we make the statement that this Associated Press, invariably in the hands of white-leaguers, members of the Ku-Klux Klan, secession democracy, every single correspondent and every operator of the Western Union line belonging to that organization, sending their statements all over the country, forming the basis of editorials in our metropolitan press, saying to the country that these statements that come up from the negroes and from the Union men in the South are all false, that the negroes are the aggressors, that the negroes are arming, that the negroes are marching on their cities with their "sacks and their wagons" to plunder, that the negroes are attempting to murder and intimidate the white people—when, I say, these statements are presented and are denounced as false on this floor, Senators on the other side of the Chamber treat the matter lightly and deny that any such falsehoods have been propagated and sent over this country. What is that but apology for assassination and murder?

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. PEASE. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. I utterly deny that there has been by any member on this floor one word of apology for assassination, and there is no foundation for making such a charge, and no man has a right to make it. We have denounced exaggerations and falsehoods, and we will continue to do so; but when it comes to be a question of veracity between the Senator from Mississippi and the gentlemen of the Associated Press, he will allow us to reserve our judgment.

Mr. PEASE. I desire to say, Mr. President, and I make this statement without fear of successful controversy, and every Senator who has listened to the speeches delivered on that side of the House will bear me out in the statement, that in all this arraignment, in all the discussion we have had for the last two weeks over this question, not one single utterance have we heard from that side of the Chamber condemning these murders or pointing out one of them; but when we have stated the facts, matters on record in our courts, matters which are sworn to by men whose veracity cannot be questioned, our statements are treated with contempt as belonging to the "outrage-mill!" A few murders, "unjustifiable homicide," are committed, it is said, "and they are everywhere." That is the way the subject has been treated; that is the way the statements have been met. The Senator "reserves his judgment!" Thank the Lord for that!

Sir, I say that there is an organization existing at the South, and it has its apologists and sympathizers at the North, the object of which is to revolutionize this Government, to get control of the Southern States, and thereby reinstate the old secession and slave democracy. It has, I say, its sympathizers at the North, and the sympathy it is receiving there only infuses it with more life and vigor. The recent elections at the North have been construed by these old, wily Bourbons of the South, men who never learn anything or forget anything, waking up in their fossiliferous condition, in their dreamy hallucination, and they imagine that because of the recent elections in the North and changes in several States there has been really an indorsement of secession, an indorsement of rebellion. They have flattered themselves that these recent elections are but an indorsement that secession was right, and that they were justified in attempting to overthrow this Government. That is the sentiment; and if we entertain the delusion that it is anything else, that they have another purpose in view, ere long, unless something is done to arrest the progress of this conspiracy, you will see the sad results. Though I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, I venture to say that unless this revolutionary spirit is checked in the South, unless this conspiracy is put down now, you will have another revolution in this country more terrible, more disastrous than the war of the rebellion. It will not be one section warring against another. They will have no separate flag, no "stars and bars" the next time. They will fight under the old flag. They will seek to destroy this Government by anarchy; and to-day the seeds of anarchy have already germinated and are ready almost to blossom in fifteen of these States. In the South to-day, and it is no exaggeration to say it, we are on the verge of the same anarchical condition that prevails in South America and Mexico.

I venture to make another prediction: that in case the democracy shall succeed and these States shall go into the hands of the democratic party, they may have for awhile peace, but it will be of short duration. Let me say to my southern democratic friends that you are in this course placing a chalice to your lips that will poison you. It will destroy your country because of the demoralization that obtains there to-day from the acts of the armed bodies, this banditti, as the noble hero, Sheridan, denominates them—and he never uttered a truer sentiment. I say when they have finished their political work, they will turn to cutting the throat of the citizen, murdering him for his money. That is the tendency of this thing; and if these precedents are allowed to go on unnoticed; if a band of insurrectionists, a band of rioters, can overturn a government in a day; if a minority can rule the majority, and it is winked at by the American Congress, how long will it be before you will have the same sort of thing in your own democratic ranks? Some ambitious candidate will say, "I received a majority of the votes; there has been some fraud in the returning board," and he will arm his clan and overturn your government, and you will resolve yourselves into the condition that obtains, and has for the last fifty years, in Mexico and the South American States. It devolves upon the American statesman, it devolves upon every patriot, to look this question square in the face; and it is the duty of the American Senator, the American Representative in this Congress to meet it. If further legislation is needed, let us have it; but I can say to you, sir, from my knowledge of the situation, all that it is necessary to do is to let the American people know and feel that there is patriotism, that there is virtue enough left in the republican party, that party which preserved this country through four years of internecine war, carried it through that terrible struggle, to defend it and to secure the glorious achievements of universal freedom in this country. That is all we want. Let that be announced, and white-leaguers will hunt their holes and their sympathyzing copperhead democrats at the North will retire, and we shall have peace and quiet and order in this country.

This body of men have adopted the policy by which when they are unable to vote down they propose to strike down with the hand of the assassin the voter. These assassins, these bands of conspirators, these revolutionists have the audacity to come up before the country and ask the American people, ask the American Senate, to surrender to them. Why, says the distinguished Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON,] "Let us alone;" "let us have our way;" let us revolutionize Arkansas, let us overturn Louisiana; let us, as a minority, overrule and destroy the rights and privileges of the majority. Let us alone. Ask us to surrender! Are we prepared to follow the honorable Senator from Virginia and accede to his demands? Surrender what? The State of Louisiana to the democratic party. That of itself would be a small matter in fact, and a heavy burden would be taken from us, for a burden it has been indeed. Warmoth had bankrupted the State, and then, under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Missouri, saddled the republican party with all the disaster and reproach of his maladministration, as he sought refuge and was received in the very bosom of the democracy.

Sir, before we make terms of capitulation to the enemy let us fully understand what they involve. In the first place, it will involve the cowardly surrender of a fundamental principle of our representative form of government, namely, the right of the majority to rule. It would be a surrender to the minority. Second, it would involve the sacrifice of all the glorious achievements of the war, universal liberty, and equal protection for all in their personal and political rights. I apprehend that the American Senate is not ready to accept such ignominious terms, or so utterly lost to every sense of justice and patriotism as to turn over a State government into the hands of the worst set of political banditti known in the annals of the Government. In the language of the honorable Senator from Missouri, we might well say, "that it would furnish unmistakable indication of the decline of free institutions in America." When the American people are so lost to patriotism, so lost to that fidelity which every American should exercise toward his country that we will surrender the achievements of the great war of the rebellion, costing its millions of treasure and its oceans of blood—when we are ready to surrender that, I say, we may well exclaim in the language of the distinguished Senator that "free institutions are on the decline and will soon fall to rise no more."

I will go as far as the Senator in the maintenance of constitutional liberty, both in form and in essence; but I do not appreciate that kind of liberty which is not regulated by law. I fail to see any excellence in that kind of self-government where a minority, by means of the pistol and the bowie-knife, riot, murder, and assassination, subverts the will of the majority. I do not envy the reputation or covet the glory that attaches to any Senator who stands in his place in the American Senate and defends a policy which shields treason, revolution, and the whole catalogue of crimes, and strikes down those sublime safeguards of personal and political liberty secured in the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution.

Mr. LOGAN. As it is not probable that the Senator can finish his remarks to-night—it being now after four o'clock—if he will yield to me I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PEASE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and thirty-six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

NAMES OF STREETS, ETC., IN WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4523) to fix the names of the streets, places, and avenues, in the cities of Washington and Georgetown; which was read a first and second time, and, with accompanying explanatory memoranda, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WALLABOUT BAY, NEW YORK.

Mr. CROOKE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4524) to provide for the exchange of certain lands in Wallabout Bay, New York, between the United States and the city of Brooklyn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

SERVICE OF PROCESS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. KELLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4525) to secure service of process in United States courts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS OF FOLDING ROOM.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed to pay to Samuel S. Strachan, J. E. W. Thompson, William M. Long, and John N. Hubbard their respective salaries as folders, from the 1st day of July, 1874, to the 6th day of December, 1874, inclusive, out of the appropriation made for folding Agricultural Reports for 1872 and 1873.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KASSON. A week ago to-day I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House adopted a resolution directing its Sergeant-at-Arms to respond to the writ issued by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the matter of R. B. Irwin. I desire now to say that since that time a select committee has been appointed on a kindred subject, and I have no doubt it will be satisfactory to the House to reconsider the resolution in Irwin's case, and have both matters reported on by that committee. I move to reconsider the resolution, and, the emergency having passed for immediate action, to refer it to the select committee already examining the question of the privileges of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISCHARGE OF RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to make a privileged motion. I move that Richard B. Irwin be discharged from arrest. I make this motion inasmuch as he has appeared before the committee and answered the questions which were propounded to him by the committee and the House, and such other questions as up to this time they have put to him. The committee do not desire to discharge him as a witness, but simply from arrest.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] has risen to move a suspension of the rules. But the Chair will first recognize any gentlemen who were not in the Hall when their States were called and who may desire to present bills for reference.

PORT OF ENTRY AT HOUSTON, TEXAS.

Mr. MILLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4526) to establish a port of entry at Houston, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

APPLICATIONS FOR PATENTS.

Mr. STORM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4527) to prevent persons formerly employed in the Patent Office from prosecuting applications for patents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

DEBT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] is submitted, I ask that a day may be set for the hearing of the appropriation bill in reference to the payment of the interest on the District bonds. That bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed. I ask that it may be considered in the House to-morrow after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Judiciary Committee have to-morrow.

Mr. GARFIELD. Well, I will say Wednesday. It is the bill for the payment of interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia. I desire only to say now in regard to it, that, if the bill is to be passed at all, it should be passed so as to be a law by the 1st of February, in order that the payment of interest may not lapse.

Mr. DAWES. Does it change the existing law as to the rate of interest?

Mr. GARFIELD. It does not. I ask that the bill be made a special order in the House, as in Committee of the Whole, on Wednesday, after the morning hour.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I move that the rules be suspended and the order made.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I do not yield for that purpose.

PROCEEDINGS IN IRWIN'S CASE.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] yields to me a moment, that I may ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the proceedings under the writ of habeas corpus in the case of R. B. Irwin. It was found that there is no record preserved of any of the cases of this kind which preceded this one. Those therefore who were engaged in the argument could not refer to precedents. The Committee on Ways and Means caused the case to be reported by a stenographer, including the argument of counsel and the opinion of the court, and they think it will be wise to have it printed in the RECORD, to be there preserved for the benefit of those who come after us.

Mr. DONNAN. What occasion is there for multiplying the matter in the RECORD, by publishing in it these proceedings? Why not have the usual number of copies printed?

Mr. DAWES. It is not the purpose of the committee to have this printed as a document at all. They prefer to have it printed in the RECORD, believing that people would be more likely to go for information in regard to this case to the RECORD than to a document.

Mr. DONNAN. It would have to be carried through all the bound volumes of the RECORD.

Mr. DAWES. It is not for present use of the House. The time for that has passed; but it is for future reference, and if we place it in the RECORD it will go to all the State Legislatures in the country.

Mr. DONNAN. It ought to be printed in a separate document by itself.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will not object.

There being no objection, the order was made.

[The proceedings of the court will be found at the end of the House proceedings of this date.]

DEBT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask unanimous consent to make my motion in relation to the bill for the payment of interest on the debt of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to permit the Committee on Railways and Canals now to report House bill No. 145, for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of Lake Michigan, the Illinois, the Mississippi, and the Rock Rivers, and that said bill be made the special order for consideration in the House on Tuesday, the 2d day of February next, at one o'clock p. m., to the exclusion of all other orders.

Mr. BURCHARD. I suggest that the bill be considered in the House on that day as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Is there not already a special order for that day?

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. HOUGHTON. The bill in relation to the Omaha bridge.

The SPEAKER. Was that made the special order for the first Tuesday in February?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes, sir; for the first Tuesday in February.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. This resolution would suspend that order, if the House should agree to it.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I object to that.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. Has there been any report by any committee on that bill?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the bill was not made the special order for the first Tuesday in February. The Chair is under the impression that it was only a postponement and that the motion to which the House agreed was that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the first Tuesday in February. That is the recollection of the Chair, and the Journal sustains the Chair in that recollection. The bill was only postponed until the first Tuesday in February.

Mr. HOUGHTON. The proposition was to make it a special order for that day.

The SPEAKER. That would have required either unanimous consent or a suspension of the rules, and the Chair's recollection is that the arrangement was made by a majority vote.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I believe it was done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois will amend his resolution so as to make it Wednesday, the 3d of February, that will avoid any conflict with the bill to which the gentleman from California refers, and the gentleman from California will then hold any rights that he now has in reference to the Omaha bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I have no objection to the change being made.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution will be altered so as to read Wednesday, the 3d of February, instead of Tuesday, the 2d.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The resolution ought to provide that the consideration of the bill shall be confined to one day.

The SPEAKER. But one day is provided for by the resolution; it simply provides that the bill shall be considered on that one day.

The question was put upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were ayes 120, noes not counted.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurred upon suspending the rules and adopting the resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. As this is the entering wedge of a general system of appropriations for internal improvements, I also ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CREAMER. I object to debate.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 55, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Ashe, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Beck, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Bundy, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Conger, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Crounse, Curtis, Darrall, DeWitt, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Finck, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Glover, Gooch, Gunter, Hagans, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, Hodges, Houghton, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Magee, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, McNulta, Mills, Moore, Morey, Morrison, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, Nunn, Orr, Orth, Packard, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phillips, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Read, Richmond, Robbins, Rusk, Sawyer, Milton Sayler, Schell, John G. Schumaker, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloan, Smart, A. Herr Smith, J. Ambler Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Stephens, St. John, Stone, Stowell, Strait, Sypher, Charles R. Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Tremain, Vance, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, Willie, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—180.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Arthur, Atkins, Berry, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clymer, Cox, Davis, Garfield, Giddings, Gunckel, Hamilton, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Holman, Hoskins, Hunter, McLean, Merriam, Monroe, Neal, O'Brien, O'Neill, Hosea W. Parker, Potter, Randall, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Storm, Strawbridge, Taylor, Christopher Y. Thomas, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Weddell, Waldron, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, and William B. Williams—55.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Under the resolution just adopted the committee are authorized now to report.

Mr. HURLBUT. I report back from the Committee on Railways and Canals House bill No. 145, to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of Lake Michigan, the Illinois, the Mississippi, and Rock Rivers, with amendments. I move that the bill and amendments be printed and recommitted.

The SPEAKER. What is the object of the gentleman in reporting the bill now?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be reported to the House.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. There is no object in reporting the bill except to have it in the control of the committee.

The SPEAKER. That is the very purpose of the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The resolution is that the committee shall now have leave to report.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; and the bill was made a special order for a certain day. That gives the committee a right to report on that day.

The motion to print and recommit was agreed to.

Mr. HURLBUT. As the committee may be called in my absence, I ask leave to make another report at this time.

Mr. CESSNA. I rise to a privileged motion, and move to suspend the rules for the purpose of adopting the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Before that is done, I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3823) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of public defense for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876. The amendment of the Senate does not increase the amount appropriated by the bill; it merely transfers $15,000 from Fort Jefferson, Garden Key, to Fort Taylor and batteries, Key West.

No objection was made, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. STARKWEATHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES.

Mr. CESSNA. I move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives be so far suspended during the remainder of the present session of the Forty-third Congress as to prevent the Speaker from entertaining any dilatory motion pending the consideration of any public bill or joint resolution, or of any motion to bring, or the result of which may bring, before the House for consideration such public bill or joint resolution; and this order shall apply to amendments offered in the House, or adopted in the Senate and awaiting concurrence in the House, upon such public bills or joint resolutions, and to any report of a committee thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. That is an amendment of the rules, and no notice has been given of it.

The SPEAKER. It is a proposition to suspend the rules, among which is the one which requires notice to be given.

Mr. RANDALL. If the Speaker will look at Rule 145, requiring one day's notice to be given——

The SPEAKER. Precisely; that is under the rules. This is a proposition to suspend all the rules, that one included.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I call the yeas and nays.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would it not be better to abolish all the rules and put the minority absolutely in the hands of the majority?

Mr. CESSNA. I object to debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the effect of this proposition to deprive the minority of the power to make a record in the House by a yea and nay vote, a right which is guaranteed in the Constitution?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no.

Mr. BECK. Is it in order to raise the question of consideration upon this resolution?

The SPEAKER. That is a right under the rules, and this is a proposition to suspend the rules.

Mr. COX. Should not the proposition to suspend the rules to so great an extent as that go to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. There might be propriety in so referring it, but no parliamentary obligation to do so.

Mr. CESSNA. I object to debate.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I want to ask a question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This is only to prevent a waste of the public time.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice that this is a proposition to open the Treasury to every conceivable scheme of public plunder.

Mr. CESSNA. The statement of my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] is not warranted by anything in the resolution.

Mr. WOOD. It is setting a bad example to the next House.

Mr. MERRIAM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. In case of the passage of this resolution, will it deprive us, who desire to defeat all subsidy measures, of all opportunity to do so by dilatory motions, otherwise called filibustering?

The SPEAKER. The Chair apprehends that the resolution refers to proceedings in the House; subsidy bills would probably be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CESSNA. It carefully avoids that.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to inquire as to the effect of this resolution in limiting the power of amendment. If I understand the resolution rightly, it is enormous in the extent to which it cuts off the right of amendment.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That is the intention of the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I would be glad to have that clause read again.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let it all be read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under that resolution, if adopted, would it be in order, when a bill of a public nature is before the House, to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to move to adjourn. Under the construction given to "dilatory motions," a motion to adjourn might or might not be regarded as dilatory, according to circumstances.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. CESSNA] whether he reports this resolution in obedience to the resolve of any caucus held recently.

Mr. CESSNA. I am responsible for this resolution; it is in my own language.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Would a motion to take a recess be regarded as a dilatory motion within the purview of this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The repetition of such a motion might be so construed.

Mr. CESSNA. Yes, sir; the frequent repetition of it. That is a question I leave to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. A dilatory motion is recognized as one obviously for the purpose of delay.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order to move to amend the resolution so as to provide that all rules be suspended, and that we go home?

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon seconding the motion for a suspension of the rules. On that question the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. CESSNA, and his colleague, Mr. RANDALL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 126, noes 86.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 99, not voting 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Bundy, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Fort, Freeman, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hodges, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kellogg, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowe, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, McKee, McNulta, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Phillips, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Starkweather, St. John, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—150.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, DeWitt, Durham, Eldredge, Finck, Foster, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Kasson, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Lowndes, Luttrell, Magee, McLean, Merriam, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Phelps, Pierce, Potter, Randall, Read, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, Ross, Milton Sayler, Schell, Sener, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Standiford, Stephens, Stone, Storm, Swann, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitehead, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Willie, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—99.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albert, Barnum, Freeman Clarke, Danford, Dawes, Eden, Farwell, Frye, Garfield, Harmer, Hendee, Hersey, George F. Hoar, Kelley, Kendall, Killinger, Marshall, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, Mitchell, Nesmith, Packer, James H. Platt, jr., Purman, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Stowell, Walls, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—39.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the resolution was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. NESMITH. On this question I am paired with the gentlemen from Virginia, Mr. STOWELL and Mr. PLATT. On this question they, if present, would vote "ay," while I would vote "no."

Mr. GUNCKEL. My colleague, Mr. DANFORD, is detained at his room by sickness.

Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania. My colleague, Mr. PACKER, is necessarily absent from the House to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague, Mr. GARFIELD, is absent in the Supreme Court. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, why does he not come here and do it?

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP SUBSIDY.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order in the consideration of the bill making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department in the Committee of the Whole to consider the following amendment, namely:

So much of an act entitled "An act making appropriation for the service of the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873," approved June 1, 1872, as relates to and authorizes a contract to be made by the Postmaster-General with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, for service between San Francisco and Japan and China, is hereby repealed, and any such contract made in pursuance of said act is hereby annulled.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The rules were suspended and the resolution adopted.

J. E. D. COUZINS, OF SAINT LOUIS.

Mr. STANARD. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking from the Speaker's table and passing a bill (S. No. 958) for the relief of J. E. D. Couzins, of Saint Louis.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to J. E. D. Couzins, of Saint Louis, Missouri, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 in full for services rendered to the Government of the United States in the detection and conviction of counterfeiters of United States Treasury notes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Has that bill gone to any committee in this House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not think we ought to vote for a suspension of the rules in this case, having just voted down a suspension of the rules to facilitate the transaction of the public business. I do not think this House ought now to agree to take up from the Speaker's table and pass a private bill taking it from under the civil-rights bill.

Mr. STANARD. I am satisfied, if the House will listen to a statement for a few minutes, they will not object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I insist it shall not be taken up from the Speaker's table from under the civil-rights bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 56.

So the House refused to second the motion to suspend the rules.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. NEGLEY, in pursuance of a previous suspension of the rules, reported from the Committee on Commerce a bill (H. R. No. 4528) amendatory of the act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri."

The bill, which was read, in its first section provides that the Saint Clair and Carondelet Bridge Company be, and the same is thereby, authorized and empowered, in constructing the bridge authorized by the act of which the act is amendatory, to erect over the main channel of said river three straight continuous spans of not less than four hundred feet each in the clear, of the pier, at low-water mark, the center span to be placed over the main channel, instead of "the two spans over the main channel of the river" required by the act of which the act is amendatory; provided that any bridge built under the provisions of the act, or the act of which the act is amendatory, shall not be constructed of arched spans.

The second section provides that the said corporation shall accept the bridge site numbered "2" on the plan and survey submitted to the Secretary of War, and the company shall be required to close Cahokia Bend by a dam or similar work to hold the channel against the western bluffs above the bridge; and provided further that after the said company shall have accepted the site and definitely planned the bridge with its piers, the plan shall be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval. And in maintaining and operating said bridge it shall be subject to all the conditions and restrictions imposed by the act of which this is amendatory.

Mr. WELLS. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist upon having that bill passed under a suspension of the rules without at least allowing some discussion on it. This is a private corporation.

Mr. NEGLEY. I insist on my first having the floor on the bill.

Mr. WELLS. I move the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 78.

Mr. STANARD. Will the House listen to me for a moment on the subject of building a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. WELLS. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The demand comes too late.

Mr. WELLS. I have been on the floor demanding it all the time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not higher than the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts.. I move to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. That is under the rule, and this is a suspension of the rules.

Mr. NEGLEY. Let me be heard for one moment.

Mr. RANDALL. Not unless some one has the right to reply to you.

Mr. NEGLEY. I am not to be dictated to by my colleague.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not care whether you wish it or not, you will receive what I give you.

Mr. NEGLEY. I will retaliate.

Mr. RANDALL. Go ahead.

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate unless the other side is heard.

Mr. WELLS. I insist on my demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 163, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Burchard, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Cook, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, DeWitt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Havens, Herndon, Hunton, Knapp, Lamar, Lamison, Leach, Magee, Martin, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Neal, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Pratt, Read, Robbins, Milton Sayler, Schell, Sloss, Standiford, Stone, Strait, Vance, Waddell, Wells, Whitthorne, Willie, Wolfe, Wood, and John D. Young—66.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bland, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Field, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Robert S. So the House refused to adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that in the absence of the Vice-President the Senate had chosen Hon. HENRY B. ANTHONY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, President of the Senate pro tempore.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 3006) authorizing the President to nominate Holmes Wickoff an assistant surgeon in the Navy; and

The bill (H. R. No. 4462) for the relief of Alexander Burtch.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

The bill (S. No. 706) to amend section 1422 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the better government of the Navy.

The bill (S. No. 843) for the relief of survivors of the Polaris; and

The bill (S. No. 1166) granting the right of way over the public lands for the construction of a wagon-road in Salt Lake County, Utah Territory.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. NEGLEY. I am confident the House does not understand the nature of this bill. I have no objection to discussion. I will yield half of my time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. STANARD,] to allow him to make any remarks he may desire to offer in support of his amendment and to have the sense of the House tested on it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House proceed to business on the Speaker's table, for the purpose of taking therefrom the civil-rights bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] brings to the attention of the House comes up in this way: At an early period of the session in December, on two successive Mondays, the gentleman from Pennsylvania procured the suspension of the rules that there might be one hour given to the consideration of the bill on some succeeding Monday. This was repeated, the Chair thinks, three times. The gentleman's hour has now been about three-fourths exhausted. A little over forty minutes of it have run.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman may modify his motion for the suspension of the rules by making it a motion to bring the bill before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill, the Chair thinks, is really before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; let him go on.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask the Chair if my motion is in order?

Mr. NEGLEY. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Commerce, and I am directed by the committee to ask its passage without amendment. But I am willing to concede any proper courtesy to the gentleman from the Saint Louis district if I am not met by filibustering.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is not my motion in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Pennsylvania is now proceeding under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But the suspension of the rules was only on that day. That suspension is done and ended, the gentleman having got an hour.

The SPEAKER. When the House suspends the rules and appoints a day to be given exclusively, or an hour to be given exclusively, to any purpose, the day or the hour must be given to that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very good.

The SPEAKER. But the order does not exclude filibustering motions.

Mr. STANARD. I do not remember that this bill was made a special order for to-day. It was made a special order on two or three successive Mondays, and those days were allowed to pass without the bill being brought up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Pennsylvania distinctly called the attention of the House to the fact that the privilege of the bill was not waived. The gentleman had the privilege of bringing up the bill during those Mondays. He gave way for other business but did not waive his privilege, and the Chair does not think he lost his right.

Mr. STANARD. I will say in this connection that I have no objection——

Mr. NEGLEY. I must object to debate.

Mr. STANARD. I am not debating. I have no objection to the consideration of this bill at this time, if sufficient time shall be given to myself and my colleagues who are especially interested in this matter to discuss the subject and bring it properly before the House, so that they may vote on it intelligently.

Mr. NEGLEY. If the gentleman will offer his amendment I will allow it to be pending, and will then call the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. STANARD. How long time does the gentleman propose to allow for the consideration of the bill on this occasion?

Mr. NEGLEY. I will give the gentlemen as much time as he wants out of my hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not got an hour.

Mr. NEGLEY. Will I not have an hour if the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendment?

The SPEAKER. That will not give the gentleman an hour.

Mr. CONGER. It was agreed in the Committee on Commerce that when this matter should be brought up an hour should be given to the discussion of it; and any motion tending to that——

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call the gentleman from Michigan to order.

Mr. CONGER. I think at least one hour should be given for the discussion of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call the gentleman to order. He shall not tell what was done in his committee-room.

Mr. CONGER. I do not ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to protect the honor of the Committee on Commerce or of myself. I can protect my honor myself.

Now, I think it but fair that in pursuance of the order of the House made heretofore one hour should be given to the consideration of this question and that the gentlemen who are opposed to this bill have their proper portion of the time to discuss the bill before the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not oppose this bill or favor it. I only desire that great public measures shall not be postponed for these small matters.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. BABCOCK, his Private Secretary.

The message informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. No. 4213) to provide for compensating the officers of the Government in observing the transit of Venus; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4214) declaratory of the act entitled "An act to amend the customs-revenue laws and to repeal moieties" approved June 22, 1874.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. NEGLEY. If I were to permit the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STANARD] to offer his amendment to the bill, could we secure the previous question? If the previous question is seconded on the bill and on the amendment, will not that entitle me to one hour?

The SPEAKER. It will not, because the hour that belongs to a member after the previous question is seconded is only when it is a report from a committee.

Mr. NEGLEY. Then is it not in order for me to move the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. An hour was given to the gentleman, and of course it ran from the time that the bill came before the House; but a motion was made to adjourn, on which the yeas and nays were called, and the time so occupied comes out of the gentleman's hour.

Mr. NEGLEY. I have no desire at all to prevent a discussion on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri; but if there be no discussion it is due to the fact that my time has been taken up by dilatory motions. Can I not move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to ask the previous question.

Mr. NEGLEY. Then I ask the previous question on the bill.

Mr. STANDARD. I hope such a bill as this will not be passed under a suspension of the rules, when there is so much to be said upon the subject pro and con.

Mr. MORRISON. If we wait to pass this bill until my friend from Missouri is ready to pass it, it never will be passed. The bill is substantially the same bill which once passed the House.

Mr. WELLS. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was put; and there were ayes 45, noes not counted.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The question recurred upon seconding the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. COTTON. I ask that the bill be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a privileged motion. I desire to move that the House proceed to business on the Speaker's table, to take therefrom the civil-rights bill. The morning hour having expired, I can take any one off the floor for that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that the gentleman cannot do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he cannot during the time allotted for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But that time has passed, if I understand it.

The SPEAKER. Not quite.

Mr. NEGLEY. A great deal of my time has been taken up by the introduction of other questions and that time should not be deducted from my hour.

Mr. STANDARD. I understood the gentleman made a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. NEGLEY. No, sir; I did not. I moved the previous question.

Mr. SPEER. I suggest to my colleague that he allow the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STANARD] to be considered pending; that is fair.

Mr. NEGLEY. I offered him that privilege some time ago, and he would not accept it.

Mr. STANARD. Then I offer the amendment now.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; when will the hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania expire?

The SPEAKER. In about five minutes.

The Clerk read Mr. STANARD's amendment, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "three" and insert "two;" so that it shall read "two straight, continuous spans;" and in line 7, after the word "hundred," insert the words "and fifty;" so that it will read "less than four hundred and fifty feet."

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being first upon the amendment offered by Mr. STANARD.

Mr. STANARD. May I be allowed to say a word in relation to that amendment?

Mr. NEGLEY. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Only about five minutes.

Mr. STANARD. This bill provides for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis.

Mr. NEGLEY. I must object to debate until I can make some arrangement with the gentleman.

Mr. STANARD. I repeat that this bill provides for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the city of Saint Louis.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object to debate.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I appeal to my colleague to allow our friend from Saint Louis to say a few words. He certainly ought to be allowed to speak upon this amendment.

Mr. STANARD. I am not opposed to this bill if they will allow an amendment to be put upon it. I wish to tell the House why this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. NEGLEY. I am willing to give the gentleman five or ten minutes to discuss his proposition; but gentlemen commence their operations by filibustering against the bill.

Mr. STANARD. I did not do so.

Mr. WELLS. It is the people of the Mississippi Valley against a private corporation.

Mr. MORRISON. There are as many people in Illinois as in Missouri, and we want this bridge.

Mr. NEGLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STANARD] for five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any five minutes to yield?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been seconded.

Mr. STANARD. I am obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] for yielding five minutes to me. This bill provides——

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to ask if I will have any time left after the gentleman from Missouri has spoken for five minutes?

The SPEAKER. Only by general consent.

Mr. NEGLEY. I hope the House will yield to me five minutes to make a reply.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the same amount of time being given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STANARD. This is a bill of a great deal of importance to the city of Saint Louis and to the southern and also the northern commerce of the Mississippi Valley. The bill provides for the construction of a bridge at the southern extremity of Saint Louis or at Carondelet. There has been one bridge built over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, with five hundred feet span, or five hundred feet between the piers. When that bridge bill was before Congress it was thought that it was necessary to have at least five hundred feet between the piers. The merchants of the city of Saint Louis are still of opinion that it is necessary to have as wide a water-way as possible between the piers of any bridge constructed at such a point.

This bill contemplates the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, or at Carondelet in the city of Saint Louis, with but four hundred feet span, or four hundred feet between the piers, one hundred feet less than the spans of the other bridge. This matter was considered of such great importance that the Secretary of War last summer convened a board of engineers, who were instructed to go to Carondelet and examine in regard to the construction of this bridge, what its width between the piers should be. I will read briefly what they say upon this subject from their report.

After having heard testimony from both sides, those who were in favor of a narrow-span bridge and those who were in favor of a wide-span bridge, and also hearing testimony from those who where mutually interested in both railroad and river commerce and had no private ends to subserve, the commission came to this conclusion—

That the bridge authorized by the preceding section to be built shall be subject to the following conditions: The two spans over the main channel of the river shall not be less than four hundred and fifty feet in the clear from pier to pier at low-water mark.

That is exactly what my amendment contemplates shall be the width of this span, four hundred feet from pier to pier, in accordance with the recommendation of the board of engineers. The commission go on to say:

No fixed span over the water shall be less than two hundred and fifty feet in the clear; the elevation of the channel spans of said bridge shall not be less than one hundred feet above low-water mark, measured to the lowest part of the superstructure; a pivot-draw, giving two clear openings of one hundred and sixty feet each, measured on the low-water line, shall be provided at a place of safe and convenient access at all stages.

The representatives of the city of Saint Louis, with a desire to make a compromise and with no desire to oppose the construction of this bridge, after thorough consultation, have agreed to do away with the draw which this report contemplates, and ask simply that the bridge shall be made with spans of four hundred and fifty feet, instead of four hundred feet in the clear between the piers. They are willing to make this concession to the bridge company. The only matter in dispute now, the only difference of opinion between the constructors of this bridge and the merchants and others is this: the constructors desire to build the bridge with four hundred feet span between the piers, and those opposed want four hundred and fifty feet.

If this bill is to pass, (and I hope it will pass if the House will put on my amendment,) I hope it will be with an amendment giving four hundred and fifty feet span between the piers instead of only four hundred feet. There has yet been constructed no bridge across the Mississippi River between Saint Louis and New Orleans. The commerce upon that river is enormous. The tow-boats run with large tows upon either side. If you allow this bridge to be constructed at the southern extremity of the city of Saint Louis with but four hundred feet span you will be setting a precedent for the building of other bridges every two or three hundred miles from Saint Louis to New Orleans with four hundred feet between the piers, thereby greatly obstructing navigation and commerce.

The engineers say further:

The above provisions are believed to be just and reasonable to the interests of rivers and railroads.

I have no interests to serve here except those of the public. I am as much interested in the construction and maintenance of railroads as I am in the navigation of rivers; but I believe, as a representative of the people of the city where this bridge starts, that this proposition to require spans of four hundred and fifty feet is a fair compromise as between all interests.

Mr. Speaker, the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, composed entirely of merchants, who are as much interested in railroad transportation as in river navigation, have thoroughly considered this subject, and reached conclusions which I have not time to read in full. Some of them are quite radical in their views, believing that this bridge at South Saint Louis should have piers distant five hundred feet, instead of four hundred and fifty; but a majority are willing to agree to a compromise, and consent to spans of four hundred and fifty feet, as the bill will provide if my amendment be adopted. The report of the merchants of the city of Saint Louis, after discussing the matter thoroughly, concludes in this way:

If, however, in the judgment of your board, a truss-bridge of five hundred feet span is impracticable, we would suggest four hundred and fifty feet as being the least width of span at all consistent with the requirements of navigation, with a height of one hundred feet above high-water. We deem it imperatively necessary, to meet the various exigencies that are probable to arise in the future, that no bridge except a suspension bridge should be built without a draw across a navigable stream; and we feel assured that the observation and sound judgment of your board of engineers will fully indorse this necessity.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House to the provisions of the bill now pending, which has been fully considered by the Committee on Commerce in the last as well as the present session of Congress. The proposition to extend this span is not a proposition to give additional water-way. It will lessen the water-way. The channel at the point of the location of this bridge is only eight hundred feet wide; the whole water-way is about twelve hundred feet at high water. Hence by having three spans of four hundred feet greater water-way will be given than with one or two spans of five hundred feet. Consequently the bill in its present form is in the interest of navigation. Again, this bridge is to be constructed at a great elevation. From the top of the piers to the base in the bottom of the river the distance is one hundred and forty feet. Any additional elevation, entailing an additional expense, will be an unnecessary tax upon commerce. The gentleman from Missouri admits that there is no objection to this bridge. It has been authorized by law. This bill is simply an amendment of the existing law as to the plan of construction. The report of the engineers states that "arch-bridges, unless of extraordinary height, are utterly inadmissible over navigable streams."

Now the opposition as it has been disclosed by the arguments before the committee comes from the friends and stockholders of another bridge company, a company now charging a tax of five dollars a car upon every car-load of coal carried from the coal-fields of Illinois into the State of Missouri. In lessening the expense in the construction of the bridge and removing a monopoly through competition, it is in the interests of commerce. The Committee on Commerce have considered all the objections, and have listened with much patience to every appeal from the friends of the other bridge company, and have directed me to report the bill and ask its passage without the amendment. I trust that the eloquent appeals of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STANARD] may not warp the judgment of the House in opposition to a measure proposing cheap transportation and a free right of way across a great river.

Mr. STANARD. We make no opposition to the passage of the bill with the amendment.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I wish to ask my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] whether this bill contains any provision to prevent the rights which it confers upon this company from being assigned or transferred to other parties?

Mr. NEGLEY. I believe it does. The bill provides that the law as it now exists shall remain intact except so far as amended by this bill. I ask a vote. I hope the House will vote down the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. STANARD was read as follows:

Strike out after "river" the word "three," and insert "two;" insert after "hundred" the word "fifty," so as to read: "To erect over the main channel of said river two straight continuous spans of not less than four hundred and fifty feet."

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. STANARD, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 103, noes 61.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. LAMAR called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 218, nays 5, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Barrere, Bass, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. So the bill was passed.

Mr. NEGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 170) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy who were dropped, furloughed, or retired under the act of February 28, 1855;

An act (S. No. 448) for the relief of John T. Smith; and

An act (S. No. 597) for the relief of William A. Griffin.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4119) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant a patent for certain land in the Territory of Arizona; and

An act (H. R. No. 4163) to provide an appropriation for continuing the construction of the post-office and custom-house at Saint Louis, Missouri.

ALLUVIAL BASIN OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of the commission of engineers appointed in compliance with the act of Congress approved June 22, 1874, to investigate and report a permanent plan for the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River subject to inundation.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 25, 1875.

The communication, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Select Committee on the Mississippi Levees, and ordered to be printed.

THE CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move the rules be so suspended that the bill of the Senate known as the civil-rights bill be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at the present time, and so continuously until a final disposition shall be had thereof; and that no dilatory motion, save a single motion to adjourn, be allowed until such bill and any amendments allowed thereto have been finally disposed of.

Mr. BECK. Pending that I move we adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Can that be done?

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to suspend the rules, one motion to adjourn is in order—but one is.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to debate.

The proposition was again read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes not counted.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 80, nays 153, not voting 55, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. So the House refused to adjourn.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. RANDALL demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 147, nays 93, not voting 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. KNAPP. On this question I am paired with Mr. STOWELL, of Virginia, and Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. If they had been present they would have voted "ay," and I would have voted "no."

Mr. MOREY. My colleague, Mr. SHELDON, is unavoidably absent. If present he would have voted "ay."

Mr. HALE, of Maine. My colleague, Mr. FRYE, is absent on business of the House. If present he would have voted "ay."

Mr. MOORE. On this question I am paired with Mr. ELDREDGE, of Wisconsin, who if present would have voted in the negative, while I would have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SAWYER. I am also paired with my colleague, Mr. ELDREDGE, who if present would have voted "no," while I would have voted "ay."

Mr. ALBERT. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WILSON. If present, he would have voted "no," and I would have voted "ay."

Mr. FIELD. On this question I also am paired with Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. He would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. SMART. My colleague, Mr. MACDOUGALL, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. POLAND. My colleague, Mr. HENDEE, is necessarily absent. If here, he would vote "ay."

Mr. GUNCKEL. My colleague, Mr. DANFORD, is absent, detained by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts, moved that the House adjourn.

THE FINANCES.

Mr. BRIGHT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the financial situation. (See Appendix.)

GROUNDS AROUND COLUMBIA HOSPITAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an appropriation required for completing the purchase of the ground surrounding the Columbia Hospital; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to the proposed substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2978) for reorganizing the Treasury Department, and also a table accompanying the substitute, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The letter of the Secretary is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1875.

SIR: I have carefully examined the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed to be submitted by Mr. KELLOGG, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to the bill (H. R. No. 2978) to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes, and fully approve of the same.

In view of the fact that many of the offices and clerkships of the Department are authorized from year to year by the annual appropriation bills, I deem it highly important that they should be provided for in the form of permanent statute, no reorganization of the Department having been made by law since 1853, and it is very desirable that the reorganization proposed in this bill should now be perfected.

I am, very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary.

Hon. STEPHEN W. KELLOGG,
Chairman Committee on Reform in the Civil Service,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TYNER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, made a special order for Wednesday next after the morning hour, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TYNER. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That when the bill providing appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1876, shall be pending in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it shall be in order to consider changes in existing laws as follows:

First. For change of the mode of compensating and computing the salaries of postmasters;

Second. Concerning the manner of taking the weight of the mails carried over railroad routes;

Third. So as to authorize the payment of clerks, lithographers, and experts employed in the publication and preparation of post-route maps, out of specific appropriations for that purpose;

Fourth. For change in, and repeal of, the law requiring all advertisements, notices, and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments of the Government to be advertised in three daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia; and Fifth. For change in the law concerning the manner of keeping the accounts for the Post-Office Department in the Sixth Auditor's Office.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I object, unless there is also a provision to abolish the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. TYNER. I have moved to suspend the rules to make these amendments in order; and I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that some of these amendments have come to me suggested by members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are all in the interest of economy.

Mr. TYNER. And let me further say that the Committee on Appropriations, in some of the matters embraced in the resolution, have prepared no amendments, but have been desired to obtain a suspension of the rules so as to enable the Post-Office Committee to propose the changes.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 74, noes 43.

Mr. TYNER. I call for tellers. I have been waiting all day to get this in.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TYNER, and Mr. HARRIS of Virginia, were appointed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am on the same side as the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the gentleman's count.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 107, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

PROCEEDINGS IN THE CASE OF RICHARD B. IRWIN.

The following are the court proceedings under the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Richard B. Irwin:

Supreme court of the District of Columbia—before Justice MacArthur, at chambers, Washington, D. C., January 14, 1875.

Proceedings in the matter of the petition of Richard B. Irwin, praying for a writ of habeas corpus.

PETITION.

Supreme court District of Columbia—Ex-parte Richard B. Irwin praying for writ of habeas corpus.

Petition and affidavit.

To the honorable the supreme court of the District of Columbia:

The petition of Richard B. Irwin, a citizen of the State of California, respectfully represents, that he is now restrained of his liberty and detained in confinement by N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; that the said N. G. Ordway claims to act under the authority of the House of Representatives and by virtue of an order issued to him by the Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, Speaker of the House of Representatives, commanding him, the said Ordway, to take your petitioner into his custody and confine him in the jail of this District.

Your petitioner further shows that the material facts concerning his detention, as he understands them, are that he was summoned before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and questioned concerning certain matters alleged, but erroneously, to be relative to an investigation of an alleged improper use of money to obtain from Congress a subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which questions petitioner declined to answer, because the committee had no authority or legal right to propound them; that your petitioner was then taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and on the 7th day of January, A. D. 1875, brought to the bar of the House, where certain questions were propounded to him which he refused to answer, because the House of Representatives had no legal right to propound such questions, and on his refusal he was again ordered into custody and confinement, to the end that proceedings in due course of law might be instituted against him by the district attorney of the United States for this District under the act of January 24, 1857. (11 United States Statutes at Large, pages 155, 156.) Your petitioner respectfully represents that his arrest and confinement are contrary to law and in violation of his constitutional and legal rights as a citizen of the United States:

Wherefore he prays, the premises being considered, that your honor will be pleased to issue a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, directed to the said N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, commanding him, at such time and place as your honor may signify, to have before you the body of the petitioner, to the end that the cause of his detention may be investigated, and that he may be discharged from further detention, or such other relief be entered in the premises as to law and justice may pertain. And as in duty bound, &c.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Richard B. Irwin, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that the facts set forth in the foregoing petition are true.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of January.

CHARLES WALTER, J. P.

DURANT & HORNOR,
Of Counsel for Petitioner.

[Indorsement.]

Order of Judge MacArthur.

Let the writ issue as prayed for, returnable on the 12th instant, at twelve o'clock m., at City Hall.

MACARTHUR, Justice.

JANUARY 9, 1875.

Order for extension of time of return to writ.

Let the time to make return to within writ be extended to Thursday, the 14th instant, at eleven o'clock.

MACARTHUR, Justice.

JANUARY 12, 1875.

CLERK'S OFFICE OF THE SUPREME COURT DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
January 9, 1875.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, &c.

SIR: By order of Justice MacArthur, one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, I hereby notify you that, on the petition of Richard B. Irwin, a copy of which is herewith inclosed, a writ of habeas corpus has been allowed and issued, addressed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, commanding him to have the body of Richard B. Irwin before one of the justices of said court, at the City Hall, in the city of Washington, on Tuesday, the 12th instant, at twelve o'clock noon of said day.

Respectfully,

R. J. MEIGS,
Clerk of Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

[Indorsement.]

To Speaker of the House of Representatives, notifying him of the issuance of habeas corpus for Richard B. Irwin, returnable before one of the justices, &c., on the 12th instant, at City Hall.

CLERK'S OFFICE SUPREME COURT DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
January 9, 1875.

Hon. GEORGE P. FISHER,
United States Attorney for District of Columbia.

SIR: By order of Justice MacArthur, I hereby notify you that Richard B. Irwin, committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, by order of said House, has sued out a habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, which has been served on the Sergeant-at-Arms aforesaid, commanding him to have said Irwin before one of the justices of said court at the City Hall, in the city of Washington, on Tuesday, the 12th instant, at noon of that day.

Respectfully,

R. J. MEIGS,
Clerk of said Court.

[Indorsement.]

To the United States district attorney, notifying him of the issuance of habeas corpus for Richard B. Irwin, returnable before one of the justices, &c., on the 12th instant, at the City Hall.

Supreme court District of Columbia—before Justice MacArthur, at chambers.

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, January 14, 1875.

Proceedings in the matter of the petition of Richard B. Irwin, praying for a writ of habeas corpus.

There appeared as counsel for the petitioner, Messrs. T. J. Durant, J. W. Moore, and C. P. Culver; as counsel for the respondent, Mr. N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives, Messrs. Fisher and Shellabarger. Mr. Ordway accompanied counsel for Government.

Mr. Ordway having sworn to the return, Judge Fisher was about to read the same; when—

Mr. DURANT said: As this is the first time that I have ever had the honor of appearing before this court in a case of this character, and as I am, therefore, not familiar with the proper course of practice, I deem it necessary, in consideration of the important interest involved in this case, both in the nature of the proceeding and the consequences that it has directly in view, touching the liberty of the citizen, that I ask now that no return be listened to from the party to whom this habeas corpus was directed until he comply with the order and produce in court the body of the prisoner. And if that be a point regarding which there is the slightest doubt on the mind of your honor, I will say that the authorities both in Great Britain and in the United States are conclusive upon that point; that it is the preliminary duty of whomsoever the writ may be addressed to to comply in the first instance with the order of the court and produce the body of the prisoner. I did not know from the intimation that fell from the learned counsel for the Sergeant-at-Arms, when this case was last before the court, day before yesterday, what would be the course of proceedings to-day. I did not know whether any argument would be entered into to-day, or what course the argument would take; therefore I have not come here prepared with authorities on the subject. If, as I have just intimated, there be any doubt on this point in the mind of the court, I will ask the indulgence of a few moments' time in order that I may have an opportunity of sending a messenger, whom I have brought with me from my office, for the volumes which I have ready, to show exactly what the course of jurisprudence has been in Great Britain and the United States on this point.

The COURT. Will you just read the writ, merely for information of the court without calling for the return?

Mr. Durant then read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, to wit:

The President of the United States to N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America, greeting:

You are hereby commanded to have the body of Richard B. Irwin, detained under your custody, as it is said, together with the day and cause of his being taken and detained, by whatever name he may be called in the same, before one of the justices of the supreme court of said District, at the City Hall, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, on Tuesday, the 12th day of January, 1875, at twelve o'clock noon of said day, to do and receive whatever shall then and there be considered of in this behalf; and have then there this writ.

Witness Arthur MacArthur, one of the justices of said court, the 9th day of January, 1875.

By order of Justice MacArthur:

[Indorsement.]

Served copy of the within writ on N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives of the United States, this 9th day of January, 1875.

ALEX. SHARPE,
United States Marshal, District of Columbia.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. May it please the court, the proposition of my friend, who represents the relator in this case, is perhaps a little premature. The paper that we were about to present to the court has the character as much of a showing why the body of the relator should not be transferred from the custody of the House of Representatives to the custody of this court as it has the character of a return to the writ. The showing that my associate was about to make, by the presentation of the papers, is one bearing upon the very question that we invite this jurisdiction now to entertain, to wit, whether it is within the competency of this court, after the production of the records of the House of Representatives and other proper returns about to be read, it appearing by such records and papers that the custody is now in the House of Representatives, in virtue of the exercise of its constitutional functions and jurisdiction, and is undergoing execution of the judgment of the House of Representatives, to transfer that custody from the House of Representatives and to put it at the disposal of any other tribunal of this country. In order to get before your honor the proper facts bearing upon that question, we were about to present the papers, and we now ask that the court shall take up and entertain the motion that we make at the conclusion of this return or presentation, to wit, that, it being made to appear by the records of the House of Representatives that this custody is in the House, this proceeding shall be here arrested, and that the custody of the House of Representatives shall not be disturbed in virtue of this proceeding. Upon that question we surely shall insist upon the right to be heard fully, now and here, or at any other time that may suit the convenience of the court and of counsel. I recognize fully, as was suggested in the opening sentence of my distinguished and learned friend, the fact that this is a high and important question; important in every possible view of it; important as affecting the liberty of the citizen, as affecting the prerogatives and offices of that great prerogative writ the habeas corpus, and also important, your honor, as deeply and vitally affecting the jurisdiction and practice of those two great courts of the country, the two Houses of Congress, and you will go cautiously, I know, and carefully, as we all will, with a full sense of our responsibility, step by step, in the progress of this singular case. Then, to repeat, the proposition that we are now about to make, and which we propose to lay the foundation for arguing by the presentation of these papers, is, that it is competent for the House of Representatives to show to this court that there is custody here which is its own, which cannot be disturbed, whenever to the courts of the country it shall be made to appear, in the proper way, that the subject-matter that has brought about the custody is one of which it has exclusive jurisdiction, and the jurisdictional fact being disclosed by these papers, then the question left, and the only one, is whether that jurisdiction shall be disturbed, or the custody resulting from that jurisdiction shall be interfered with.

Mr. DURANT. I did not propose, may it please your honor, when I arose, to argue the case.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I have not argued it.

Mr. DURANT. I did not say my learned friend had argued it.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I only wish to be understood.

Mr. DURANT. I said when I arose I did not propose to argue it, and of course what I propose does not dispose of him. May it please your honor, it may turn out—the gentleman no doubt believes it will—that when he shall have made his showing such as he presumes himself to be in possession of, to this court, that this court may feel itself not authorized to disturb the custody of the prisoner at the bar. But that is not the point in question. The point is whether the preliminary order of this court, which it is not only its undoubted right, but, with due respect, I may be permitted to say, its bounden duty to issue, shall be complied with or not.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Excuse me a moment. There was one statement I should have made. It is that the very production of the body is a disturbance of the custody of the House.

The COURT. Mr. Shellabarger, is not that incident to every proceeding upon habeas corpus, where the person is in custody under color of process, and the mandate of the writ in this case is precisely what it is in all other cases, that the body of the person in custody shall be produced?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. My colleague will reply.

Mr. FISHER. I was simply going to observe, may it please your honor, that according to the form and precedents that we have consulted in the preparation of the answer of this respondent in this case, particularly in respect to the form and precedent of the return made in the great case of Nugent, which was tried in this District, before the supreme court of the District, some years ago, in 1848 or 1849, and reported in the American Law Journal of that year, there is nothing said in the return about the production of the body. I mean now in cases where parties have been held in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States of America. The writ of habeas corpus has been issued, and returns have been made, without the production of the body—at least if we may judge at all from inspecting the return itself. In the case of Nugent, Robert Beale then being Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate—a case in which Nugent had been in prison by order and command of the Senate, or committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of that body—in that case the habeas corpus was served upon Mr. Beale, and he makes his return in a somewhat similar fashion to that in which we make the return for the respondent in this case, but there was no production of the body, so far as the proceedings in the case, which seem to be fully reported, are concerned, show. If the body of the relator in this case should be produced by the Sergeant-at-Arms, eo instantia, upon the production of that body, the House of Representatives, and the Sergeant-at-Arms as the legal officer of that House, into whose custody he has been placed by the House, eo instantia, upon his producing him in this court, the jurisdiction of the House is interfered with; the custody of the relator is taken out of the House, and out of its officer's hands, and the relator is put into the custody of this court, and the Sergeant-at-Arms could not possibly be held responsible if an escape were to be made.

I wish further to state, may it please your honor, that in the case of Bell, a case lately occurring in this District, the return was made by this same gentleman, this same respondent here, as is in this case, Mr. ORDWAY, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, without the production of the body before Judge Wylie, who issued the writ; and the decision of the judge in that case was that it was not necessary to produce the body, because this court and the judges of this court were bound to take judicial cognizance of all the acts, resolutions, and orders that were passed by either House of Congress of the United States. In that case the writ was produced in the court, and not the body at all. Now, in regard to the remark which I made about the transfer of jurisdiction, the interference with the jurisdiction of the House, and the transfer of the custody, I cite your honor to 12 Wallace, pages 400 and 402, in the case of Barth vs. Clise, the syllabus of which case is—I deem it necessary only to read that.

Judge Fisher then read as follows:

"BARTH VS. CLISE, SHERIFF.

"When a sheriff, in obedience to a writ of habeas corpus, makes a proper return and brings his prisoner before the court which issued the writ, the safe-keeping of the prisoner while he is before it is entirely under the control and direction of the court to which the return is made. The sheriff is accordingly not responsible for escape of the prisoner while thus in the custody of the court, and before a remand or other order placing new duties on him."

This is the syllabus of the case. I will now read a passage or two from the opinion. The decision is delivered by Mr. Justice Swayne, in which he says:

"By the common law, upon the return of a writ of habeas corpus and the production of the body of the party suing it out, the authority under which the original commitment took place is superseded. After that time and until the case is finally disposed of, the safe-keeping of the prisoner is entirely under the control and direction of the court to which the return is made. The prisoner is detained, not under the original commitment, but under the authority of the writ of habeas corpus. Pending the hearing he may be bailed de die in diem, or be remanded to the jail whence he came, or be committed to any other suitable place of confinement under the control of the court."

So that the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives of the United States, one of the highest courts in the land will be interfered with if we are compelled to produce the body under a mandate of this writ.

The COURT. It is not my design to interfere with the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, any further than it is absolutely necessary for the purposes of this case. But it appears to me that this court can have no jurisdiction in this case without the production of the body. The authorities just read by counsel are to the effect that the jurisdiction of this court attaches to the body of the person held in restraint, so that it is in the safe-keeping, under the control and supervision of this court, during the examination upon the habeas corpus, otherwise this court could have no power whatever to enforce a judgment which it might render upon the case. If, for instance, this court upon very deliberate examination—and certainly no court would come to a conclusion adverse to the jurisdiction of authority of either branch of Congress without mature thought—but if it should happen that this court should conclude, upon the whole, that there is no jurisdiction in the House of Representatives in this particular case, how could that judgment be enforced if we had no jurisdiction of the body of the person held in custody?

Judge FISHER. Will your honor pardon me if I interrupt you a moment to explain that the nature of our return is to cite to your honor a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States? The nature and character of our return is to exhibit and to make manifest to your honor that your honor had no authority to issue this writ. Now I put this case: If the regular mode of suing out a writ of habeas corpus, the court being in session, had been pursued, that is to say, if a motion had been made before your honor, sitting in this court, in this criminal court, or before all the judges sitting in banc; if a motion had been made by my learned friend on the other side for a writ of habeas corpus, I take it for granted that your honor, or the court in banc, would have decided precisely as this superior tribunal has decided in the case of Kearney, to be found in 7 Wheaton, as far back as 1822; and as it is very short, I propose to read it to your honor, to show that if your honor had no authority to issue this writ in the first instance, it certainly is plain for us to show now here the want of authority, and therefore we are not compelled to produce the body of the relator in court.

The COURT. What is the case?

Judge FISHER. The case is Ex-parte Kearney. It is reported in 7 Wheaton on page 38.

The court further says:

"This court has authority to issue a habeas corpus where a person is imprisoned under the warrant or order of any other court of the United States. But this court has no appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases confided to it by the laws of the United States, and cannot revise the judgment of the circuit courts by writ of error in any case where a party has been convicted of a public offense.

"Hence the court will not grant a habeas corpus where a party has been committed for a contempt adjudged by a court of competent jurisdiction. In such a case this court will not inquire into the sufficiency of the cause of commitment. The case of Crosby, lord mayor of London, 3 Wilson, 188, commented on, and its authority confirmed."

The reporter goes on and gives the proceedings in the case as follows:

"Mr. Jones moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the body of John T. Kearney, now in jail in the custody of the marshal, under a commitment of the circuit court for the District of Columbia for an alleged contempt. The petition stated that on the trial of an indictment in that court the petitioner was examined as a witness, and refused to answer a certain question which was put to him, because he conceived it tended materially to implicate him and to criminate him as a particeps criminis. The objection was overruled by the court, and he, having persisted in refusing to answer the question, was committed to jail for the supposed contempt, and for no other cause.

"Mr. Jones, for the petitioner, argued: First, That this court has power to issue the writ of habeas corpus in every case where the personal liberty of the citizen is restrained under the judicial authority of the Union. The jurisdiction is settled by a uniform series of decisions. It had been exercised in a case of treason; in a case where the warrant of commitment was defective in not showing a good cause certain on oath or affirmation; and at last the case of Bollman and Swartwout settled the power of the court to be universal and co-extensive with the general judicial power of the Union. Second, he insisted that a fit case was made out to justify the exercise of the jurisdiction upon the present application. The jurisdiction of this court cannot depend upon the nature of the commitment by the other court. The writ of habeas corpus is a writ of right, and the nature and grounds of the commitment are to be looked into on the return. This court must have power to issue the writ where an inferior court commits even for a contempt; because, if the process of contempt be a branch of criminal judicature, considered as a punishment for an offense, this court has authority to control all inferior courts and magistrates. In England the court of common pleas, although a tribunal of original and civil jurisdiction only, has, from the earliest times, exercised the authority of issuing the writ of habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of commitments by other jurisdictions."

I will pass over the argument of the district attorney (Mr. Swann) and proceed to read the opinion of Justice Story.

Mr. Justice Story delivered the opinion of the court, and after stating the case, proceeded as follows:

"Upon the argument of this motion two questions have been made: first, whether this court has authority to issue a habeas corpus where a person is in jail under the warrant or order of any other court of the United States; secondly, if it had, whether upon the facts stated a fit case is made out to justify the exercise of such an authority.

"As to the first question, it is unnecessary to say more than that the point has already passed in rem judicatum in this court. In the case of Bollman and Swartwout, 4 Cranch, 75, it was expressly decided, upon full argument, that this court possessed such an authority, and the question has ever since been considered at rest.

"The second part is of much more importance. It is to be considered that this court has no appellate jurisdiction confided to it in criminal cases by the laws of the United States. It cannot entertain a writ of error to revise the judgment of the circuit court in any case where a party has been convicted of a public offense. And undoubtedly the denial of this authority proceeded upon great principles of public policy and convenience. If every party had a right to bring before this court every case in which judgment had passed against him for a crime or misdemeanor or felony, the course of justice might be materially delayed and obstructed, and in some cases totally frustrated. If, then, this court cannot directly revise a judgment of the circuit court in a criminal case, what reason is there to suppose that it was intended to vest it with the authority to do so indirectly?

"It is also to be observed that there is no question here but that this commitment was made by a court of competent jurisdiction and in the exercise of an unquestionable authority."

And that is just what we propose to show to your honor in this case; so that if it had been made known to your honor, upon application being made, a motion being made for the issuance of the writ, that the relator was properly in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, being committed to his custody by proper authority of a competent court, that then the writ would not have issued—

"The only objection is, not that the court acted beyond its jurisdiction, but that it erred in its judgment of the law applicable to the case. If, then, we are to give any relief in this case, it is by a revision of the opinion of the court"—

Just what your honor would have to do here. You would have to revise the opinion of the House of Representatives—

"given in the course of a criminal trial, and thus asserting a right to control its proceedings and take from them the conclusive effect which the law intended to give them. If this were an application for a habeas corpus after judgment on an indictment for an offense within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, it could hardly be maintained that this court could revise such a judgment, or the proceedings which led to it, or set it aside and discharge the prisoner. There is, in principle, no distinction between that case and the present; for when a court commits a party for contempt, their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment in consequence is execution; and so the law was settled upon full deliberation in the case of Brass Crosby, lord mayor of London." (3 Wilson, 188.)

Now, I submit to your honor that here has been a conviction of the relator in this case by a court of competent jurisdiction, and he is now in custody in execution of a judgment of that court of competent jurisdiction, to wit, the House of Representatives of the United States of America. And it is not in the province of your honor, or of the court of which your honor is an honored member, to sit here as a court of appeals for the House of Representatives, to revise and review the decisions which it has made in regard to the punishment of any offender who has been brought before it for contempt or otherwise.

The COURT. I recognize the entire distinctness and authority of that decision, and under such circumstances as existed in that case it certainly would guide my action here. There can be no doubt at this day, where a person is committed for a contempt by a tribunal having jurisdiction of the case, the judgment is final and conclusive; and no other tribunal on a collateral proceeding, like habeas corpus or certiorari, can examine into the propriety or justice of that cause. Now, I think that is the full extent of that authority. But that question is to be determined upon the examination of the case itself. If it turns out upon such investigation that the contempt, that the commitment, has been within the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives who had ordered it, that is the end of our jurisdiction here, and then the person in custody is remanded to the Sergeant-at-Arms, into whose custody he was ordered by the House. But that goes to the merits of the case. That is the very essence of the controversy. The Constitution provides that the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, except in cases of insurrection and rebellion. And the writ of habeas corpus carries along with it, as an indispensable incident, the production of the body held in custody. A few cases have occurred in this country during the exigencies of war in which the military authority, from the necessity of the case, refused to produce the person held in custody under military orders; but I hardly think that would apply to the circumstances under which we are placed. I am very clear, therefore, in my opinion that the Sergeant-at-Arms must produce the body with his return. This court will be very careful, indeed, to see that the jurisdiction of the House over this person shall not be disturbed any further than it is absolutely necessary for the administration of law upon this rule.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. After what has occurred, it would seem indecorous for counsel to make any further suggestion, if it were not for the exceeding gravity of this case and of the consequences that would result from a clash of alleged jurisdictions. In our solicitude, your honor, to avoid that, will you indulge another additional suggestion, or two?

The COURT. Certainly.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Now our application, your honor, is in the nature, not as I said, of a return to this writ; not in the nature of a trial of the question that will arise upon the writ, but it is in the nature of a motion to quash the writ; or, if you please, of a resistance—had we been heard at the time—a resistance to its being granted. Our position is, that it is that case of improvident issuance of a writ; not improvident in any offensive or any bad sense, but in the sense that such disclosures were not made to your honor as that you could have in advance, ad limini, the nature of this custody. Now I could, if the time permitted and the books were here, point your honor to case after case where this very question has arisen as to improvidence and inadvertence of the issuance of the writ in proposed disturbance of the custody of the houses of Parliament—of Congress; where the courts have said that had we known at the time of the issuance of this writ, the facts that are disclosed by the records of the body which are now returned to us, it never would have been issued. This issuance was ex parte, the parties now concerned, whom I represent, having had no opportunity to make any showing. Now I appeal to the court is it not proper, is it not an exceedingly meet thing to do, that here, as a threshold measure, we should bring to your honor, by producing the record of the House, the knowledge of the custody of this witness, which is not assailable, which is invulnerable, and which, as your honor has just intimated, under the authority of the Supreme Court, here cannot be inquired into? Is it not proper before the House of Representatives shall be deprived of the custody of this man that they shall have an opportunity to be heard on a motion to quash this writ, as an improvidently issued one, and to present what there is to be said on that subject? That is what we ask. We ask that your honor shall entertain that motion as if that application for a writ were now first made, and that we shall be heard at any time.

The COURT. I misunderstood the nature of your application.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I regret the fact.

Judge FISHER. The return we make concludes with asking a prayer that the writ be dismissed.

The COURT. From what transpired in the discussion, I supposed you proposed reading the return.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. It was not, as I said carefully in the opening. It would perform the offices of the return, if this were the time for the return, but it is now presented, as I said, rather in the nature of a motion to arrest here the proceedings. I will get Judge Fisher to read it.

The COURT. Then I understand, now, that your application is a motion to quash the writ.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Yes, sir.

The COURT. Not to make a return to it.

Mr. DURANT. And in opposition to that motion, I ask that the body of the prisoner be brought here, because that is the order of this court. And unless the primary order of this court be obeyed, this court has no certainty that any other order which it may make in the case will be obeyed. For, after the gentlemen shall have been heard on their motion to quash the writ, if your honor should, perchance, disagree with them, and think it ought not to be quashed, then they will not obey that order.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Then we will either take the order of the House, or produce the body.

Mr. DURANT. Yes; I am prepared to show, may it please your honor, that in the tribunals of Great Britain, in precisely the same cases as this is, where the prisoner was in custody by the order of the House of Commons, invariably under the order of the court, and as preliminary to everything else, before any movement is made in the matter of a return—the reading of the return—the prisoner is brought into court. I say again, there can be no satisfaction in the mind of the court that any order in this case will be obeyed, unless its first order is obeyed; and in reply to what was intimated very improvidently by the counsel on the other side, that there had been any improvident issue of a writ in this case, I will call his attention to the declaration of the petition itself, which distinctly informs this court that the prisoner was in custody by virtue of an order of the House of Representatives directed to its Sergeant-at-Arms to punish him for a contempt committed, as was alleged, in not answering certain questions propounded to him by the Speaker at the bar of the House, and under the order of the House. So that so far as there being anything improvident, any misunderstanding in the case, as would result from the intimation of the gentlemen that something had been left, something had been omitted which the court was not informed of, it is an entire mistake.

The case in 7 Wheaton, may it please your honor, is entirely dissimilar from this. There is no resemblance whatever. By the Constitution and act of 1789, the Supreme Court of the United States has no jurisdiction; no appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases, save only where the judges of the supreme court differ in opinion in a criminal case, and certify that difference to the Supreme Court of the United States. Now in a case where they should certify a difference of opinion, it would clearly be competent for the Supreme Court of the United States to issue a writ of habeas corpus or certiorari and have the prisoner, with the cause of his commitment, and the proceedings in the cause, brought before them, as has been done over and over again; as was done very recently in the celebrated case of Lange who was convicted and improperly punished by Judge Benedict, of New York; a case with which your honor is perfectly familiar.

Now, from the time of Lord Raymond—I have Lord Raymond's reports here and I will read from the celebrated case of Paty, to be found on page 1105—down through all the cases, you find that invariably the prisoners were brought before the court:

"In the case of Regina vs. Paty et alios, Paty and four others were committed by the speaker of the House of Commons by virtue of an order of that house; and upon a habeas corpus to bring them before this court, the warrant was returned, which follows in hæc verba."

* * * * * * *

"The defendants were brought up upon the Saturday, and Mr. Mountague, Mr. Page, Mr. Lechmere, and Mr. Denton argued that they ought to be discharged."

Judge FISHER. What is that book?

Mr. DURANT. Second volume Lord Raymond's Reports, 1105–1106.

Then I will call attention to the case in 1 Wilson—the case of Hon. Alexander Murray.

Mr. Durant then read as follows:

"An habeas corpus directed to the keeper of Newgate to bring the body of Alex. Murray, esq.; whereupon it was returned and certified to the court that the prisoner, by the order of the House of Commons of the 7th of February, was committed to Newgate for an high contempt of that house, and he was not to be permitted to have pen, ink, or paper, nor should anybody be permitted to see him without the order of the house; that the keeper was afterward served with several orders of the house to permit the doctor, apothecary, and some relations to see him, and being now brought to the bar, and appearing to be in a very bad state of health from his imprisonment."

Then, in the case of Bras Crosby, esq., lord mayor of London:

"The lieutenant of the Tower of London was commanded to have before the justices of the bench here the body of Bras Crosby, esq., lord mayor of London, by him detained in the King's prison."

Then follows the writ, which is as follows:

"Whereas the House of Commons have this day adjudged that Bras Crosby, esq., lord mayor of London, a member of this house, having signed a warrant for the commitment of the messenger of the house for having executed the warrant of the speaker, issued under the order of the house, and held the said messenger to bail, is guilty of a breach of the privilege of the house; and whereas the said house hath this day ordered that the said Bras Crosby, esq., and lord mayor of London and a member of this house, be for the said offense committed to the Tower of London: these are therefore to require you to receive into your custody the body of the said Bras Crosby, esq., and him safely keep during the pleasure of the said house, for which this shall be a sufficient warrant.

"Given under my hand the 25th day of March, 1771."

And then adds:

"And that this was the cause of the caption and detention of the said Bras Crosby in the prison aforesaid; the body of which said Bras Crosby he hath here ready, as by the said writ he was commanded." &c.

The COURT. I think there can be no doubt that upon making the return the body must be produced; but it is only when the return is made.

Mr. DURANT. A motion to quash the habeas corpus is a thing I never heard of in my life before. The learned gentlemen on the other side have had much more experience at the bar than I, and much more familiarity with the practice of this and other courts, and will no doubt be able to find some authority to throw light upon this subject. I must confess my profound ignorance of a motion to quash the writ of habeas corpus, which I have always heard was ex debito justitiæ, and no judge could refuse it.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. It was refused in the case read.

Mr. DURANT. My learned friend thinks because it was refused in the case, there may be a motion to quash it.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. You said you never knew it to be refused.

Mr. DURANT. I did not say that I never knew it to be refused. I said that I never knew of the motion being made to quash it. That does not prove there can be no motion to quash it, because there are a vast number of things that I do not know in this world, very naturally; but I said I never heard of it before, and I gave as a reason why I never heard of it that it was ex debito justitiæ, and that unless on the face of the petition which the party presents the judge to whom it is presented says that there is no jurisdiction in his court, he must issue it. And that is the law in every civilized state where a common law prevails with whose jurisdiction and legislation I am familiar. But in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and others I could cite, it is a penal offense, punishable by indictment, fine, and imprisonment, for any judge to whom is presented a case which on the face of it is one of which he has jurisdiction, one in which he can issue a habeas corpus, not immediately to issue it. Now, this petition says on the face of it that this man is in prison contrary to the Constitution and laws of the United States. The statutes of the United States say that in every case in which the allegation is made the party must be before the judge to whom it is addressed before he can issue the writ. I suppose it is not necessary for me to go further on that point, upon which your honor is so perfectly clear, as every judge and every lawyer must be, that the production of the body of the prisoner is the first step in these investigations. Whether it be a motion to quash which may possibly, under the authorities which the gentlemen may produce, be a proper motion to make, or whether it be on the return itself, or in any other form of proceeding or any other mode of carrying on the case, the preliminary act is obedience to the order of the court. The court must know first whether it has authority to have its order respected or not. That is the primary question. The primary question with the judge must be: "Is this man who holds the prisoner to obey me in anything? If he does not obey me in the first instance, I have no assurance that he will obey me at all."

The COURT. I must acknowledge that this motion to quash a writ of habeas corpus is a "novus hospes" to me. Perhaps, however, it is good practice to make a motion of that kind. Upon a motion, however, to quash a writ of habeas corpus, the court would decline to examine into the merits of the case, and the motion would only go to matters of form. These matters of form are amendable as they would be in any other case. A writ of habeas corpus is amendable and a return to a writ of habeas corpus is amendable.

Now, if this motion is founded upon imperfection in the formal part of this proceeding, I think, in analogy to motions in similar cases at law, that it may be entertained. If the motion, however, is based upon what is understood to be merits of the case upon the habeas corpus, that is an examination into the jurisdiction of the court making a commitment. I think that is not the form in which to litigate that question. That question must be litigated upon the return, and this court will not examine into the proofs upon that subject until the case is heard upon the return.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Then, if I understand your honor, we may not look to the petition itself in support of the motion to quash. We would be content. I have never seen the petition. I now, for the first time, learn what it discloses from a statement of counsel. If we may resort even to that paper, and it disclose what my friend says it does, that this party is under arrest in execution of a judgment of the House of Representatives, then upon that we are entirely content to try this question, and to that we wish to appeal in support of the motion to quash, or to arrest this proceeding. If that may be done we are content to go forward.

The COURT. You could probably upon a motion to quash the writ refer to the writ itself, and to the petition upon which it issued; but I doubt whether——

Judge FISHER. We have concluded our paper by asking that the proceeding be dismissed, which we thought was the proper way.

The COURT. Of course; that is the prayer of every writ.

Judge FISHER. Yes, we thought that the writ was improvidently issued, and we think so now, although I have not read this paper through yet; but I think it is manifest from the petition itself that if your honor had considered the matter further, you would not have issued that writ. I propose to read the writ.

Mr. Fisher then proceeded to read as follows:

"Petition of Richard B. Irwin, a citizen of the State of "——

The COURT. Judge Fisher, you are now proceeding to present your motion to quash, are you?

Judge FISHER. Yes, sir.

The COURT. Very well. But I would prefer to have that in a formal presentation. You must either reduce your motion to writing, or the clerk will. But I have no clerk upon this hearing. You can put it in form at your leisure.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. It will be found that, appealing to the disclosures of the petition, a motion to quash and dismiss this proceeding for want of jurisdiction——

The COURT. You can reduce that to form, and file it with the other papers in the case at your convenience.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. We will do so.

Judge Fisher then read the petition, as follows:

"Supreme court District of Columbia—Ex parte Richard B. Irwin, praying for writ of habeas corpus.

"Petition and affidavit.

"To the honorable the supreme court of the District of Columbia:

"The petition of Richard B. Irwin, a citizen of the State of California, respectfully represents: That he is now restrained of his liberty and detained in confinement by N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States; that the said N. G. Ordway claims to act under the authority of the House of Representatives and by virtue of an order issued to him by the honorable JAMES G. BLAINE, Speaker of the House of Representatives, commanding him, the said Ordway, to take your petitioner into his custody and confine him in the jail of this District.

Your petitioner further shows, that the material facts concerning his detention, as he understands them, are that he was summoned before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and questioned concerning certain matters alleged, but erroneously, to be relative to an investigation of an alleged improper use of money to obtain from Congress a subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which questions petitioner declined to answer, because the committee had no authority or legal right to propound them; that your petitioner was then taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and on the 7th day of January, A. D. 1875, brought to the bar of the House, where certain questions were propounded to him which he refused to answer, because the House of Representatives had no legal right to propound such questions; and on his refusal, he was again ordered into custody and confinement, to the end that proceedings in due course of law might be instituted against him by the district-attorney of the United States for this District under the act of January 24, 1875. (14 United States Statutes at Large, pages 155, 156.) Your petitioner respectfully represents that his arrest and confinement are contrary to law and in violation of his constitutional and legal rights as a citizen of the United States.

Wherefore he prays, the premises being considered, that your honor will be pleased to issue a writ of habeas corpus adsubjiciendum, directed to the said N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, commanding him, at such time and place as your honor may signify, to have before you the body of the petitioner, to the end that the cause of his detention may be investigated, and that he may be discharged from further detention, or such other relief be entered in the premises as to law and justice may pertain. And as in duty bound, &c.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Richard B. Irwin, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that the facts set forth in the foregoing petition are true.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of January.

CHARLES WALTER, J. P.

DURANT & HORNOR,
Of Counsel for Petitioner."

The COURT. The particular questions are not stated, I see.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. No, they are not. It will be observed, then, that this petition discloses that this relator was required to answer certain questions before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, which he refused to answer; that he was afterward brought to the bar of the House, and he was there again required to answer certain questions, and that he then and there, in the presence of the House, at its bar, declined to answer those other questions; and that then and thereafter the House adjudged and decided that he was in contempt of the House for that refusal, and ordered that he should be committed into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, &c., and that he is now held in virtue of the writ ordered, authorized by that judgment of the House. So that there is disclosed here fully the jurisdictional fact that the House was making inquiry which they decided was pertinent and within their jurisdiction; that the House considered the question of its jurisdiction over that subject-matter; and that after and upon that consideration they adjudged that the party was in contempt, and ordered the arrest and custody now assailed by this application.

It will be probably observed that the petitioner fails to set forth in his petition the nature, as your honor has just suggested, of the questions that he was required to answer, or of the subject-matter even of those questions, and that he declined to answer them without giving, either in stating the question or the answer, any indication as to what the subject-matter of the inquiry was, and there stops, with this exception, that he then proceeds to inform the court, or the judge to whom he makes the application, that in his judgment, as a legal conclusion from the premises now adverted to in my remarks, he was not held under any authority of the Constitution or the laws; and upon that opinion he asks that this court shall discharge him. So that if we may look now, for the purposes of the point and motion we now make to the petition, as your honor has indicated we may, it presents to us as the subject-matter of this discussion the whole field of inquiry which we supposed would be opened by the motion that we proposed to make when we first came to the bar of the court. Now, with the indulgence of the court, and perhaps with an unnecessary amount of care and fullness, I ask the indulgence of the court to state, step by step, as fully as I may do, with the preparation that I have had opportunity to make, the grounds upon which we suppose that the writ of habeas corpus ought not to be allowed.

Mr. DURANT. Well, now, may it please your honor, I object to having this case argued three or four times over on the merits, and I ask that the counsel who represent Mr. Ordway shall be required to reduce to writing the motion which they make, which I understand to be in its design a motion to quash this writ; not to quash my petition, but a motion to quash this writ. It is the order of the court that alone can be objected to, not the form in which I applied for that order. That is not subject to any objection here. That would be destroying the whole virtue of the writ of habeas corpus, because if he [Mr. Irwin] could be in the presence of a judge, he might make application himself for the habeas corpus, or he might have it made by an unlearned friend, one unskilled not only in law, but in grammar and orthography, and it would be liable to no objection. It is the action of the court only that is liable to objection. What is the difficulty with the forms of this writ? If it be proper to have a motion to quash the writ, I wish the discussion under the order of this court, if I am correct in my view, to be confined to an examination of the requirements of that writ; and if there is anything out of order in it, we will amend it, as we have a right to do. The great question of the liberty of the citizen cannot be tied down by technicalities and forms. If there is anything wrong in the writ, the court has the power to permit amendment, and it will be made. It has been done over and over again. But to argue that this court has no jurisdiction to issue it, as the gentleman intimates that he will do, is substituting his motion for his return; and I say again, and I ask your honor to decide in the interest of public justice and of public liberty—both involved in this case—that nothing shall be done in this case until the order of the court is complied with and the prisoner brought here, for a motion to quash may be just as well made when that is done as after it shall have been done. And I say again that whatever your ruling may be on this motion to quash, when it shall be presented to you in due form, you have no reason to believe that it will be complied with by the party on the other side unless he obeys you in the first instance.

The COURT. I am not entirely clear about this practice, I must acknowledge. It is quite clear, however, to me that when the return is made the body must be produced. That I have no doubt of. The return is not yet made, and therefore the exigency or contingency upon which the production of the body rests has not yet occurred. It would be, perhaps, something like a motion upon an indictment for a felony. At the trial of such an indictment the presence of the prisoner is indispensable. A motion may be made to quash the indictment in his absence. I am therefore inclined to think that if the practice is admissible of making a motion to quash a writ of this description, it may be made anterior to the return, and therefore before the time has arrived for the production of the body of the person in custody. This would appear to be the natural sequence of events in a proceeding of this description. In regard to the other point, that counsel may not refer to the petition on a motion to quash the writ, about that their discussion must be confined exclusively to the writ itself, and I am inclined to think that, inasmuch as the petition accompanies the writ and to be served with it, they are "a concretance," so to speak. They constitute a species of unity, and that the motion, if made at all, may be made on both the petition and the writ.

Mr. DURANT. Then it is a demurrer to the petition.

The COURT. Well, scarcely that. It would have the effect of a demurrer to a regular pleading. Although you may demur to an indictment, you may move to quash it. I do not know that there is any writ that you may not move to quash. You may move to quash a certiorari. You may move to quash a summons; you may move to quash a capias—in fact anything is quashable almost.

Mr. DURANT. For defect of form.

The COURT. For defect of form.

Mr. DURANT. But I understand they propose going into the substance.

The COURT. Or for anything appearing on its face which shows that the court has no jurisdiction; but it is very true, as stated by counsel, that the liberty of the citizen is not to be impaired by any imperfection of this kind; because in the interest of that liberty the court will amend all such processes, and all the papers or instruments upon which this process may be founded, for the purpose of protecting the citizen in his just rights. And if it should turn out there is anything amendable, either in the petition or the writ, at the end of this discussion the court will allow it. Counsel, of course, must be guided by their own judgment and discretion. It is not for the court to dictate what course they shall pursue, but perhaps all the questions involved would be much more satisfactorily disposed of if the return was made in proper form. I would then listen to the argument upon what would be appropriate to the motion to quash, as well as to the principles involved in the case, and dispose of the matter.

Mr. DURANT. That is undoubtedly the proper way.

The COURT. In conformity with the law of the case.

Judge FISHER. I have drawn up the form of a motion which we desire to present to your honor.

Judge Fisher then read as follows:

"Ex parte Richard B. Irwin, habeas corpus, to N. G. Ordway, sergeant, &c.:

And now, to-wit, this 14th day of January, 1875, the said N. G. Ordway by Samuel Shellabarger, his attorney, comes before the Hon. Arthur MacArthur, by whom the writ of habeas corpus was issued and returnable, and the petition of said relator being read, the respondent moves that the said petition be dismissed and that the writ thereon issued be revoked, as having been improvidently issued."

Mr. DURANT. I move that this motion to quash be summarily rejected as contrary to all precedent and practice, and because its discussion necessarily involves and will involve the discussion on the merits.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. "Summarily," I suppose, means without being heard.

Mr. DURANT. I never heard that "summarily" meant that before. Perhaps in the gentleman's practice it means so.

The COURT. I have some doubt as to the regularity of the practice adopted here; but in view of what I have said, I think I will allow the motion to be presented.

Judge FISHER. In support of that motion, I submit this simple consideration to your honor.

Mr. DURANT. Your honor will allow me to reserve an exception to your refusing my motion to disallow the motion made.

The COURT. I do not know as there can be a bill of exception from any ruling of mine, sitting at chambers. You can probably only review this matter by certiorari.

Mr. DURANT. It ought to appear in some way that I made the objection.

The COURT. That will appear, if you choose to have it appear. It will depend altogether upon yourself, upon what facts you will put upon the records.

Judge FISHER. I merely wish to submit to your honor this simple matter for your honor's consideration in regard to this motion; that your honor, if you had been sitting in the criminal court, or if the court in banc had been in session and a motion had been made in either of those courts, your honor would have inquired, or the court would have inquired, into the propriety of issuing the writ in accordance with the prayer of the petition upon which this writ was issued, or the ground laid for the motion. Now if, on a motion being made in court, your honor should consider the propriety of issuing the writ of habeas corpus, and if your honor should determine that you would not issue the writ, such a case was disclosed upon the motion as did not justify the issuing of the writ, why, then your honor would withhold the issuing of the writ. Well, now, take the case where the petition is presented to your honor, sitting in chambers, setting forth facts which clearly show to your honor that the House of Representatives in the matter complained of was acting in a constitutional and legal way, acting in a way which by the provisions of the Constitution it has lawful right to do in propounding these questions and in requiring the witness to answer them, and in considering him and adjudging him to be in contempt for not answering them both before the committee and the House of Representatives when brought to its bar—now, when the petition shows to your honor such a case as that, I humbly submit, may it please your honor, that your honor upon full consideration of the case ought not to have issued the writ. Therefore, that the writ being issued upon insufficient petition, being issued upon a petition which sets out fully and shows clearly that the House of Representatives, according to the well-settled and acknowledged principles of law with reference to the matter of habeas corpus that every court of competent jurisdiction has a right to commit for contempt, and further the other principles that every court having jurisdiction, having this right to commit for contempt, is to be considered the judge of what constitutes that contempt, then I say, having considered this subject, your honor would and ought to have refused to issue the writ. Now we say we can present the same reasons to your honor; we have the same right to demand of your honor that this writ shall be revoked when it has been improvidently issued as we should have to resist the issuance of it if it were made upon a motion in open court, or upon a petition presented in open court where both sides have an opportunity to be heard.

The COURT. It must be evident to counsel that it is impossible to discuss this motion without going at large into this case. Upon a habeas corpus, and upon a motion to quash, I do not think the court would be justified in pursuing that course. I think the far better practice to adopt would be to pursue the ordinary course and dispose of the case upon the return.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Then, if I understand your honor, the motion now filed is overruled.

The COURT. Yes; I will overrule the motion, formally at least.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The relations of this jurisdiction to that other jurisdiction which I represent of course makes the case one of singular delicacy, and in view of all that, which we all appreciate, I now ask your honor to lay over and extend the time for making this return until to-morrow, in order that I may have an opportunity to lay before the House of Representatives the question that has arisen and the present posture of the case, so that, with regard to the action that shall be had upon the matter as to the production of the body, we may at least give opportunity to the House to exercise its own pleasure in regard to whether it will take action in the premises or not. If the House should give instructions in regard to the matter, of course they will be adhered to by counsel representing the House. If no instructions should be given, then counsel will take the responsibility of doing what seems to be required in the case.

Mr. DURANT. I hope your honor will not accord any delay. This habeas corpus was applied for last week and granted, returnable two days ago. Time was then asked for by the counsel representing the Sergeant-at-Arms to make his return, and the time which he himself desired; none less was accorded by your honor. I will not here discuss the authority and right of the House of Representatives of the United States to hold a contumacious witness in contempt; hold him in detention for alleged contempt; but I will say that I consider it a most extraordinary expansion of the ordinary powers and the ordinary custom of that House to punish him by imprisonment in the common jail, and that, too, in the face, may it please your honor, of a certificate from two of the most respectable physicians in the city—Dr. Johnston and Dr. Garnet; that, too, in the face of a certificate from these two respectable physicians—none more so—that the condition of his health and the prostration of his nervous system from an accident that happened to him on the Pacific coast which fractured his skull, placed him in such a condition that it was dangerous to his life to be confined in that jail, and more, as a reason why you should not delay this case. And I ask the counsel on the other side and Mr. Ordway to listen attentively to what I now say, and to deny it if it be not true, for I state it on my own personal responsibility and that of a gentleman in whom I have the highest confidence, that after this man was confined in prison by order of the Committee on Ways and Means the Surgeon-General of the Army of the United States and the Surgeon-General of the Navy were sent to examine him, and they reported to that respectable body, the Committee on Ways and Means, that it was unsafe for him to be there, and that this report is suppressed from the knowledge of the House of Representatives, who, I have no doubt, would put him in another and proper place of confinement if they understood the facts. Now, sir, this is not punishment, but it is persecution. It is not the way in which an American citizen should be treated. There is no cause for delay. If the House of Representatives, as they undoubtedly will when they hear of this case, direct their Sergeant-at-Arms to obey the constituted authority of the country, and not by silly technicalities to delay the course of justice—I withdraw the word "silly" and substitute, for nothing that is silly can come from the gentlemen on the other side—I will say to delay it by frivolous technicalities, they will direct him undoubtedly to obey the laws of the country and its constituted tribunals; and if they should refuse, may it please your honor—and if they should refuse, which is not within the possibility of supposition, but if they should refuse to obey the order of this court—then the crisis will come, and we will see whether the liberty of the citizen is to be protected by the tribunals of the country or be subjected to a committee of the House of Representatives. We will see it then, and we may as well see it now. Why delay twenty-four hours to know that? I think, undoubtedly, they will order it. If they will order it, delay is unnecessary. If they will not order, why then your honor will have to meet the question twenty-four hours hence. I therefore think that under these circumstances, where the liberty of the citizen is restrained, and restrained in a dangerous manner, injurious to his health and dangerous to his life, there should be no delay; that already sufficient delay has been had in this case.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I confess to a little, not much, surprise at the speech just delivered.

Mr. DURANT. You had better reserve your surprise for future speeches.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. It is not silly, but it is unique. It is one which, if I were the court, it seems to me, I would think, not say, had better not have been made. Now, your honor, here is a man in custody——

The COURT. Mr. Shellabarger. I am going to grant your request.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Then I do not want to make a speech for the purpose of that buncombe that the other speech was made for.

Mr. DURANT. You must pardon something to the spirit of liberty.

The COURT. I think, under the circumstances, that the request of counsel is a reasonable one.

Mr. DURANT. I acquiesce most cheerfully in everything that your honor says.

The COURT. Of course this court does not want to precipitate anything disagreeable between the House of Representatives and this jurisdiction.

Mr. DURANT. There will be nothing.

The COURT. I trust not.

Mr. DURANT. Because it will never be disagreeable to your honor to perform a judicial duty.

Thereupon the court adjourned until to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

Second Day's Proceedings.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1875.

At eleven o'clock, the hour fixed for a further hearing in the Irwin habeas corpus matter, Judge MacArthur suspended the trial of a criminal case that was in progress and announced that he was ready to hear counsel in the case of Irwin.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. May it please the court, the counsel representing the House of Representatives, as they indicated to your honor yesterday they would do, proceeded, after the matter was adjourned in this court, to the House of Representatives, and the result of interviews there was that the respondent in this case presented to the House of Representatives, through its organ, the Speaker, the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1875.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

SIR: I respectfully report to you, and through you to the House of Representatives, that on the 9th day of January, 1875, a writ of habeas corpus was served upon me directing me to produce the body of Richard B. Irwin, detained in my custody, before Arthur MacArthur, one of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, on the 12th day of said January; that thereafter, on the 12th day of January aforesaid, the time for producing the body of said Irwin was further extended to January 14, at eleven o'clock a. m., at which time I appeared before the said Judge MacArthur and presented, through my attorney, Hon. Samuel Shellabarger, the warrant and resolution of the House of Representatives upon which said Irwin was held in my custody. Whereupon Judge MacArthur decided that no return would be received by him until the body of the said Irwin was produced in court.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the production of the said Richard B. Irwin by me would release him from my custody as an officer of the House of Representatives and place him in the custody of the court, I asked for delay until to-morrow, January 15, at eleven o'clock a. m., to obtain further instructions from the House of Representatives.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. G. ORDWAY,
Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives United States.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives then presented this communication to the House and invited its action. Thereupon, after some debate, the House adopted the following resolution, of which I present to you a certified copy:

FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION,
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
In the House of Representatives, January 14, 1875.

On motion of Mr. DAWES,

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to have careful returns of the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Richard B. Irwin that the prisoner is duly held by authority of the House of Representatives to answer in proceedings against him for contempt.

Attest:

EDW. McPHERSON, Clerk.

Your honor will permit me to say that the circumstances attending the passage of that resolution, the debate, the resolutions offered and withdrawn, and all the circumstances and history connected with it, which are proper to be looked to in giving it interpretation, show it is an instruction to the Sergeant-at-Arms that his return should be what is here stated, and that it should not include the return of the body of the prisoner into this court. The return should be in its legal effect, in these words, as stated in the body of the resolution: "that the prisoner is duly held by authority of the House of Representatives to answer in proceedings against him for contempt." It may be, perhaps, not amiss for me to say, in expressing to you the explanation of the conduct of this respondent, that the universal interpretation, so far as it has come to his knowledge and to my knowledge, for I have seen a large number of the members, is just that which I have just put on the resolution; the return in its legal effect should be what is there read, and it should not be accompanied by any surrender of the body. Under these views, counsel appear this morning again, and ask the court to permit us to show to your honor that the conduct of this relator is sustained by the practice, by the authorities, and by the settled law. We wanted yesterday an opportunity, and we ask it again to-day, with all due deference and the most profound respect for the courts of the country and for this court, only to be permitted at your bar here to present to you the unanimous, I believe, decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as the practice of the courts of this District, indicating that we are right in saying that in a case like this the production of a showing that the party is in the custody of another jurisdiction as to a subject-matter where that other court has jurisdiction ends the power of this court, and that that may be shown without the production of the body, and indeed that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the body ought not to be produced, and that we ask the privilege of doing again this morning, as I have stated, with very sincere deference to the court, and very sincere anxiety to avoid any of the unpleasant conflicts which may seem to be threatened in this case, or which may arise in all cases, if the line of practice is not observed, which, I think, is the true one in a case like this.

Mr. DURANT. The interpretation which has been put upon this order by the learned counsel on the other side is precisely the contradictory of that which I have put upon it from reading the debate of yesterday carefully as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning. It is manifest, your honor, that the learned counsels' opinion of what this means or the idea of any single or any number of members of Congress, as to what it means is not the rule of interpretation, but the only real interpretation by which we can be guided is that which declares the sense of a written instrument must be gathered from its terms and forms of expression.

The COURT. I would like to hear that resolution read once more.

Mr. DURANT. I was about to read it. I took it from the desk, as I understood, with the permission of the gentlemen, for the purpose of reading it to the court.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Certainly; that is right.

Mr. DURANT then read as follows:

FORTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION,
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
In the House of Representatives, January 14, 1875.

On motion of Mr. DAWES,

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to make careful return to the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Richard B. Irwin that the prisoner is duly held by authority of the House of Representatives to answer in proceedings against him for contempt.

Attest:

EDW. McPHERSON, Clerk.

Now, it is perfectly manifest, may it please your honor, that if this resolution had not been passed the attitude of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the learned counsel who represent him would be precisely the same as it is after its passage. They would necessarily make a careful return to the writ of habeas corpus, and would make that return, necessarily, according to the facts, that Mr. Irwin was detained by order of the House of Representatives to answer for a proceeding against him directed by the House for a contempt of its authority. They would make that return necessarily, because, in the first place, such are the facts, and because it is admitted by the petition which was presented in this court. But how, may it please your honor, does that evince a design on the part of the House of Representatives to defy the law of the land? How does that evince a design on the part of the House of Representatives to say that the proceedings in habeas corpus in this case shall not be conducted as they have been in all other cases of a similar kind? Now, I showed you yesterday that by the settled jurisprudence of the court of king's bench in England, in precisely——

Mr. SHELLABARGER. If the law is to be discussed, we beg your honor that we shall be heard also on this question.

Mr. DURANT. I do not see what will prevent the gentlemen from being heard. Certainly I shall make no opposition.

The COURT. Mr. Shellabarger has read this resolution of the House, and he has stated his construction of that resolution, and that it limits the officer in making this return simply to stating the fact that the relator is held upon a commitment for contempt by the House, and he desires the privilege of arguing the proposition which was argued yesterday—that it is not necessary to produce the body here. Now, so far——

Mr. DURANT. If your honor accords him that privilege——

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I say, then, I want the opening.

Mr. DURANT. I do not see why he should not argue it, although it was fully argued yesterday.

The COURT. He desires to reargue the question of practice in that respect, and, as I understand, has made an application to the court.

Mr. DURANT. But he has put an interpretation upon this instrument which, I am endeavoring to show, it cannot be conceived the House of Representatives intended.

The COURT. The resolution may form a topic of a discussion between counsel should the court grant this application. The matter now before the court and for its immediate action is whether we will hear a reargument upon this point of practice.

Mr. DURANT. I await, then, your honor, until your honor decides that question.

The COURT. Although my convictions were quite clear and strong when I disposed of this matter yesterday, in view of the extraordinary position in which we find ourselves placed by the construction which the counsel have placed upon this resolution of the House, I deem it no more than proper that the greatest opportunity should be afforded to examine this question, and that it should be disposed upon the fullest deliberation and discussion. If counsel, therefore, desire to reopen the argument, it is a privilege which I very cheerfully accede to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I recognize the patience and courtesy of the court, and I will not consume much of the time of the court. The motion may be regarded as filed.

Judge FISHER. The motion that I put in yesterday I would like to remodel the form of. [Addressing Mr. Durant.] Do you wish to look at it before it is placed upon the file?

Mr. DURANT. No; you can read it; I have no objection to it.

Judge Fisher read as follows:

Ex Parte Richard B. Irwin—before Hon. Arthur MacArthur, one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in chambers.

Habeas corpus to Nehemiah G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, issued January 9, 1875, returnable before said justice at the City Hall, Washington, District of Columbia, Tuesday, January 12, 1875; and on the same day, January 12, 1875, by order of said justice, the time to make return to said writ extended to the 14th day of January, 1875, at eleven a. m.

And now, to-wit, this 14th day of January, 1875, the said Nehemiah G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms, &c., by Samuel Shellabarger and George P. Fisher, his attorneys, comes before the said justice and moves that the petition upon which said writ of habeas corpus issued be dismissed, and that the said writ be revoked as having been improvidently issued.

N. G. ORDWAY,
By S. SHELLABARGER,
GEO. P. FISHER,
Attorneys.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. In opening this question, your honor, I shall not go into any general discussion of general principles, but shall confine myself exactly to the question as to whether it is a correct practice in a case like this to disclose to the court allowing the writ of habeas corpus the nature and cause of detention for the purpose of showing to the court that the writ was improvidently issued and that the body cannot be required to be produced in court, or the custody assailed which makes response to the writ. Now, as was stated upon yesterday, in a case in 12 Wallace, the name of which I do not remember at this moment, it is decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that by necessity ex proprio vigore the production of the body of a prisoner under a writ of habeas corpus changes the custody, so that there is no longer in contemplation of law any custody whatever in the party responding to the writ, and it is in the court. About that I suppose there will be no controversy. But another step, your honor——

Mr. DURANT. What is the case in Wallace that you cite?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I will give it to you when I get it. I have not it here at this moment. Judge Fisher will hand it to you.

Again, not only is the custody changed from the House of Representatives in this case to this court, but the powers of this court are such that it can, during the trial of the cause, control that custody and even admit the party to bail during the trial, as you will find decided in Ex parte Kaine, 14 Howard, 103, 133.

Again, your honor, this trial may, under the present condition of the law, be continued at the pleasure of the court. Under the statute the relator has five days to answer, and such other additional time as the discretion of the court may give him; and putting now together what I have stated, the result is on the production of this body here—a man in contempt of the House; adjudged to be in that contempt by a tribunal—that is, a court which has tried him, adjudged his case, sent him to prison in execution of judgment and also for enforcing the delivery of testimony. After the court which allows the writ of habeas corpus is apprised of those facts just stated, it may bring him out; take him away from the custody of the House of Representatives and admit him to bail; excuse him from giving testimony, and dispose of him according to the pleasure of the court, of course exercising that pleasure with sound judicial discretion, and doing no improper thing. Now, I am assuming all the while that is nothing designedly improper. All these results come from the doctrine that in every case where a habeas corpus may be issued, however improvidently it is impossible to make return or to disclose to the court the fact that he is in that jurisdiction, except that disclosure be accompanied by a production of the body and surrender of the witness to be discharged from giving testimony. That is the position of my friend on the other side—that we cannot be heard. We can make no disclosures to this court; we can make no returns; we can do nothing whatever after an ex parte issuance of a writ of habeas corpus has occurred, however fraudulently procured; we can do nothing whatever as against that issuance, except surrender the custody and put it at the disposal of another tribunal, and that with power to admit to bail and to continue indefinitely to wholly discharge the witness according to the pleasure of the court.

Now, a proposition that would result in such consequences, it seems to me, would, as has been so often said by the courts and—I am now only repeating the language of the courts, the Supreme Court in several instances—would result in infinite mischief and clashing of jurisdictions. Now, your honor, it is because that is not the practice, as I understand it, that we have been solicitous to at least present, as we have here this morning, in obedience to the resolution of the House again the return, the statement disclosing every circumstance and fact connected with his imprisonment. I now go to a statement of the authorities. First, let me state to your honor the history of the Bell case in this court, where I stand to-day; where, upon the production, as was stated, I believe, on yesterday, of the order of the House of Representatives disclosing to that court the fact that Mr. Bell was held by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives under the order of the House—that thereupon the court held in that case that the practice was and that his duty was to stop; to go no further, but to remand, or rather not to remand, because there was no production, but to arrest the proceeding, and it ended.

Now, again——

The COURT. Is there any record of that Bell case?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. There is not, I believe. It was a case at chambers, I believe, and we have searched for it in vain.

Judge FISHER. It was a case decided by Judge Wylie, but I have it from Judge Wylie's own lips. He took no note of the case, and he does not recollect the time sufficiently to enable us to search for a report of it in the newspapers.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Now, in the Nugent case, to be found on pages 107 and 108 of the American Law Journal of 1848 and 1849, decided by Judge Cranch, I believe it was——

Mr. DURANT. What volume is that?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. No volume; it is of that year.

Mr. DURANT. What book?

Judge FISHER. American Law Journal for 1849.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Your honor will please observe here that the return, as I shall now read it to you, according to the report here contained, is professed to be given in hæc verba, putting the extract from the return in quotation marks, and it reads thus:

"The said return stated that—"

Then begins the quotation mark:

"The said Robert Beale holds the office of Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States; that the said Senate is, and has been long before the arrest of the said John Nugent, holding its regular sessions; that certain proceedings were had before the said Senate, in executive sessions, which said proceedings are, by the rules and orders of said Senate, had in secret session, and which the respondent cannot, without violation of his official oath and duty, divulge or make public; that this respondent, as such Sergeant-at-Arms, has received from the Hon. G. M. Dallas, Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate, a warrant, by which he is ordered and directed, authorized and required, to take into his custody the body of the said John Nugent, and him safely keep according to the terms of said precept or warrant; that in obedience to the order and command of the said Senate of the United States, this respondent, as in duty bound, has arrested and now holds the body of the said John Nugent in legal custody, and now produces and exhibits to the court now here the said order, precept, and warrant as the cause of the caption and detention by him as aforesaid of the body of the said John Nugent, as part of this return."

Then comes the warrant. Throughout the case there is nothing to disclose anything upon the subject of the production of the body, except what I have read. I am right in that, am I not, Judge Fisher?

Judge FISHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. And the indication, of course, is about conclusive that the body was not produced, because the production of the body is almost invariably stated in the return; disclosed by the return. Here it is wholly omitted, with the statement "that in obedience to the order and command of the Senate of the United States, this respondent, as in duty bound, has arrested and now holds the body of said John Nugent in legal custody, and now produces and exhibits to the court now here the said order, precept, and warrant as the cause of the caption and detention."

Mr. DURANT. What is the inference you draw from that?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. That the body was not produced.

Mr. DURANT. That inference contradicts the fact, because Nugent was in court.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I understand the fact to be otherwise.

Mr. DURANT. From whom?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. From general history. I have never inquired into it especially.

Mr. DURANT. Well, sir, Mr. Walter S. Cox, a member of this bar, told me just now Nugent was sitting by him at the time; was in court.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Now let us take another step.

The COURT. That was Cox on Nugent, was it?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I now refer the court to the case of Ableman vs. Booth, 21 Howard, 506. This is the case I referred your honor to a short time ago, and which I said I believe the opinion was unanimous in. I will read so much of the syllabus of the case as will disclose the character of the case. It was one arising under the fugitive-slave law, and where there was a question of conflict of jurisdiction between the State and Federal courts.

The COURT. The circumstances of that case transpired under my own personal observation.

Mr. DURANT. That was under the nullification law, was it not?

The COURT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Now I wish to call your honor's attention to what occurred in this case as stated by the court, upon the proposition indicated by the second proposition of the syllabus.

"2. A habeas corpus issued by a State judge or court has no authority within the limits of the sovereignty assigned by the Constitution to the United States. The sovereignty of the United States and of a State are distinct and independent of each other within their respective spheres of action, although both exist and exercise their powers within the same territorial limits."

I read in connection with that—I find it necessary—the third:

"3. When a writ of habeas corpus is served on a marshal or other person having a prisoner in custody under the authority of the United States, it is his duty, by a proper return, to make known to the State judge or court the authority by which he holds him. But at the same time it is his duty not to obey the process of the State authority, but to obey and execute the process of the United States."

Now I read from page 523 of the opinion in regard to what the duty of the marshal was in that case in regard to surrender of the body to the jurisdiction of the State court:

"We do not question the authority of a State court or judge, who is authorized by the laws of the State which issues the writ of the habeas corpus to issue it in any case where the party is in prison within its territorial limits, provided it does not appear when the application is made that the person in prison is in custody or under the authority of the United States."

Now, I want to read that again. It is his duty "provided it does not appear when the application is made that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States." The court or judge has a right to inquire, in this mode of proceeding, for what cause and by what authority the prisoner is confined within the territorial limits of the State sovereignty. And it is the duty of the marshal or other person having the custody of the prisoner to make known to the judge or court by a proper return the authority by which he holds him in custody. This right to inquire by process of habeas corpus, and the duty of the officer to make a return, grows necessarily out of the complex character of our Government and the existence of two distinct and separate sovereignties within the same territorial space, each of them restricted in its powers, and each within its sphere of action prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, independent of the other. But after the return is made, and the State judge or court judicially apprised that the party is in custody under the authority of the United States, they can proceed no further They then know that the prisoner is within the dominion and jurisdiction of another government, and that neither the writ of habeas corpus, nor any other process issued under State authority, can pass over the line of division between the two sovereignties. He is then within the dominion and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. If he has committed an offense against their laws, their tribunals alone can punish him. If he is wrongfully imprisoned, their judicial tribunals can release him and afford him redress. And although, as we have said, it is the duty of the marshal or other person holding him to make known by a proper return the authority under which he detains him, it is at the same time imperatively his duty to obey the process of the United States, to hold the prisoner in custody under it and to refuse obedience to the mandate or process of any other government. And consequently it is his duty not to take the prisoner, nor suffer him to be taken, before a State judge or court upon a habeas corpus issued under State authority."

The COURT. What is the date of that decision?

Mr SHELLABARGER. That is 1858. Now, the application of this case, to the case at bar, your honor, is this—and I wish to state it carefully, so that my meaning may be fully apprehended by the court: The claim on the other side is that there is no case where it is proper for a court to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and where that court which has properly issued that writ of habeas corpus may properly hear the cause of the detention in the absence of the body. That is the proposition of my friend; and it will not do for him to attempt to escape on the ground that this case is distinguishable from the one at bar because this was a case where the State undertook to interfere with Federal courts, and that the case at bar is not of that character. I am bringing it to your honor for the conclusive purpose of defeating the legal position of my learned friend at its very foundation. His proposition is that there is no case where the court may rightly issue a writ of habeas corpus, and where an answer may be filed in the nature of a return, in the absence of the body. Now, that case I have produced to your honor. I have shown to your honor that there is a case of this kind by the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States; and that case I now proceed to show in its legal elements is not distinguishable from this case. In that case the Supreme Court of the United States say that the moment that the court issuing the writ ascertains by the return that the party is in custody of another jurisdiction, to wit, the Federal, that there he must stop. The very words of the court are: "Can proceed no further." Now, apply that legal principle here, and the result is this: That the return is offered now at your bar which discloses the fact which is also disclosed by the petition itself, that this party is in custody of another jurisdiction—the House of Representatives—in execution of the processes of that court; and hence that the very case in its legal elements is presented to the bar of this court that was in that.

What difference does it make, your honor, in legal principle that because the State courts cannot inquire into the rightfulness or wrongfulness of a commitment by a Federal court, that therefore the State courts must stop? What difference is there between that and this case, whereby every authority—two or three which we have presented of the Supreme Court of the United States—unanimously pronounced, and vindicated by an array of authority presented in this case, decided by your predecessor, Judge Cranch, in this District—an array of authority extending through hundreds of years, all to the effect that the moment a court ascertains that another jurisdiction, and which had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, has adjudged a party in contempt, that the court, whenever it learns that fact, however learned and whenever learned, judicially, must stop. I repeat, then, in the case here they were required to stop; to arrest the proceedings whenever they judicially ascertained by the return that they could go no further, because another jurisdiction, to wit, a Federal one, has the custody. So here, your honor, you have learned by a return, that another jurisdiction—it is Federal just like yourself, I admit; but another jurisdiction—has charge of this man; has him under arrest, in execution of a judgment of the House of Representatives; and, like, as in that case, when you learn the fact, you must also stop; like as in that case it was not the duty to produce the body; so also in this case may that disclosure be made to you in the absence of the body. My friend will find it difficult to say now, after the production of a decision so pronounced—difficult to say that there is no case in which a return may be made to a writ of habeas corpus in the absence of the body, for the Supreme Court has declared in this case that that is a legal possibility, and a legal propriety, and that it is the duty—applying the law of that case to this—it is the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to obey the process of that jurisdiction to which he is amenable, and not to yield the custody. Now, if there is anything further to say, as I promised to be brief, I will allow it to be said by my associate in the close.

Mr. DURANT. The question is stated here, as it was yesterday, may it please your honor, not what the return when it shall be made will disclose, because you have not the return before you, but the question is simply and solely whether, in obedience to the order of this court, the Sergeant-at-Arms is bound to produce in court here the body of the prisoner. And I repeat what I said yesterday, and which has not in the slightest degree been modified by the argument.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Allow me to state that it has been suggested to me by a member of the bar that the case of Ex parte Tarble, 13 Wallace, sustains the same doctrine.

Mr. DURANT. What doctrine?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Of the case here, that there may be a return of the disclosure of the jurisdiction without the production of the body. I have not seen the case.

Mr. DURANT. There is no such doctrine in the Booth case.

The COURT. That must be a Pennsylvania report.

Mr. DURANT. As there is no such doctrine announced in the Booth case, it is immaterial,

Mr. SHELLABARGER. We will get that case and examine it. I have not seen it.

Judge FISHER. I have sent for it.

The COURT. What is the title of the case?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The title is, Ex parte Tarble. We will get the case.

The COURT. You may resume, Mr. Durant, the thread of your argument.

Mr. DURANT. A very weak thread, may it please the court, but strong enough to bind this case. May it please your honor, I said yesterday, and I repeat to-day what I said then, which has not been in the slightest degree modified by the argument of the learned counsel on the other side, that when this court issues an order of habeas corpus, directed to any one who by the authority of the United States or any agency of the United States has the prisoner in custody, that the tenor of the writ, as it has universally existed from time immemorial in Great Britian from whence we received it, must be obeyed, and the body of the prisoner must be produced in court.

In opposition to this we have brought forward the case of Bell, which nobody knows anything about and which nobody can tell anything about, and with regard to which we have been informed nothing. And we have the case of Nugent, as reported on page 103 of the American Law Journal for 1848 and 1849, which is silent as to the fact of the prisoner's body being produced in court. When a habeas corpus was directed by one of the judges of this court, or by the court that existed prior to the act of 1863, of course it must have been to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and the inference is produced from the silence of the report in the law magazine as to the fact that the prisoner was not produced in court. Well, there is no inference, may it please the court, proper to be drawn, because it was unnecessary for the author of the article in a law magazine to state anything about it, and because we have to presume that that judge did his duty, as certainly this judge will, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms did his duty, as this one is not doing it. We have to presume that the law was obeyed, and that the body of Nugent was produced in court. That is the legal presumption of the case. It is fortified by the fact which I am authorized to state on the honor of a gentleman of this bar—I do not know whether he is present in court, Mr. Walter S. Cox; I am told he is present in court—who informed me this morning, and for which I am very much obliged to him, that when he was present in court when Nugent was tried the prisoner was there.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. He may have been there as a spectator.

Mr. DURANT. Yes.

"There, chained in the market-place, he stood,
A man of giant form."

But he was in court, and as he had been in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, the idea that he was there as a spectator, is one of those imaginary instances that my learned friend on the other side is so fond of presenting instead of quoting the law. It is not to be presumed that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States brings his prisoners into court to be spectators. He was in court. That is the fact for me.

Now, may it please your honor, the State of Wisconsin passed a law nullifying the fugitive-slave act, and the courts of Wisconsin, mistakenly, undertook to bring up the marshal of the United States and the prisoner that he had in charge by virtue of the ordinance of the United States.

The COURT. The Legislature did not undertake that, but the supreme court of the State.

Mr. DURANT. The State of Wisconsin, acting by her statute authorities in the particular case in which they were acting, undertook to nullify the fugitive-slave law.

The COURT. I can state in a moment the circumstances of that case, if it will be of any advantage.

Mr. DURANT. It will be very interesting if not of great advantage to us, if the court will so favor us.

The COURT. Booth was indicted in the district court of the United States at Milwaukee for aiding in the escape of a fugitive slave. He declared the fugitive-slave law unconstitutional, and therefore that the arrest was illegal, and applied to one of the justices of the State for a writ of habeas corpus. The marshal made the return, which appears in the report of the case in 21 Howard, and under those circumstances the justice who issued the writ regarded it as one of those cases in which he could proceed to try the case in the absence of the relator.

Mr. DURANT. Because he could not get him. [Laughter.]

The COURT. Yes, because he could not get him, [renewed laughter;] and he did not get him.

Mr. DURANT. Necessity, like a good many other fellows, knows no law.

Well, the Supreme Court of the United States, when it came to consider that case, decided in the language that was quoted by the learned counsel on the other side on page 523:

"We do not question the authority of a State court or judge, who is authorized by the laws of the State to issue the writ of habeas corpus, to issue it in any case where the party is imprisoned within its territorial limits, provided it does not appear when the application is made that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States."

If that did appear when the application was made—only where a judge undertakes to nullify the laws of the United States—if it did appear when the application was made to any judge who felt bound by his oath to obey the constitutions and laws, he would have immediately refused the habeas corpus, because he had no right to issue it, and it would equally be the duty of the party to whom it was addressed, as it was stated by the Supreme Court of the United States here, to refuse obedience to it.

Then again:

"Provided it not appear, when the application is made, that the person imprisoned is in custody under the authority of the United States. The court or judge has a right to inquire, in this mode of proceeding, for what cause and by what authority the prisoner is confined within the territorial limits of the State sovereignty. And it is the duty of the marshal, or other person having the custody of the prisoner, to make known to the judge or court by a proper return the authority by which he holds him in custody. This right to inquire by process of habeas corpus, and the duty of the officer to make a return, grows necessarily out of the complex character of our Government, and the existence of two distinct and separate sovereignties within the same territorial space."

That was the reason, may it please your honor, of the Booth decision, because there were two distinct and separate sovereignties occupying the same territorial space. Is that the case here, may it please your honor? Is there any other sovereign here than the United States of America? The whole sovereignty of the Government is confided to the three departments here which the Government is divided into, the legislative, executive, judicial. Neither of them is sovereign alone. Far less can it be said that a fraction or any one of them is sovereign, and therefore the case, as it was presented in the Booth case, is entirely wanting in analogy to the one now before the court. Here the court of the same sovereignty by which the prisoner, it is alleged, is held here, is the one to which the application for the writ of habeas corpus is made; and it is made under the distinct provision of the law, as I will immediately show. It seems to me, therefore, unnecessary to say anything more of these authorities, because they are plainly inapplicable to the case.

Now, what is the law with regard to the production of the body of a prisoner? Why, may it please your honor, in the first place, does the writ say that the party in whose custody the prisoner is found must produce him in court? Is that a vain thing. Is it put in the writ merely for the purpose of filling up the space? No; it is a substantial matter, and deemed from time immemorial necessary to the administration of justice and the preservation of the rights of a citizen of Great Britain and the citizen here; and that any evil consequences should flow from it, may it please your honor, as the learned gentleman on the other side has depicted, is, in my judgment, merely chimerical. He says—and this is the great reason for refusal to obey the writ thus far—that if the prisoner be produced in the court he will be in the custody of the court. Then, may it please your honor, there he is then in the custody of the same sovereignty from one of whose officers he was taken, and the presumption is, and necessarily must be, that the court will administer justice in the case according to law. If it be found that the prisoner is properly held under the order of the House of Representatives, as a matter of course he will be remanded into custody; but if it be found that he is not held according to law, the judicial tribunals of the country are the proper authorities to announce that fact; otherwise there is no preservation of civil liberty at all. Unless that be the theory, no man's rights are more safe in this country than they would be under the laws of a despotic government or the arbitrary decrees of a despotic power. Therefore it is in vain that there is addressed to your understanding the argument of inconvenienti. There is no inconvenience in it whatever. The sole object of this inquiry is to administer the law; and the idea thrown out, rather by way of insinuation than anything else, that the prisoner might possibly escape, and the analogy drawn from the case where it is said the sheriff was not liable for the escape of the prisoner when he was brought before the proper tribunal because he was then in custody of the tribunal, certainly has no application here, because such guards can be provided as would necessarily prevent the slightest possibility of escape if there was anything of the kind had in view, which of course there is not.

Now, I will allude again, may it please your honor, to the cases under the common law of England, where invariably, under writs of habeas corpus addressed to the sergeant-at-arms of the House of Commons, the prisoner has been produced. I need not say, may it please your honor, that the Congress of the United States differs materially in its constitution, its organizations, its powers from the Parliament of Great Britian, which it has been said by the writers of the common law is omnipotent, and could do whatever it pleased. And the powers of our Congress are certainly not analogous to those of Great Britian, in that respect, for we have the best—as we have always considered, and I believe considered rightly, and may so consider at this time, that we live under a government of laws and not under a government of men, and that in this country there is no such thing as arbitrary power whatever; and that all the power which any authority of the government can exercise over any citizen must be previously defined by law. I will therefore very rapidly quote those cases which I alluded to on yesterday. I think your honor took a memorandum of them at that time, but for the reason that you have directed a reargument of this case to day, I will cite them again at this time.

The COURT. My memorandum has not been preserved. I will take down your citations.

Mr. DURANT. Then I quote, in the first place, the case of Regina vs. Paty et alios, from 2 of Lord Raymond's Reports, 1105. I will read very briefly such part of this case as it is necessary to show that I am right in the presentation of the point to which I have just called your honor's attention:

"In the case of Regina vs. Paty et alios, Paty and four others were committed by the speaker of the House of Commons by virtue of an order of that house; and upon a habeas corpus to bring them before this court,"

The warrants was returned, which follows in hæc verba:

* * * * * * *

"The defendants were brought up upon the Saturday, and Mr. Mountague, Mr. Page, Mr. Lechmere, and Mr. Denton argued that they ought to be discharged."

Mr. DURANT. Lex Parliamentaria has a very wide grasp in Great Britain.

The COURT. It had in those days.

Mr. DURANT. And even in those days, may it please your honor, the Sergeant-at-Arms did not refuse to produce the body of the prisoner.

The COURT. No; but contempts are very much diminished in number, or the causes for which the House of Commons would commit for contempt are diminished very much.

Mr. DURANT. Very greatly diminished; but where they were more extensive and made rules more rigorous we show that even then the body is produced. It follows the argument is so much the stronger in the present case.

Mr. DURANT then read the return, as follows:

"By virtue of an order of the House of Commons of England in Parliament assembled, this day made, you are required herewith, upon sight hereof, to receive into your own custody the body of John Paty, who, as it appears to the House of Commons, is guilty of commencing and prosecuting an action at common law against the late constables of Ayelsbury, for not allowing his vote in the election of members to serve Parliament, contrary to the declaration, in high contempt of the jurisdiction, and in breach of the known privileges of this House, and him in safe custody to keep during the pleasure of the said House of Commons, for which this shall be your warrant. Given under my hand this 5th day of December, A. D., 1704. To the keeper of Her Majesty's gaol of Newgate, or his deputy. The warrant was signed Robert Harley. This habeas corpus was moved for on last Monday, but when in the term the court granted the writ returnable the Saturday after. Some persons thought the return too long, and the court were much pressed to make it shorter; but the court would not, but said that in a case of this consequence they ought to give the parties time to consider what return to make, and if there were any delay the parties were the cause of it themselves by not moving sooner."

Your honor will perceive that my learned friend fell into a slight error in saying that a return always shows whether the person is present or not, because here is a very full return of the keeper of the Newgate jail, and it does not show he was present, but the reporter does show immediately afterward.

There is the first case. Then I quote from 1 Wilson, coming down to 1742, where still the powers of Parliament were exceedingly unrestricted. I refer to the case of Hon. Alexander Murray.

Mr. Durant then read as follows:

"An habeas corpus directed to the keeperof Newgate, to bring the body of Alex. Murray, esq.; whereupon it was returned and certified to the court that the prisoner, by the order of the House of Commons of the 7th of February, was committed to Newgate for an high contempt of that house, and he was not to be permitted to have pen, ink, or paper, nor should anybody be permitted to see him without the order of the house; that the keeper was afterwards served with several orders of the house to permit the doctor, apothecary, and some relations, to," &c.

Then I will take the case of Bras Crosby, lord mayor of London, 3 Wilson, 188.

"The lieutenant of the Tower of London was commanded to have before the justices of the bench here the body of Bras Crosby, esq., lord mayor of London, by him detained in the king's prison."

Then follows the writ, which is as follows:

"Whereas the House of Commons have this day adjudged that Bras Crosby, esq., lord mayor of London, a member of this house, having signed a warrant for the commitment of the messenger of the house for having executed the warrant of the speaker, issued under the order of the house, and held the said messenger to bail, is guilty of a breach of the privilege of the house; and whereas the said house hath this day ordered that the said Bras Crosby, esq., and lord mayor of London, and a member of this house, be, for the said offense, committed to the Tower of London: These are therefore to require you to receive into your custody the body of the said Bras Crosby, esq., and him safely keep during the pleasure of the said house; for which this shall be a sufficient warrant.

"Given under my hand the 25th day of March, 1771."

And then adds:

"And that this was the cause of the caption and detention of the said Bras Crosby in the prison aforesaid; the body of which said Bras Crosby he hath here ready, as by the said writ he was commanded, &c."

Here he was again immediately brought into court. Now, the modern cases, may it please your honor, go on precisely the same way; but I have purposely taken these from the older reports, at a time when the power of Parliament was in Great Britain much greater than it is now; when the power of both houses was much greater than it is now. In order to show you that even then the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House never undertook to refuse to produce in court the body of the prisoner, accompanying his return to the writ of habeas corpus—I suppose it is a matter familiar to every lawyer that in the reports, the various circuit court reports of the United States, the various State reports—that whenever a court, having on the face of the papers jurisdiction of the case, and having nothing brought to its attention that shows it is absolutely without jurisdiction, and issues its writ of habeas corpus, that the body of the prisoner is invariably brought up. And in the case now before the court we are told that the House of Representatives has given an order to the Sergeant-at-Arms which virtually precludes him from doing so; but I think no such construction can be put on that order. And I will now proceed, may it please your honor, in addition to the authorities which I have read showing you the course of precedence in this particular instance, to read a few sections from the law, to show exactly what the law is, the law of this land. I quote from the Revised Statutes, page 142, section 756:

"Any person to whom such writ is directed shall make due return thereof within three days thereafter, unless the party be detained beyond the distance of twenty miles; and if beyond that distance and within a distance of one hundred miles, within ten days; and if beyond the distance of a hundred miles, within twenty days."

Now, we have only to inquire, then, whether the individual who holds this prisoner in custody is a person——

The COURT. When was that act passed? I suppose the reference will show.

Mr. DURANT. 1867, 14 Statutes at Large, page 385. Now, the honorable Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives is not impersonal—he is present.

The COURT. No, in looking at him——

Mr. DURANT. He has, as your honor will see, a very fine presence, and therefore he is one of those included in the expression of the law, "Any person to whom the writ is directed shall certify to the court or justice or judge before whom it is returnable the true cause of the detention of such party."

That, of course, the honorable Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the United States is ready to do, and anxious to do, and perfectly willing to do. But although he is willing to comply with part of the law, he is not willing to comply with all.

"SEC. 758. The person making the return shall at the same time bring the body of the party before the judge who granted the writ." (5 Feb., 1867, c. 28, s. 1. vol. 14, p. 385.)

Now, if the authorities were not clear, are we not to be bound by the textual provisions of the law? The Constitution of the United States, may it please your honor, which happily still governs this country in despite of the force and fraud that have been employed to overthrow it, says that the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, except when, in case of invasion or rebellion, the public safety may require it. It does not now. The habeas corpus is in existence. The Congress of the United States, the supreme legislative power of the country in everything delegated to it by the United States, has provided in what manner the courts of the country shall proceed under the writs of habeas corpus. They have laid down the duty of the judiciary in express terms; in terms so perfectly unambiguous that it is impossible that there should be any mistake about it. Then, when a prisoner is held in custody under any authority of the United States, you could not and would not, and no judge of the United States could, issue a writ of habeas corpus for one who is in the custody of a State court, that State court having jurisdiction first. But as the law here says that whenever the person is in custody by the authority, or any authority exercised within the United States, the writ shall be directed to any person having him in charge. That person shall make return, and at the same time he shall produce the body of the prisoner in court. When Chief Justice Taney, presiding in the circuit court of Baltimore during the rebellion, issued a habeas corpus for Merriman, which case is perfectly familiar to your honor, he required the party to be brought into court, and because the major-general commanding Fort McHenry had not so brought him into court he ordered the marshal of the United States to bring up that major-general for a contempt. I allude to this to show what the opinion of the Chief Justice was with regard to his duties as a judicial magistrate acting under the law of habeas corpus; but "in war laws are silent," as the Latin poet said.

The COURT. It is only when they clash, however, that the laws are silent.

Mr. DURANT. Inter arma silent leges.

Judge FISHER. We understand that better.

Mr. DURANT. It was only translated for the benefit of the country members. [Laughter.]

That the prisoner should be in court. By what authority was the prisoner then confined. He was in the custody of the military authorities of the United States, who charged him with treasonable practices, being then a lieutenant in command of a company in arms against the United States, and in aid of the rebellion. He was in charge, as the gentleman on the other side very emphatically says, with regard to this case—in charge of a co-ordinate branch of the Government, the executive power of the United States, then carrying on war for the preservation of the life of the Union. The prisoner was then, may it please your honor, in custody, of what my learned friend has very emphatically said, in speaking of this case, was a co-ordinate branch of the United States.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I did not use the word "co-ordinate."

Mr. DURANT. What word did you use?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. A good many; but not that one.

Mr. DURANT. If you interrupt me for the purpose of correcting me, which I am very thankful for, I am gratified; but if you do not interrupt me for the purpose of correcting me, it is a work of supererogation.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. It is a co-ordinate branch, and therefore I did not apply that term to the House.

Mr. DURANT. The gentleman does not suggest to me the word that he did employ, and therefore I have to employ the word that suggests itself to my own moderate understanding.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I used the expression "House of Representatives," if the gentleman is anxious to know what expression I did use.

Mr. DURANT. I am exceedingly anxious.

The COURT. That is a branch of a co-ordinate branch.

Mr. DURANT. A branch of a co-ordinate branch of the Government, and so was Merriman. He was in the charge of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and the chief of the civil executive power of the United States by one of his immediate subordinate agents. Now, that was brought fully to the knowledge of Chief Justice Taney by the return, as will be seen in the volume of these reports. Did he say at once, "I need not have this prisoner before me!" By no means; he ordered his marshal to arrest the major-general and bring him before him to answer for a contempt. The marshal answered that he had gone to the gates of the fortress, and had politely sent in his card, which was returned with the direction that there was no answer. Well, as a matter of course, the Chief Justice, sitting in the circuit court, could not enforce obedience to his commands against the armies of the United States, and therefore he had to go on without the presence of the prisoner.

Now, we come to this conclusion, that by the British precedents, where the prerogatives and privileges of Parliament are, I might say, almost infinitely higher than those of the two branches of our Legislature, the sergeant-at-arms of the House of Commons has invariably produced the prisoner upon the requisition and proper order of the court.

I have further shown that there is no decision of the United States court, or of any court, which is against that view being taken in this country. I have shown that such is the positive direction of the statute law of the United States that any person, without exception, having a prisoner in charge, shall produce his body with his return to the writ. I have shown that such is the interpretation given in the case alluded to by the Chief Justice of the United States sitting on the circuit. Now, may it please your honor——

The COURT. That statute was not in existence at that time, was it?

Mr. DURANT. At what time?

The COURT. At the time of the habeas corpus case that you refer to.

[Mr. Durant gave the year, but it was not heard by the reporter.]

The COURT. That must have been after that case some years.

Mr. DURANT. It does not in the slightest degree militate from the view I have the honor to present. It was the view of the Chief Justice, independent of the positive statute regulation and as a matter of correct practice, according to all the precedents under the law of habeas corpus, that the body of the prisoner must be produced, and, in addition to that, the statute law of the United States requires it.

The COURT. The Chief Justice in that case, I believe, refused to go further with the case when it was found that the body was not produced; he stopped all further proceedings.

Mr. DURANT. No, sir; I believe he went on and gave his opinion that the prisoner ought to be discharged from illegal custody.

The COURT. My recollection is that he wrote an opinion in the shape of a protest.

Mr. DURANT. Your honor may be more correct. I did not examine that branch of the case.

The COURT. He did not proceed any further with the case.

Mr. DURANT. It was only necessary for my purpose to see what proceedings were had, and what view was taken of the rights at that time of the party having the prisoner in custody, and power of the court over him, by the Chief Justice in that instance.
